King of Cups	“Though anxious concerning several matters, he (the Enquirer) is beginning to succeed better by this line of action.
Two of Wands
Magician	“which seems to be quite the best. But the older woman (who previously made mischief and was represented by the Queen of Cups in the first operation) who is artful and a gossip …
Queen of Wands
Universe—Tower	“… again injures the matter because she wishes to get an influence over the Enquirer herself.”
Two of Wands

Pairing the cards, the diviner proceeds:

Two of Wands	“Her influence cunningly exercised, brings about a complete disruption of the whole matter.
Tower
Universe	“The entire matter becomes invested with trickery and glamour …
Magician
Queen of Wands	“… as she herself pays him a good deal of attention and sympathy,
King of Cups
Two of Pentacles	“which furthers her plans by bringing about a friendship between them.”

FOURTH OPERATION:

The Further Development of the Question

As before the enquirer is instructed to shuffle the pack and place it on the table but not to cut it.

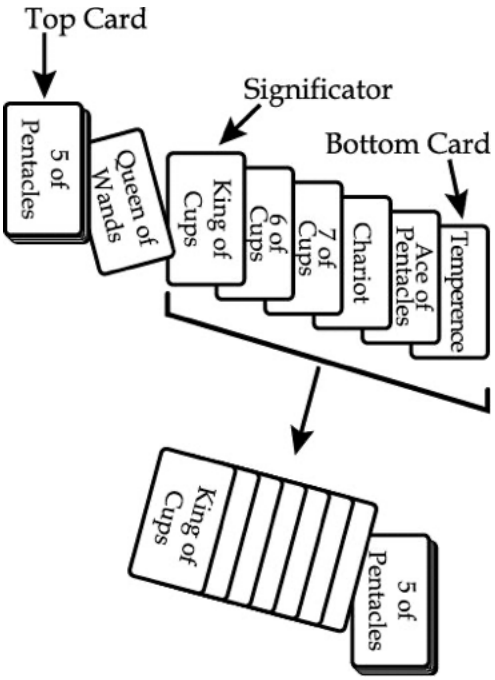
The diviner takes the pack, turns it face upwards, and goes through it, being careful not to disarrange the order of the cards, till he finds the significator; at this point he cuts the pack, that is to say, he takes the significator and the cards which had been beneath it and places them on the top of the remainder, turning the whole face downwards again, ready for dealing out.[9]

The consequence of this operation is that the significator becomes the top card in the pack (bottom, really; face on table.) The diviner takes off the significator, places it face upwards on the middle of the table and then the following thirty-six decanates—thirty-six cards—out in the form of a circle round it, face upwards, answering to the thirty-six decanates of the zodiac, and showing the further development of the question. These are dealt round in the order and direction of dealing as the twelve packets in the two previous operations.

The reading proceeds by the same law of counting, but instead of counting from the significator itself, it begins from the first card of the thirty-six, and always goes in the direction of dealing. The suit which is in the majority and the circumstances of either three or four cards of a sort being found in the thirty-six decanates are also noted. When the reading by counting is finished the cards are paired together: first and thirty-sixth; second and thirty-fifth; third and thirty-fourth; and so on, placed in order successively upon the significator. I now continue the example before commenced:

Example

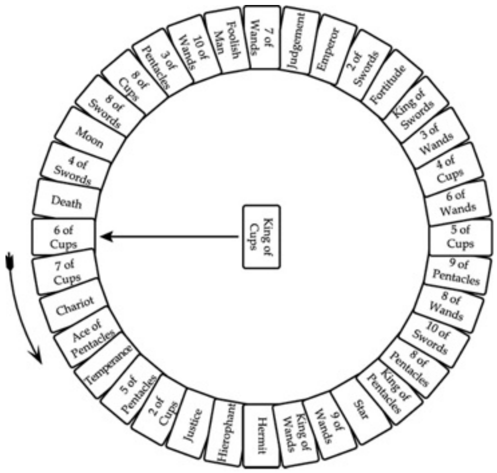
We will suppose the enquirer to have shuffled the pack, and that the diviner takes it in his hands, and in turning it up finds the bottom card to be Temperance. On going through it he comes to the significator, thus:



Top Card
Significator
Bottom Card
5 of Pentacles
Queen of Wands
King of Cups
6 of Cups
7 of Cups
Chariot
Ace of Pentacles
Temperence
King of Cups
5 of Pentacles

Fourth Operation—Cutting the Cards

He therefore takes the cards from King of Cups to Temperance included and places them above [10] the Five of Pentacles, being careful not to disturb their relative order. This has really the effect of cutting the pack between the Queen of Wands and the King of Cups and of course when he again turns them face downwards ready for dealing, the King of Cups will necessarily be the top card and the Queen of Wands the bottom card; Temperance being immediately above the Five of Pentacles, the former top card. The diviner takes the top card, the significator, and places it face upwards in the centre, and then deals round in succession thirty-six cards, face upwards in the order shown in the diagram on page 730.



7 of Wands
Judgement
Emperor
2 of Swords
Fortitude
King of Swords
3 of Wands
4 of Cups
6 of Wands
5 of Cups

8 of Wands
10 of Swords
8 of Pentacles
King of Pentacles
Star
9 of Wands
King of Wands
Hermit
Hierophant
Justice
2 of Cups
5 of Pentacles
Temperance
Ace of Pentacles
Chariot
7 of Cups
6 of Cups
Death
4 of Swords
Moon
8 of Swords
8 of Cups
3 of Pentacles
10 of Wands
Foolish Man
King of Cups

Fourth Operation—Example

Let us suppose them to be thus arranged. The reading always proceeds in the same direction as the dealing in this form of operation, commencing the counting from the first card dealt.

We here find twelve out of the twenty-two keys; Seven of Wands; Seven of Cups; Five of Swords; Six of Pentacles; total thirty-seven including significator. The preponderance of the keys represent "influences beyond the control of the enquirer." There are four Princes (Kings)—"meetings with influential persons," and four Eights, "much news and correspondence."

The counting proceeds as follows from the first card dealt. King of Cups—Six of Cups—Five of Pentacles—Hermit—Four of Cups—Fortitude—Four of Swords—Seven of Cups—Justice—Five of Cups—King of Swords—Emperor—Six of Cups again.

King of Cups	“The enquirer’s love of pleasure-going,
Six of Cups
Five of Pentacles	“brings about loss of money and business,
Hermit	“and he is forced to be more prudent,
Four of Cups	“and not go into the society of others too much, which has already brought him anxiety” (shown by Four of Cups between two wands, contrary element weakening effect of this card).
Fortitude	“He works more closely,
Four of Swords	“and begins to get better.
Seven of Cups	“Yet he has not sufficient energy in his nature to stick to work for long.
Justice	“The retributive effect of this is …
Five of Cups	“… That he loses his friends.
King of Wands	“And his former rival who, though rather a vain man, is energetic and hard working …
Emperor	“… replaces him in popularity and esteem.”
Six of Cups

Pairing them now, the diviner proceeds:

King of Cups	“The enquirer loses pleasure in consequence
Death
Six of Cups
Four of Swords	“and becomes less energetic even than before, and more anxious for pleasure-going than ever,
Seven of Cups
Moon	“yielding to the temptation of idleness and vanity by means of fraud.
Chariot
Eight of Swords	“He embezzles the money of his employer, and sees prison staring him in the face.
Ace of Pentacles
Eight of Cups	“The result of this is the loss of good name …
Temperance
Three of Pentacles	“… and of his situation of trust.
Five of Pentacles
Ten of Wands	“His former friends and admirers turn a cold shoulder to him.
Two of Cups
Foolish Man	“And the result of his folly is that he is arrested and brought before a court of law.
Justice
Seven of Wands	“The decision is adverse …
Hierophant
Judgment	“… and judgment very justly given against him.
Hermit

Emperor	“But his employer, though stern, is a kind-hearted man, and …
King of Wands
Two of Swords	“… offers to take him back and overlook the past …
Nine of Wands
Star	“… as he hopes this will have proved a lesson to him,
Fortitude
King of Swords	“and points out to him that his former rival,
King of Pentacles
Three of Wands	“though perhaps vain, was yet a hard-working and good man of business.
Eight of Pentacles
Four of Cups	“The enquirer in consequence of this determines to completely give up his former mode of life which had brought him to the brink of ruin, and becomes a steady man.
Ten of Swords
Eight of Wands	“After this he suddenly receives a hasty message which gives him much pleasure,
Six of Wands
Five of Cups	“stating that owing to the loss of a relative he is the inheritor of a legacy.”
Nine of Pentacles

This concludes the fourth operation.

It is always necessary for the diviner to employ his intuition in reading, and sometimes he may have to clairvoyantly “go through” a card of doubtful signification. Thus in the reading just given it is only the circumstance of the Moon, Chariot, Eight of Swords, Ace of Pentacles being followed by other conformative cards which justifies such an evil meaning of them.

FIFTH OPERATION:
Conclusion of the Matter

The cards are to be again carefully shuffled by the enquirer but not cut. The diviner then takes the pack, and deals it card by card in rotation into ten answering to the Tree of Life. This refers to the rule of the ten Sephiroth in the celestial heavens. This being done, the diviner selects the packet containing the significator for reading, noting carefully under which Sephirah it falls, and taking this as a general indication in the matter. This packet is then spread out in a horseshoe form, and read in the usual way, counting from the significator and this time in the direction in which the face of the figure looks. The cards are finally paired together as in the previous operation. This completes the mode of divination called “the Opening of the Key.” I now give the conclusion of the example.

Example (Cont.)

We will suppose that the cards have been shuffled and dealt in the following manner into ten packets answering to the Sephiroth in the Tree of Life:

כ
1, 11, 21, 31,
41, 51, 61, 71
ח
2, 12, 22, 32,
42, 52, 62, 72
ב
3, 13, 23, 33,
43, 53, 63, 73

5, 15, 25, 35,
45, 55, 65, 75
ת
6, 16, 26, 36,
46, 56, 66, 76
7, 17, 27, 37,

8, 18, 28, 38,
48, 58, 68, 78

9, 19, 29, 39,
49, 59, 69
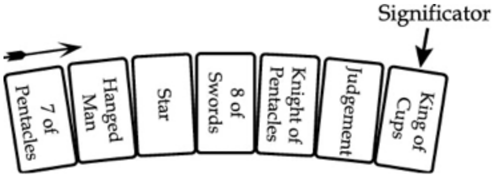
מ
10, 20, 30, 40,
50, 60, 70

Fifth Operation—Tree of Life

The packet containing the significator falls under Binah, containing the third, thirteenth, twenty-third, thirty-third, fourty-third, fifty-third, sixty-third, and seventy-third cards dealt. This is an argument of sadness and trial. The cards are spread as follows:



Significator
7 of Pentacles
Hanged Man
Star
8 of Swords
Knight of Pentacles
Judgement
King of Cups

Fifth Operation—Example

The counting proceeds as follows: King of Cups—Star—Judgment—King of Cups again. Evil cards are in the majority, another argument of loss and trouble.

King of Cups	“He has hopes of thus re-establishing his fortunes and that a favourable result will ensue for him.”
Star
Judgment

The diviner then pairs them thus:

King of Cups	“He plunges therefore into speculation by which he loses heavily. (Seven of Pentacles is near Hanged Man).
Seven of Pentacles
Knave of Cups	“And his love affair comes to nothing.
Hanged Man
Star	“All his expectations are disappointed …
Judgment
Knight of Pentacles	“… and his life for a time is arduous, petty, and uninteresting.”
Eight of Swords

(The coming of trouble is here shown by the Knight of Pentacles looking against the direction of the reading. If it were turned the other way it would show that his troubles were quitting him and that matters would improve.) This completes the operation, and shows the general development and result of the question.

Tabulated Rules

1. Shuffling, Cutting, Dealing, and Examining.

In shuffling, the mind of the enquirer should be earnestly fixed on the matter concerning which he desires information. If any cards fall in the process, they should be taken up without being noticed and the shuffling resumed. The shuffling being concluded and the pack placed upon the table, if any cards fall to the ground or become turned in a different direction, the shuffling should be done again.

A cut should be clean and decided. If any cards fall from the hand in the performance, the operation of shuffling should be repeated before they are again cut. In dealing, care should be taken not to invert the cards, and their relative order should be strictly observed. In examining a pack of cards, their relative order should be rigidly maintained, as without care in this respect, one may be easily pushed under or over another, which would of course have the effect of completely altering the counting in the reading.

2. Of the Selection of the Significator, and of the Complexion Assigned to the Court Cards.

Wands generally—fair and red-haired person.
Cups generally—moderately fair.
Swords generally—moderately dark.
Pentacles generally—very dark.
Kings—Men.
Queens—Women.
Princes—Young Men.
Princesses (Knaves)—Young women.

Therefore the significators are to be thus selected. For example, a dark complexioned middle-aged man, King of Pentacles. A fair young woman, Princess (Knave) of Cups, etc.

In the actual reading of the cards, these descriptions can be modified by those which are on either side of them, thus: the Queen of Cups, which indicates a fair woman with golden brown hair, if between cards of the suits of swords and pentacles, would show a woman with rather dark brown hair and dark eyes. As before stated, the Princes and Queens almost invariably represent actual men and women connected with the subject in hand. But the Kings sometimes represent either the coming on or going off of a matter; arrival, or departure, according to the way in which they face. While the Princesses (Knaves) show opinions, thoughts, or ideas, either in harmony with or opposed to the subject.

3. Of the General Signification of the Majority of a Particular Suit and of the Particular Signification of Either Three or Four Cards of a Sort in a Reading:

A majority of wands—energy, quarrelling, opposition.

A majority of cups—pleasure and merriment.

A majority of swords—trouble and sadness, sometimes sickness and even death.

A majority of pentacles—business, money, possessions, etc.

A majority of keys—forces of considerable strength, but beyond the enquirer's control.

A majority of court cards—society, meeting with many persons.

A majority of Aces—strength generally; the Aces are always strong cards.

Four Aces—great power and force.

Three Aces—riches and success.

Four Kings—great swiftness and rapidity.

Three Kings—unexpected meetings.

Kings generally—show news.

Four Queens generally—authority and influence.

Three Queens generally—powerful and influential friends.

Four Princes or Knights—meetings with the great.

Three Princes or Knights—rank and honour.

Four Princesses (Knaves)—new ideas and plans.

Three Princesses (Knaves)—society of the young.

Four Tens generally—anxiety and responsibility.

Three Tens generally—buying, selling, commercial transactions.

Four Nines generally—added responsibility.

Three Nines generally—much correspondence.

Four Eights generally—much news.

Three Eights generally—much journeying.

Four Sevens generally—disappointments.

Three Sevens generally—treaties and compacts.

Four Sixes generally—pleasure.

Three Sixes generally—gain and success.

Four Fives generally—order, regularity.

Three Fives generally—quarrels, fights.

Four Fours generally—rest and peace.

Three Fours generally—industry.

Four Threes generally—resolution and determination.

Three Threes generally—deceit.

Four Deuces generally—conference and conversations.

Three Deuces generally—reorganization and recommencement of a thing.

The keys are not noticed as above, by threes and fours.

4. Extra and Brief Meaning of the Thirty-six Smaller Cards.

WANDS

Deuce—Influence over another. Dominion.

Three—Pride and arrogance. Power sometimes.

Four—Settlement. Arrangement completed.

Five—Quarrelling. Fighting.

Six—Gain and success.

Seven—Opposition; sometimes courage therewith.

Eight—A hasty communication, letter or message. Swiftness.

Nine—Strength. Power. Health. Energy.

Ten—Cruelty and malice towards others. Overbearing strength. Revenge. Injustice.

CUPS

Deuce—Marriage, love, pleasure. Warm friendship.

Three—Plenty. Hospitality, eating, drinking. Pleasure, dancing, new clothes, and merriment.

Four—Receiving pleasures or kindness from others, yet some discomfort therewith.

Five—Disappointment in love. Marriage broken off, etc. Unkindness from friends. (Whether deserved or not is shown by the cards with it, or counting from or to it.) Loss of friendship.

Six—Wish, happiness, success, enjoyment.

Seven—Lying, deceit, promises unfulfilled, illusion, deception. Error, slight success, but not enough energy to retain it.

Eight—Success abandoned, decline of interest in a thing. Ennui.

Nine—Complete success. Pleasure and happiness. Wishes fulfilled.

Ten—Matters definitely arranged and settled in accordance with one's wishes. Complete good-fortune.

SWORDS

Deuce—Quarrel made up, and arranged. Peace restored, yet some tension in relations.

Three—Unhappiness, sorrow, tears.

Four—Convalescence, recovery from sickness, change for the better.

Five—Defeat, loss, malice. Slander, evil-speaking.

Six—Labour, work; journey, probably by water. (Shown by cards nearby.)

Seven—In character untrustworthy, vacillation. Journey probably by land (shown by cards near, etc.).

Eight—Narrow or restricted. Petty. A prison.

Nine—Illness. Suffering. Malice. Cruelty. Pain.

Ten—Ruin. Death. Failure. Disaster.

PENTACLES

Deuce—Pleasant change. Visit to friends, etc.

Three—Business, paid employment. Commercial transactions.

Four—Gain of money and influence. A present.

Five—Loss of profession. Loss of money. Monetary anxiety.

Six—Success in material things; prosperity in business.

Seven—Unprofitable speculations, employments; also honorary work undertaken or the love of it, and without desire of reward.

Eight—Skill, prudence; also artfulness, and cunning. (Depends on cards with it.)

Nine—Inheritance. Much increase of money.

Ten—Riches and wealth.

5. Brief Meanings of the Twenty-two Keys.

0. Foolish Man. Idea, thought, spirituality, that which endeavours to rise above the material. (That is, if the subject which is enquired about be spiritual.) But if the divination be regarding a material event of ordinary life, this card is not good, and shows folly, stupidity, eccentricity, and even mania, unless with very good cards indeed. It is too ideal and unstable to be generally good in material things.

1. Magician or Juggler. Skill, wisdom, adaptation. Craft, cunning, etc., always depending on its dignity. Sometimes occult wisdom.

2. High Priestess. Change, alteration, increase and decrease. Fluctuation (whether for good or evil is again shown by cards connected with it.) Compare with Death and Moon.

3. Empress. Beauty, happiness, pleasure, success, also luxury and sometimes dissipation, but only if with very evil cards.

4. Emperor. War, conquest, victory, strife, ambition.

5. Hierophant. Divine wisdom. Manifestation. Explanation. Teaching. Differing from, though resembling in some respects, the meaning of the Magician, the Prophet, and the Lovers. Occult wisdom.

6. The Lovers. Inspiration (passive and in some cases mediumistic, thus differing from that of the Hierophant and Magician and Prophet). Motive, power, and action, arising from inspiration and impulse.

7. The Chariot. Triumph. Victory. Health. Success, though sometimes not stable and enduring.

8. Justice. Eternal justice and balance. Strength and force, but arrested as in the act of judgment. Compare with (11) Fortitude. Also, in combination with other cards, legal proceedings, a court of law, a trial at law, etc.

9. The Hermit, or Prophet. Wisdom sought for and obtained from above. Divine inspiration (but active as opposed to that of the Lovers). In the mystical titles, this with the Hierophant and the Magician are the Three Magi.

10. Wheel of Fortune. Good fortune and happiness (within bounds), but sometimes also a species of intoxication with success, if the cards near it bear this out.

11. Fortitude. (At one time (8) Justice and (11) Fortitude were transposed.) Courage, strength, fortitude. Power not arrested as in the act of judgment, but passing on to further action, sometimes obstinacy, etc. Compare with (8) Justice.

12. Hanged Man or Drowned Man. Enforced sacrifice. Punishment, Loss. Fatal and not voluntary. Suffering generally.

13. Death. Time. Ages. Transformation. Change involuntary as opposed to the Moon, XIX. Sometimes death and destruction, but rarely the latter, and the former only if it is borne out by the cards with it. Compare also with High Priestess.

14. Temperance. Combination of forces. Realization. Action (material). Effect either for good or evil.

15. Devil. Materiality. Material force. Material temptation; sometimes obsession, especially if associated with the Lovers.

16. Tower. Ambition, fighting, war, courage. Compare with Emperor. In certain combinations, destruction, danger, fall, ruin.

17. Star. Hope, faith, unexpected help. But sometimes also dreaminess, deceived hope, etc.

18. Moon. Dissatisfaction, voluntary change (as opposed to (13) Death). Error, lying, falsity, deception. (The whole according whether the card is well or ill-dignified, and on which it much depends.)

19. Sun. Glory, gain, riches. Sometimes also arrogance. Display, vanity, but only when with very evil cards.

20. Judgment. Final decision. Judgment. Sentence. Determination of a matter without appeal on its plane.

21. Universe. The matter itself. Synthesis. World. Kingdom. Usually denotes the actual subject of the question, and therefore depends entirely on the accompanying cards.

6. On the Signification of the Cards.

A card is strong or weak, well-dignified or ill-dignified, according to the cards which are next to it on either side. Cards of the same suit on either side strengthen it greatly either for good or evil, according to their nature. Cards of the suits answering to its contrary element, on either side, weaken it greatly for good or evil. Air and earth are contraries as also are fire and water. Air is friendly with water and fire, and fire with air and earth.

If a card of the suit of wands falls between a cup and a sword, the sword modifies and connects the wand with the cup, so that it is not weakened by its vicinity, but is modified by the influence of both cards; therefore fairly strong. But if a card passes between two which are naturally contrary, it is not affected by either much, as a wand between a sword and a pentacle which latter, being air and earth, are contrary and therefore weaken each other.

Here the question being of the wand, this card is not to be noticed as forming a link between the sword and pentacle.

A Few Examples Given by S.R.M.D.

9 10 5 Sw. Sw. Sw.	Very strong and potent in action. Very evil.
10 10 2 W. Sw. W.	Not quite so strong. Ruin checked and perhaps overcome.
6 10 10 C. Sw. C.	Rather good than otherwise. It is bounty overcoming loss, like a piquant sauce which adds to pleasure.
9 10 10 P. Sw. C.	Very weak, evil, slight loss in material things, but more anxiety than actual loss.
5 2 9 Sw. W. Sw.	Moderately strong. Rashness which brings evil in its train. Evil.
9 2 6 P. W. P.	Fairly strong. Good. Considerable gain and victory.
10 2 6 C. W. C.	Weak, evil. Victory which is perverted by debauchery and evil living. But other cards may mitigate the judgment.
9 10 5 Sw. C. Sw.	Medium strong. Evil. Sorrow arising from pleasure and through one's own pleasures.
9 10 6 P. C. P.	Perfect success and happiness.
10 10 5 W. C. Sw.	Rather evil. Pleasure that when obtained is not worth the trouble one has had in obtaining it.
10 6 9 Sw. C. P.	Fairly strong and good. The Sw. and P. being opposite elements counteract each other. Therefore is it as if they were not there.
10 6 10 Sw. C. W.	Fairly good. Some trouble, but trouble which is overcome. If Six of Cups were a bad card the evil would carry the day.
9 Death 3 Sw. Sw.	Death accompanied by much pain and misery.
9 9 High W. Sw. Priestess	Recovery from sickness.

6 Q. King Sw. W. P.	An active woman, courageous and reliable with dark chestnut hair, and open fearless expression.
7 King 5 C. C. Sw.	A rather fair man but very deceitful and malicious.

7. On Pairing the Cards Together in Reading.

On pairing the cards each is to be taken as of equal force with the other. If of opposite elements they mutually weaken each other. If at the end of the pairing of the cards in a packet, one card remains over, it signifies the partial result of that particular part of the divination only. If an evil card and the others good, it would modify the good.

If it be the significator of the enquirer, or of another person, it would show that matters would much depend on the line of action taken by the person represented. The reason of this importance of the single card is that it is alone, and not modified. If two cards are at the end instead of a single one, they are not of so much importance.

8. On the Exercise of Clairvoyance and Intuition.

The diviner should, in describing any person from a significator in the actual reading, endeavour, by clairvoyance and using the card in question as a symbol, to see the person implied using the rules to aid, and restrict, his vision. In describing an event from the cards in the reading, he should employ his intuition in the same manner. Personal descriptions are modified by the cards next them; e.g., the Knave of Wands represents usually a very fair girl, but if between cards of the suit of pentacles, she might be even quite dark, though the wands would still give a certain brightness to hair, eyes, and complexion.

9. On Counting in the Reading.

In all cases of counting from the card last touched, the card itself is one, that next it is two, and so on.

From every Ace—five is counted.
From every Princess (Knave)—seven is counted.
From every other court card—four is counted.
From every small card—the number of its pips.
From every key answering to an element—three is counted.
From every key answering to a sign—twelve is counted.
From every key answering to a planet—nine is counted.

3. Note by JMG: In the original documents, a special form of the crux ansata related to the tarot was included here. See color insert page 15.

4. Note by Regardie: The Hebrew spellings of these angelic names are provided in Book One, with the preliminary knowledge material.

5. Note by JMG: Marplot, a character in Susannah Centlivre's 1709 play The Busy Body, became a proverbial figure in nineteenth-century English writing.

6. Note by Regardie: A formula which may be found useful to assist concentration, and to formulate a link between the diviner and the intelligences referred to in the tarot, is to take the pack in the left hand, and with the right hand hold the wand or any lesser instrument. Then say: "In the divine name I.A.O., I invoke thee thou great angel HRU who art set over the operations of this secret wisdom. Lay thine hand invisibly on these consecrated cards of art, that thereby I may obtain true knowledge of hidden things, to the glory of the ineffable name. Amen."

7. Note by Regardie: If the matter be important, he should wait twelve hours before reshuffling.

8. Note by JMG: Note that in the rest of the example, despite what this paragraph says, the King of Cups rather than the Prince is treated as the significator.

9. Note by S.A., that is, William Wynn Westcott: Very careful here.

Unofficial: THE TAROT TRUMPS

By G.H. Soror, Q.L.[11]

The cards of the Lesser Arcana present to us the vibrations of number, colour, and element—that is, the plane on which number and colour function. Thus, in the Ten of Pentacles we have the number ten and tertiary colours—citrine, olive, and russet—working in Malkuth, the material plane. Whereas in the Ten of Wands we have the number ten and the tertiaries working in pure energy. In these cards, the Sephirah is indicated by the colouring of the clouds; the plane by the colouring of the symbols.

The four honours of each suit taken in their most abstract sense may be interpreted as:

Potential power	the King
Brooding power	the Queen
Power in action	the Prince
Reception and transmission	the Princess

All these cards are coloured according to their elements plus the Sephirah to which they are attributed. With the Greater Arcana, the Trumps, however, we are given the keys to divine manifestation, each one an individual force to be considered independently. It must never be forgotten that the Trumps are, intrinsically, glyphs of cosmic, not human, forces.

0. The Foolish Man. This card as usually presented shows a man in motley striding along, heedless of the dog which tears his garments and threatens to attack him. In this is seen only the lower aspect of the card, giving no hint to the divine folly of which St. Paul speaks. But in the Order pack, an effort is made to reveal the deeper meaning. A naked child stands beneath a rose tree bearing yellow roses—the golden rose of joy as well as the rose of silence. While reaching up to the roses, he yet holds in leash a grey wolf, worldly wisdom held in check by perfect innocence. The colours are pale yellow, pale blue, greenish yellow—suggestive of the early dawn of a spring day.

I. The Magician. It represents the union and balance of the elemental powers controlled by mind. The adept dedicating the minor implements on the altar. The paths of Beth and Mercury link Kether the Crown with Binah, the Aimah Elohim. The Magician, therefore, is reflected in the intellect which stores and gathers up knowledge and pours it into the House of Life, Binah. The number of the path, twelve, suggests the synthesis of the zodiac, as Mercury is the synthesis of the planets. The colours yellow, violet, grey, and indigo, point to the mysterious astral light surrounding the great adept. It is a card linked with the name Tahuti and Hermes as the previous one is with Krishna and Harparkrat or Dionysius.

II. The High Priestess. The High Priestess rules the long path uniting Kether to Tiphareth, crossing the reciprocal paths of Venus and Leo. She is the great feminine force controlling the very source of life, gathering into herself all the energizing forces and holding them in solution until the time of release. Her colours—pale blue, deepening into sky blue, silvery white, and silver, relieved by touches of orange and flame—carry out these ideas.

III. The Empress. She is an aspect of Isis; the creative and positive side of nature is suggested here. The Egyptian trilogy, Isis, Hathor, and Nephthys, symbolized by the crescent, full moon, and gibbous moon are represented in the tarot by the High Priestess, Hathor. The Empress, Isis, takes either the crescent moon or Venus as her symbol. Justice, Nephthys, takes the gibbous moon.

Isis and Venus gives the aspect of Love, while Hathor is rather the Mystic, the full moon reflecting the sun of Tiphareth while in Yesod, transmitting the rays of the sun in her path Gimel. In interpreting a practical tarot it is often admissible to regard the Empress as standing for occultism and the High Priestess for religion, the church as distinguished from the Order.

The Empress, whose letter is Daleth, is the door of the inner mysteries, as Venus is the door of the Vault. Her colours are emerald, sky-blue, blue-green, and cerise or rose-pink.

IV. The Emperor. Here we have the great energizing forces as indicated by the varying shades of red. It may be noted here that the red paths remain red in all planes, varying only in shade. Thus Aries, the Emperor, the pioneer, the general, is blood and deep crimson, red, pure vermillion, or flowing fiery red. He is Ho Nike, the conqueror, hot, passionate, impetuous, the apotheosis of Mars, whether in love or in war. He is the positive masculine as the Empress is the positive feminine.

V. Hierophant. The High Priest is the counterpart of the High Priestess. As Aries is the house of Mars and the exaltation of the sun, so Taurus is the house of Venus and the exaltation of the moon. He is the reflective or mystical aspect of the masculine. He is the thinker as the Emperor is the doer.

His colours, unlike those of the Emperor, vary considerably. Red, orange, maroon, deep brown, and chestnut brown, suggest veiled thought, interior power, endurance, contemplation, and reconciliation. This card frequently indicates the hidden guardianship of the Masters.

VI. The Lovers. The impact of inspiration on intuition, resulting in illumination and liberation—the sword striking off the fetters of habit and materialism, Perseus rescuing Andromeda from the dragon of fear and the waters of stagnation.[12]

The colours are orange, violet, purplish grey, and pearl grey. The flashing colour of orange gives deep vivid blue, while the flashing colour for violet is golden yellow. The flashing colours may always be introduced if they bring out the essential colour meaning more clearly. In practise this card usually signifies sympathetic understanding.

VII. The Chariot. Here we have a symbol of the spirit of man controlling the lower principles, soul and body, and thus passing triumphantly through the astral plane, rising above the clouds of illusion and penetrating to the higher spheres.

The colours amber, silver-grey, blue-grey, and the deep blue-violet of the night sky elucidate this symbol. It is the sublimation of the psyche.

VIII. Strength. This also represents the mastery of the lower by the higher. But in this case it is the soul which holds in check the passions, although her feet are still planted on earth, and the dark veil still floats about her head and clings around her. The colours—pale greenish yellow, black, yellowish grey, and reddish amber—suggest the steadfast endurance and fortitude required, but the deep red rose which is the flashing colour to the greenish yellow, gives the motive power.

IX. The Hermit. Prudence. These three trumps should be collated in studying them for they represent the three stages of initiation. The man wrapped in hood and mantle and carrying a lantern to illuminate the path and a staff to support his footsteps. He is the eternal seeker, the pilgrim soul. His hood and mantle are the brown of earth, and above him is the night sky. But the delicate yellow-greens and bluish greens of spring are about him, and spring is in his heart.

X. Wheel of Fortune. In the Etz Chayim, or the Tree of Life, the Wheel is placed on the Pillar of Mercy, where it forms the principal column linking Netzach to Chesed, victory to mercy. It is the revolution of experience and progress, the steps of the zodiac, the revolving staircase, held in place by the counterchanging influence of light and darkness, time and eternity—presided over by the Plutonian cynocephalus below, and the sphinx of Egypt above, the eternal riddle which can only be solved when we attain liberation. The basic colours of this Trump are blue, violet, deep purple, and blue irradiated by yellow. But the zodiacal spokes of the wheel should be in the colours of the spectrum, while the Ape is in those of Malkuth, and the Sphinx in the primary colours and black.

XI. Justice. Nephthys, the third aspect of Luna, the twin sister of Isis. Justice as distinguished from love. Her emblems are the sword and the scales. Like her sister, she is clothed in green, but in a sharper colder green than the pure emerald of Isis. Her subsidiary colours are blue, blue-green, pale green. It is only by utilizing the flashing colours that we can find the hidden warmth and steadfastness.

XII. The Hanged Man. An elusive, because a profoundly significant symbol. It is sacrifice—the submergence of the higher in the lower in order to sublimate the lower. It is the descent of the spirit into matter, the incarnation of God in man, the submission to the bonds of matter that the material may be transcended and transmuted. The colours are deep blue, white and black intermingled but not merged, olive, green, and greenish fawn.

XIII. Death. The sign of transmutation and disintegration. The skeleton, which alone survives the destructive power of time, may be regarded as the foundation upon which the structure is built, the type which persists through the permutations of time and space, adaptable to the requirements of evolution and yet radically unchanged; the transmuting power of nature working from below upwards, as the Hanged Man is the transmuting power of the spirit working from above downwards. The colours are blue-green, both dark and pale, the two dominant colours of the visible world, and the flashing colours of orange and red-orange.

XIV. Temperance. This is the equilibrium not of the balance of Libra but of the impetus of the arrow, Sagittarius, which cleaves its way through the air by the force imparted to it by the taut string of the bow. It requires the counterchanged forces of fire and water, Shin and Qoph, held by the restraining power of Saturn, and concentrated by the energies of Mars to initiate this impetus. All these are summed up in the symbolism of the figure standing between earth and water, holding the two amphorae with their streams of living water, and with the volcano in the background. The colours are bright-blue, blue-grey, slate-blue, and lilac-grey.

XV. The Devil. This card should be studied in conjunction with number thirteen. They are the two great controlling forces of the universe, the centrifugal and the centripetal, destructive and reproductive, dynamic and static. The lower nature of man fears and hates the transmuting process, hence the chains binding the lesser figures and the bestial forms of their lower limbs. Yet this very fear of change and disintegration is necessary to stabilize the life force and preserve continuity. The colours are indigo, livid brown, golden brown, and grey.

XVI. The Tower. As always red remains persistent throughout the four planes, although modified in tone. Thus we find vivid scarlet shading into deep sombre red and vermillion shot with amber. The contrasting shades of green serve to throw the red into relief. The tremendous destructive influence of the lightning, rending asunder established forms to make way for new forms to emerge, revolution as distinguished from transmutation or sublimation, the destructive as opposed to the conservative, energy attacking inertia, the impetuous ejection of those who would enclose themselves in the walls of ease and tradition.

XVII. The Star. This shows the seven-pointed star of Venus shining above the waters of Aquarius, the guiding force of love in all its forms and aspects, illuminating the soul during her immersion in humanity, so that the bonds of Saturn are dissolved in the purified waters of baptism. The dove of the Spirit hovers above the Tree of Knowledge giving the promise of ultimate attainment—and on the other side gleams of the Tree of Life.

Pale colours suggest dawn and the morning star—amethyst, pale grey, fawn, dove colour, and white, with the pale yellow of the star.

XVIII. The Moon. Here also is a river but it is the troubled waters of night, wherein is to be described a crayfish, counterpart of the scarabeus. From the water’s edge winds the dark path of toil, effort, and possible failure. It is guarded by the threatening watchdogs, seeking to intimidate the wayfarers, while in the distance the barren hills are surmounted by the frowning fortresses still further guarding the way to attainment. It is the path of blood and tears in which fear, weakness, and fluctuation must be overcome. The colours are dark crimson, reddish brown, brownish crimson, and plum colours, but their sombre hues are lightened by the translucent faint greens and yellows to be found in their counterparts.

XIX. The Sun. The watery paths of trial and probation are counterbalanced by the fiery paths of temptation, judgment, and decision. In violent contrast to the sombre colouring of Aquarius and Pisces, we are confronted by the flaring hues of the sun and fire. The too-aspiring Icarus may find his waxen wings of ambition and curiosity shrivelled and melted by the fiery rays of the sun and the heat of fire, but approached with humility and reverence, the sun becomes the beneficent source of life.

Protected by an enclosing wall, standing by the waters of repentance, the pilgrim may submit himself humbly but without fear to the searching light and absorb warmth and vitality from it for the struggle before him. The colours are clear-orange, golden-yellow, amber shot with red, and the contrasting blue and purple.

XX. The Last Judgment. The three trumps attributed to the elemental paths are perhaps the most difficult to understand. They represent the action of forces exterior to the experience of humanity, not the influence of environment but the impact of the supernals upon the sublunary.

In the air, we have pure spirit holding in leash the lust of the flesh. In water, the sublimating power of sacrifice. Here in fire, we are shown the cosmic forces concentrating on the pilgrim from all sides. Judgment is pronounced upon him. He is not the judge nor does decision rest in his hands. Lazarus cannot emerge from the sepulchre until the voice cries out, “Come forth!” Nor can he cast aside the conflicting grave-clothes until the command, “Loose him!” is given. Man of himself is helpless. The impulse to ascend must come from above, but by its power he may transcend the sepulchre of environment and cast aside the trammels of desire. Here once more, the fiery energy of red burns through the planes. Fiery scarlet, glowing crimson, burning red are emphasized by the passive greens.

XXI. The Universe. Observe that this represents not the world but the universe. It should be remembered that to the ancients, Saturn represented the confines of the solar system. They had no means of measuring either Uranus or Neptune. To them, therefore, Saturn passing through the spiral path of the zodiac, marked at its cardinal points by the symbols of the Kerubim forming the cross, was a comprehensive glyph of the whole.

Thus, in this card we find a synthesis of the whole Taro or Rota. The central figure should be taken as Hathor, Athor, or Ator, rather than Isis, thus indicating the hidden anagram which may perhaps be translated thus: ORAT—man prays. ATOR—to the Great Mother. TARO—who turns. ROTA—the wheel of life and death.

The colours like those of the Wheel of Fortune include the colours of the spectrum and those of the elements, but they are placed against the indigo and black of Saturn, with the white gleam of the stars shining in the darkness and the misty figure of the Aimah Elohim in the midst. In the practical tarot, this card is taken to signify the matter in hand, that is the subject of any question that has been asked.

Having now revised the twenty-two Atouts or Trumps in succession, it will be wise for the student to reverse the process and seek to follow the path of the pilgrim from below upwards, thus seeking to comprehend the interior process of initiation and illumination. It is a process in which the whole universe does not disdain to take part, for man is himself the microcosm of the macrocosm and the child of the gods. And again, the macrocosm must itself be undergoing a corresponding process in which the experience not only of humanity but of each individual must be an integral part. The fragments are gathered up into the baskets, that nothing may be lost; and from the feeding of the multitude there remains not less but more than the unbroken bread and fish—fit emblems of earth and water.

Cease not to seek day and night the purifying mysteries.[13]

[11]. Note by JMG: Soror Quaestor Lucis, that is, Harriet Felkin.

[12]. Note by Regardie: Incidentally note that this is the design of the Order card. Andromeda is shown manacled to a rock, the dragon rising from the waters at her feet. Perseus is depicted flying through the air to her assistance, with unsheathed sword. The design is wholly different from that of the Waite pack.

[13]. Note by Regardie: This paper on the Trumps is not an official document. It should be conceived rather in the nature of a so-called Side Lecture or Flying Roll. That is not to say that it is unimportant, or that there is little of interest therein. On the contrary, certain aspects of this interpretation are not without high significance. Moreover, it should be carefully studied as well as the preceding official tarot instructions in conjunction with the description of certain of the Trumps in the grade rituals of the First Order.

THE TREE OF LIFE AS PROJECTED IN A SOLID SPHERE

Note by S.R.M.D.

The planets' sphere which illustrates this manuscript, a part of the Z.A.M.'s Abstract of the Tarot, has been drawn by S.R.M.D. as instructed. It represents the heavens polarized on the plane of the ecliptic, not on the plane of the equator of our Earth, so that its north pole is the veritable north pole of our heavens and not merely that part of them to which the North Pole of our Earth now points.

Another very important difference is that, throughout the true tarot, the teaching assigns the commencing point of the zodiac to the bright star Regulus, which is in Leo. And it measures right ascension and longitude from that point, and not from a supposititious point divided by the equinox and called the 0° of Aries (though in reality now far removed from the constellation of that name), which has been adopted by modern or Western astronomy and astrology.

By this now usual way of reckoning, and the precession of the equinoxes, it has gradually come to pass that the signs (or divisions, each of 30°, of the zodiac) no longer coincide with the constellations of the same name, and each decade of years shows them slowly but surely receding.

But the tarot method of reckoning from the star named Regulus has, it will be seen, the effect of making the signs and the constellations coincide.

Regulus is also named Cor Leonis—"the Heart of the Lion." Regulus means "Star of the Prince." Regulus coincides with the position of the heart in the figure of Leo upon the star maps.

Note by Regardie: The principia or fundamental ideas of this astronomical view of the tarot may be found, at least in its essential form, in the astronomical writings of Claudius Ptolemy of Alexandria. Naturally, this reference only concerns the signs, constellations, and other astronomical divisions noted. The expansion of this scheme, and its allocation to other forms of universal symbolism, such as the tarot cards, Hebrew letters, and Enochian tablets, has its roots in the synthetic genius of the Golden Dawn. The idea of projecting the Tree of Life into a solid sphere, having application among other things to the starry heavens and the constellations, certainly is peculiar to this system alone. Most of the fundamentals inhering in the other aspects of the Golden Dawn teaching may be found in exoteric occult literature of past centuries. But, as again I must insist, the peculiar practical application of them as exemplified in the Golden Dawn routine can nowhere else be found, save, of course, in other authentic esoteric systems. The student is urged to study this whole section very thoroughly; it is well worth it. In the early days of the Order there was a special group which devoted its time and energies to the study and application of the principles involved herein. Incidentally, may I point out how much light this particular instruction throws on innumerable passages in Blavatsky's Secret Doctrine—especially in Volume II.

Tabular View of the Dominion of the Symbols of Book "T" in the Celestial Heavens, and of the Operation and Rule of the Tree of Life in the same as Projected on a Solid Sphere.

(Abridged Treatise arranged for the use of the Z.A.M.'s in Anglia by S.RM.D.)

The Zelator Adeptus Minor shall know that the great "King Star" or "Heart of the Lion," which is in Leo upon the path of the ecliptic and one of the "four Tiphareth points" (see later) of the celestial heavens, is the commencement and ruler of all our reckoning of longitude (or ecliptic). The path of the sun itself is the commencement of our reckoning of the latitude in the searching out of our hidden wisdom.

Also the dragon, the constellation Draco, surroundeth the pole Kether of our celestial heavens.

But the northern pole and Kether of the material planet (even of our Erthe, Earth) looketh constantly unto Binah, for as much as she is under sorrow and suffering. When, oh Lord of the Universe, shall she turn from her evil ways so that she shall again behold Kether? Wherefore she is now a place of trial. For each thing in this world of Assiah looketh towards that which is its natural governor, and to what part of the celestial heavens the Kether of a planet constantly looketh, by that part is that planet ruled. For in all things shine the Sephiroth even as hath been sufficiently said.

The Four Knaves (Princesses) rule the celestial heavens from the north pole of the zodiac to the 45° of latitude north of the ecliptic. They form the thrones of the Four Aces, who rule in Kether. The four Kings, four Queens, and four Princes rule the celestial heavens from the 45° of north latitude down to the ecliptic. The twelve tarot keys attributed to the twelve signs of the zodiac rule the celestial heavens from the ecliptic, down to the 45° of south latitude. The thirty-six smaller cards of the suits (from two to ten) rule the celestial heavens from the 45° south of the ecliptic to the south pole, or the Malkuth place therein. And all calculation arises from the star Regulus, the 0° of our Leo.

Symbols

These four revolve in Kether, their thrones are the central portion (of 45° of longitude in extent) in the dominions of the Knaves of their respective suits.

1. Ace of Wands
2. Ace of Cups
3. Ace of Swords
4. Ace of Pentacles

Star Groups corresponding to above

1. A part of the tail of Draco, forefeet of Ursa Major, tail of Ursa Major, and of the northern dog of Canes Venatici.

2. Head of Draco, body and legs of Hercules.

3. Body of Draco. Right arm of Cepheus, head and body of Lacerta. Body of Cygnus.

4. Body of Draco. Legs of Cepheus. Tail of Ursa Minor and the Pole Star. Legs of Cassiopeia. Head and neck of Camelopardus.

8. Princess (Knave) of Wands. Rules from north pole to 45° and from 0° of Cancer to 30° of Virgo, the end of Virgo. The throne of the Ace of Wands extends 45° from 22°30' of Cancer to 7°30' of Virgo within the limits of 45° latitude.

Star groups corresponding to above. Tail of Draco. Head and forepart of Ursa Minor, left arm and part of head and chest of Bootes. The greater part of the northernmost dog of Canes Venatici. Tail and back of Ursa Major, (its ancient Italian name was Septemtriones, the Seven Ploughing Oxen). This includes the celebrated seven stars of the constellation called “Charles’s Wain” by the English; “Seven Rishis” by the Hindus, and in the Egyptian Book of the Dead, Ch. XVII, “The seven bright ones who follow their lord, the thigh of the northern heaven.” [14]

12. Princess (Knave) of Cups. Rules from north pole to 45° of latitude and from 0° of Libra to 30° of Sagittarius in longitude. The throne of the Ace embraces from 22°30' of Libra to 7°30' of Sagittarius within the above limits of latitude.

Star Group. Head of Draco. Left arm, body, and legs of Hercules, part of head, right shoulder, and club of Bootes.

16. Princess (Knave) of Swords. Rules from north pole to 45° latitude and from 0° of Capricorn to 30° of Pisces longitude. The throne of the Ace extends from 22°30' of Capricorn to 7°30' of Pisces as before.

Star Group. Body of Draco, part of Lyra. Head, body, and right arm of Cepheus, the king and father of Andromeda, the whole of Cygnus, head and body of Lacerta, back and part of head of Vulpecula the Fox.

20. Princess (Knave) of Pentacles. Rules from north pole to 45° latitude, and from 0° of Aries to 30° of Gemini longitude. The throne of the Ace embraces from 22°30' of Aries to 7°30' of Gemini within the latitude as above.

Star Group. Body of Draco, legs and part of right arm, and sceptre of Cepheus, tail and hind quarters of Ursa Minor, with the pole star of our Earth, head and neck of Camelopardalis (giraffe), body and right arm, throne and legs of Cassiopeia, the queen of Cepheus and mother of Andromeda, head of Ursa Major.

7. Prince of Wands. Rules from ecliptic to 45° north latitude and from 20° Cancer to 20° Leo in longitude.

Star Group. Head, body, and tail of Leo, body and tail of Leo Minor, hind quarters and legs of Ursa Major, head and forequarters of southern dog of Canes Venatici.

17. King of Pentacles. Rules from ecliptic to 45° north latitude and from 20° of Leo to 20° of Virgo.

Star Group. Head and body of Virgo, left arm of Bootes, hair of Berenice. Body and hind quarters of southern dog of Canes Venatici, hind feet of northern dog of Canes Venatici.

14. Queen of Swords. Rules from ecliptic to 45° and from 20° of Virgo to 20° of Libra.

Star Group. Right leg of Virgo, body and right arm, and right leg of Bootes. Beam and part of scales of Libra.

11. Prince of Cups. Rules from ecliptic to 45° and from 20° of Libra to 20° of Scorpio.

Star Group. Part of scales of Libra, left claws of Scorpio, body and legs of Ophiuchus, the holder of the Serpent. Front half of Serpent's head, right arm and club of Hercules.

5. The King of Wands. Rules from ecliptic to 45° north latitude and from 20° of Scorpio to 20° of Sagittarius.

Star Group. Top of head and bow of Sagittarius, head and right arm of Ophiuchus, near half of Serpent.

18. Queen of Pentacles. Rules from ecliptic to 45° north latitude and from 20° of Sagittarius to 20° of Capricorn.

Star Group. Top of head, neck, and horns of Capricorn, left hand of Aquarius, the man who carries the water, the whole of Aquila, the eagle, the greater part of Delphinus, whole of Sagitta the arrow, forefeet and body of Vulpecula the fox, and the tail of the Cygnet which he seizes.

15. Prince of Swords. Rules from ecliptic to 45° north latitude, and from 20° of Capricorn to 20° of Aquarius.

Star Group. Tail of Capricornus, head and body of Aquarius, head and forelegs of Pegasus, the winged horse who sprang from the blood of Medusa, near the sources of the ocean, the whole of Equuleus, the lesser horse, part of head of Dolphin, tail and hind quarters of Vulpecula, part of wing of Cygnus, the swan, part of head of Pisces.

9. King of Cups. Rules from ecliptic to 45° of north latitude and from 20° of Aquarius to 20° of Pisces.

Star Group. Body and tail of one of the Pisces, and part of the band. Body and wings of Pegasus, head and arms of Andromeda, chained to the rock-tail of Lacerta.

6. Queen of Wands. Rules from ecliptic to 45° north latitude and from 20° of Pisces to 20° of Aries.

Star Group. The other fish and part of band of Pisces, head and back of Aries, body and legs of Andromeda, the Triangle, hand and left arm of Cassiopeia, the winged instep of Aries.

19. Prince of Pentacles. Rules from ecliptic to 45° north latitude and from 20° of Aries to 20° of Taurus.

Star Group. Tail of Aries, one horn and shoulder and back of Taurus, whole of Perseus, and the head of Medusa, hind quarters and legs of Camelopardalis, left leg of Auriga, the charioteer, and part of Capella, the she-goat which bears kids in her arms.

13. King of Swords. Rules from ecliptic to 45° north latitude from 20° of Taurus to 20° Gemini in longitude.

Star Group. Head and body of Castor, one of the Gemini, greater part of Auriga and Capella, head and forepart of Lynx, forefeet of Camelopardalis.

10. Queen of Cups. Rules from ecliptic to 45° north latitude, and from 20° Gemini to 20° of Cancer in longitude.

Star Group. Head and body of Pollux, the other of the Gemini; greater part of Cancer, the crab; face of Leo; head and face of Ursa Major.

The Following Twelve Keys Govern the Celestial Heavens from the Ecliptic to 45° of South Latitude

65. Fortitude. Rules the whole of Leo, from the point of Regulus or Cor Leonis.

Stars. The forelegs and hindfeet of Leo, greater part of the Sextans and of Crater, the cups, part of the body of Hydra, the great water serpent, greater part of Antlia Pneumatica, the air pump, greater part of Pyxis Nautica, a small part of the ship Argo.

66. Hermit or Prophet. Rules the whole of Virgo.

Stars. Left arm, hand, and arm of Virgo, and her ear of corn; part of the body of Hydra, Corvus the crow, part of Crater, tail and right hand of Centaurus, the man-horse, small part of Air-Pump and of Argo.

68. Justice. Rules the whole of Libra.

Stars. Part of the south scale of Libra, tail of Hydra, head, body, arms, and forefeet of Centaurus. Legs, body, and tail of Lupus, the wolf which he is killing. Right claw of Scorpio.

70. Death. Rules the whole of Scorpio.

Stars. Body and tail of Scorpio, head and neck of Lupus, whole of Ara—the Altar, two feet of Ophiuchus, point of arrow of Sagittarius, part of Norma, Mason's square.

71. Temperance. Rules the whole of Sagittarius.

Stars. The whole of Sagittarius, the archer, except right hind leg, the tail, the crown of the head, extreme points of bow and arrow, Corona Australis, Telescope, Pavo—the peacock.

72. The Devil. Rules the whole of Capricorn.

Stars. Whole lower half of Capricornus, the he-goat, part of Piscis Australis, the southern fish, Microscope, part of Grus the crane. Part of Indus.

74. The Star. Rules the whole of Aquarius.

Stars. Legs of Aquarius, and the issuant water head of Piscis Australis, part of Grus, part of Phoenix, part of Apparatus Sculptorum, part of Cetus.

75. The Moon. Rules the whole of Pisces.

Stars. The connecting band of Pisces, the body of Cetus, the sea monster to which Andromeda was exposed, part of Apparatus Sculptorum. Part of Phoenix, part of Fornax.

61. The Emperor. Rules the whole of Aries.

Stars. Legs of Aries, part of body of Taurus, head and forepart of Cetus, part of Fornax and of Eridanus.

62. The Hierophant. Rules the whole of Taurus.

Stars. Head and forepart of Taurus the bull. The bull sent by Neptune to frighten the horses of Sol and those of Hippolytus. The greater part of Orion the giant and hunter. The beginning of the river Eridanus into which Phaeton was hurled when attempting to drive the horses of the sun; greater part of Lepus, the Hare.

63. The Lovers. Rule the whole of Gemini.

Stars. Legs of Castor and Pollux, the Gemini, Canis Minor, a small part of Cancer. The whole of Monoceros, the unicorn, except the hindquarters. Head and forepart of Canis Major, the greater dog.

64. The Chariot. Rules the whole of Cancer up to Regulus in Leo.

Stars. One claw and part of the body of Cancer, forepaws of Leo, head and part of Hydra, part of Sextans, part of Pyxis Nautica, hind legs and tail of Monoceros, part of the mast, rigging, and prow of the ship Argo.

Note: The keys answering unto the seven lords who wander (planets) and the three spirits (the elements) are not assigned any fixed dominion. The following thirty-six small cards (Twos to Tens) rule the decans of the signs in the celestial heavens and their dominion extendeth from 45° south of the ecliptic unto Malkuth at the southern pole.

21	Five of Wands	0°–10° of ♌	♄	Part of Argo, part of Piscis Volans.
22	Six of Wands	10°–20° of ♌	♃	Part of Argo, part of Piscis Volans.
23	Seven of Wands	20°–30° of ♌	♂	Part of Argo, part of Piscis Volans.
24	Eight of Pentacles	0°–10° of ♍	☉	Part of Argo, part of Piscis Volans.
25	Nine of Pentacles	10°–20° of ♍	♀	Hind feet of Centaurus, part of Piscis Volans.
26	Ten of Pentacles	20°–30° of ♍	☿	Hind legs of Centaurus, part of Chameleon.
27	Two of Swords	0°–10° of ♎	☽	Hind legs of Centaurus, part of Crux, part of Musca and Chameleon.
28	Three of Swords	10°–20° of ♎	♄	Part of Crux, Musca, and Chameleon.
29	Four of Swords	20°–30° of ♎	♃	Part of Musca, Circinus, Compasses, and Chameleon.
30	Five of Cups	0°–10° of ♏	♂	Part of Circinus, Chameleon and of Triangulum Australe.
31	Six of Cups	10°–20° of ♏	☉	Part of Triangulum Australe, Apus the Swallow, and Octans.
32	Seven of Cups	20°–30° of ♏	♀	Part of Pavo, Apus, Octans.
33	Eight of Wands	0°–10° of ♐	☿	Part of Pavo, Apus, Octans.
34	Nine of Wands	10°–20° of ♐	☽	Part of Pavo, Apus, Octans.

35	Ten of Wands	20°–30° of ♐	♄	Part of Pavo, part of Hydra the water snake.
36	Two of Pentacles	0°–10° of ♑	♃	Part of Pavo, part of Hydra.
37	Three of Pentacles	10°–20° of ♑	♂	Part of Toucan, part of Hydra.
38	Four of Pentacles	20°–30° of ♑	☉	Part of Toucan, part of Phoenix.
39	Five of Swords	0°–10° of ♒	♀	Part of Phoenix, end of Eridanus.
40	Six of Swords	10°–20° of ♒	☿	Parts of Hydrus, Reticulum, and Rhombus.
41	Seven of Swords	20°–30° of ♒	☽	Parts of Phoenix, Hydra, Reticulum, and Eridanus.
42	Eight of Cups	0°–10° of ♓	♄	Parts of Phoenix, Eridanus, and Reticulum.
43	Nine of Cups	10°–20° of ♓	♃	Parts of Phoenix, Eridanus, and Reticulum.
44	Ten of Cups	20°–30° of ♓	♂	Parts of Phoenix, Dorado, and Reticulum.
45	Two of Wands	0°–10° of ♈	♂	Parts of Phoenix and Dorado.
46	Three of Wands	10°–20° of ♈	☉	Parts of Caelum Sculptoris and Dorado.
47	Four of Wands	20°–30° of ♈	♀	Part of Caelum Sculptoris (Engraver’s Burin).
48	Five of Pentacles	0°–10° of ♉	☿	Part Eridanus, Columba Noae, Dorado, Equuleus Pictoris.

49	Six of Pentacles	10°–20° of taur	☽	Forepart of Lepus, tail and wing of Columba, part of Equuleus.
50	Seven of Pentacles	20°–30° of taur	♄	Part Equuleus and Lepus, body of Columba.

Recapitulation

In the dominion of the various forces, the rule of each may be divided into three portions. The centre is the most pronounced in its accord with the nature of its ruler, and the two outer portions are tinged with the nature of the ruler of the dominion bordering thereon. For example, in the case of Leo, the dominion of Fortitude, the central ten degrees will have most of this nature. For the beginning ten degrees are tinged with the nature of Cancer, and the last ten degrees with the nature of Virgo, the nature of Leo however predominating the mixture.

The whole heavens, then, are thus divided into four great belts or zones:

The uppermost being the dominion of the Knaves like a cross within a circle.

The second belt under the dominion of the other court cards represents a belt of influence descending vertically.

The third belt under the dominion of the twelve keys related to the signs of the zodiac, represents a belt of influence acting horizontally. This zone in union with the second belt will therefore yield a great zone of twelve crosses encircling the heavens.

The fourth belt consists of thirty-six decans under the dominion of the thirty-six small cards of the four suits, the numbers two through ten of each suit. In each of these sets of three parts of a sign, the central one will be more pronounced in effect than the lateral parts.

Therefore the three decanates of each of the signs will be symbolized by a triangle. Thus are yielded twelve triangles surrounding the lower heavens, and therefore there will ultimate twelve crosses surmounting twelve triangles surrounding the heavens. In other words, the symbol of the G.D. in the Outer, twelve times repeated.

Celestial Cross and Triangle

And the central rising sun will represent the hidden influence of Tiphareth in the centre of the sphere, as will be hereafter explained, rising above the waters of space (the ethereal expanse of the sky called by the Egyptians "the waters of Nu which are the parents of the gods," the shoreless ocean of space).

But in the Golden Dawn initiation, the cross surmounting the triangle is preferably represented by a Calvary Cross of six squares, as still more allied to Tiphareth.

Of the Operation and Rule of the Tree of Life in the Celestial Heavens Projected as if in a Solid Sphere

When the Tree of Life is considered not as being a plane but as a solid figure, and when it is projected in the sphere, the north pole of the sphere will coincide with Kether and the south pole with Malkuth.

And as we have before sufficiently learned the ten Sephiroth are repeated not alone, in each whole figure, but also in the parts therefore, so that every material thing created will have its own Sephiroth and paths.

Now as the north pole corresponds with Kether and the south pole corresponds with Malkuth, the central pillar of the Sephirotic Tree will form the invisible axis of the sphere, the central point coinciding with Tiphareth. This latter Sephirah together with that of Yesod will be completely hidden from view, so that Tiphareth will be the exact centre of the sphere.

Also the Sephiroth Chokmah, Binah, Chesed, Geburah, Netzach, and Hod will be duplicated. As also the paths Aleph, Beth, Gimel, Vau, Cheth, Caph, Mem, Qoph, and Shin, and so many of the others will be even quadrupled. But although Tiphareth and Yesod will be concealed, there will be four especial points where the influence of each will be indicated.

As projected in the before-described celestial sphere, Kether will govern a radius of 10° around the North Pole, thus embracing the whole body of the constellation Draco.

Chokmah will be on the 60° north latitude; embracing a radius of 10°, the right foot of Hercules; the left arm, hand, and part of head of Bootes. Also on the other side of the heavens, a radius of 10° including the head and shoulders of Cepheus, and the head of Lacerta.

Binah has a similar radius and is posited on the same parallel of latitudes, and includes the pole star of Earth, the head of Camelopardalis, the tip of the tail of Draco, also Lyra and left knee of Hercules in the opposite side of the heavens.

Chesed with a similar radius, and posited in the 30° of north latitude, will include part of Coma Berenices, of Bootes, and of Virgo, and parts of Andromeda and of Pegasus.

And so with the other Sephiroth of the outer pillars, each being 30° distant from the line of the Sephiroth above and below it, and having a radius of 10°.

The central line of the two pillars of mercy and severity will respectively traverse, that of mercy the 15° of Virgo and 15° of Pisces; that of severity the 15° of Gemini and the 15° of Sagittarius. The four Yesod points will be on the line of the 60° of south latitude, and at similar zodiacal points. From which circumstances the path of influence or nature of the sun will be along the line of the ecliptic, coinciding with Tiphareth, and that of the moon will be on the 60° of south latitude answering to the Yesod points on that line.

S.A.'s Key Plan of the Tarot

The Law of the Convoluted Revolution of the Forces Symbolized by the Four Aces Round the Northern Pole [16]

In the Book "T," it is written: "Also the Dragon (i.e., Draco, the constellation at the northern pole of the heavens) surroundeth the pole Kether of the celestial heavens." It is further laid down that the four Aces (symbolized by the Princesses and amazons) rule the celestial heavens from the northern pole of the zodiac unto the 45° of latitude north of the ecliptic, and from the thrones of the four Aces which rule in Kether.

And again it is stated that:

The throne of the Ace of Cups—The head of Draco

The throne of the Ace of Swords—Fore part of body

The throne of the Ace of Pentacles—Hind part of body

The throne of the Ace of Wands—Tail of Draco

Regard thou then the form of this constellation of the Dragon. It is convoluted in the four places answering unto the rule of the Aces.

Head, first convolution—Ace of Cups
Second convolution—Ace of Swords
Third convolution—Ace of Pentacles
Fourth convolution—Ace of Wands

And this convoluted course will represent the law of the Aces.

Now in the four faces of YHVH, fire and water be contrary, and also earth and air be contrary. And the throne of the element will attract and seize, as it were, the force of that element, so that herein be the forces of antipathy and of sympathy, or what are known chemically as attraction and repulsion.

Recall also the allotment of the triplicities:

Aries, Leo, Sagittarius = Fire = Wands of the Tarot.
Cancer, Scorpio, Pisces = Water = Cups of the Tarot.
Gemini, Libra, Aquarius = Air = Swords of the Tarot.
Taurus, Virgo, Capricorn = Earth = Pentacles of the Tarot.

Now, the order of the Princesses, and consequently of the thrones, is formed from right to left thus:

Heh (final)	Vau	Heh	Yod
Princess	Princess	Princess	Princess
of	of	of	of
Pentacles	Swords	Cups	Wands
Taurus	Aquarius	Scorpio	Leo
Earth	Air	Water	Fire

While that of the Aces is formed from left to right, though their motion is from right to left:

Yod	Heh	Vau	Heh (final)
Ace	Ace	Ace	Ace
of	of	of	of
Wands	Cups	Swords	Pentacles

This, then, will be the order of their movement. Let us first suppose the Aces on the following stations:

Station 2	Station 1	Station 12	Station 11
Ace of	Ace of	Ace of	Ace of
Wands	Cups	Swords	Pentacles

Now the Station 2 is the throne of the Ace of Wands, while the movement of the Aces is steadily from right to left in the direction of the numbering of the stations. In the ordinary course the Ace of Wands would pass to Station 3; the Ace of Cups to Station 2; the Ace of Swords to Station 1; the Ace of Pentacles to Station 12.

But the Station 2, being the throne of the Ace of Wands, attracts and arrests the movement of that force so that instead of passing into Station 3, it remains on Station 2 until the other Aces have passed over it in turn.

Ace of Wands remains on Station 2,
Ace of Cups passes also on to Station 2,
Ace of Swords passes on to Station 1,
Ace of Pentacles passes on to Station 12.

Again,

Ace of Cups passes to Station 3,
Ace of Wands remains at Station 2,
Ace of Swords passes also on to Station 2,
Ace of Pentacles passes also on to Station 1.

Again,
Ace of Cups passes on to Station 4,
Ace of Swords passes on to Station 3,
Ace of Wands remains at Station 2,
Ace of Pentacles passes also on to Station 2.
Again,
Ace of Cups passes to Station 5,
Ace of Swords passes to Station 4,
Ace of Pentacles passes on to Station 3,
Ace of Wands still remains on Station 2.

But Station 5 is the throne of the Ace of Cups. Therefore it attracts and arrests that force, in the same manner that the throne of the Ace of Wands acted previously in attracting and arresting the Ace of Wands, the result of which has been to make that force which previously was leading become the last of the four.

Again,
Ace of Cups remains on Station 5,
Ace of Swords passes also on to Station 5,
Ace of Pentacles passes also on to Station 4,
Ace of Wands now at last passes into Station 3.

For it has now become the last of the four, and the Ace of Cups has commenced to act through its throne, and the Ace of Pentacles, moving to Station 4, a hiatus would occur in the movement of the Aces, if the Ace of Wands did not move forward to Station 3, and also there is the attraction of the motion of those Aces in front of it. Wherefore all these forces combining, at length cause it to move forward.

The movement then continues, thus:
The Ace of Swords passes on to Station 6,
The Ace of Cups remains on Station 5,

The Ace of Pentacles passes also on to Station 5,
The Ace of Wands passes also on to Station 4.

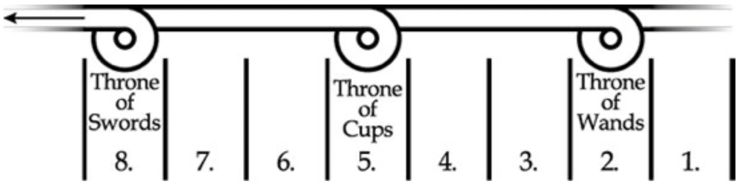
Again,
The Ace of Swords passes on to Station 7,
The Ace of Pentacles passes on to Station 6,
The Ace of Cups still remains on Station 5,
The Ace of Wands passes also on to Station 5.

Again,
The Ace of Swords passes on to Station 8, its Throne,
The Ace of Pentacles passes on to Station 7,
The Ace of Wands passes on to Station 6,
The Ace of Cups still remains on Station 5.

Again,
The Ace of Swords remains on Station 8,
The Ace of Pentacles passes also on to Station 8,
The Ace of Wands passes on to Station 7,
The Ace of Cups now at length passes on to Station 6, and so on.

The movement of the Aces will be very similar to the convolutions of Draco thus:

The Course of the Aces:



Course of the Aces

And will imply a much more sustained exercise of force through the thrones than elsewhere. So that the generic effect of the thrones will be that of the seasons, while the other stations will give the variations thereof in accordance with their natures and with the order of the movement of the aces in them.

And as Kether acted directly upon Tiphareth which is, as it were, the centre and focus of the Sephiroth when projected in a sphere, so do the Aces act upon the sun as the centre and focus of the solar system. So that the sun, according to his position with regard to the equinox and Earth's surface, will translate the effect of the seasons, he being the translator of the force of heat thereto, whether the then position of the equinoctial points coincide with what we call 0° Aries and 0° Libra (reckoning from Regulus) or not. So that his effect north of the equator shall produce when just leaving the equinoctial point the effect of Aries, whether he be with that constellation actually in the heavens or not.

Conversely also, for the south of the equator (as in the country of Australia) his quitting the equinoctial point southward will translate the same effect of Aries.

But this rule shall not for one moment affirm that Aries and Libra are identical in nature. Nor that the zodiac proper is inoperative. Nor that the nature of the sun is not modified by the constellation in which he is. But only that the direct effect of the physical impact of his rays falling upon a certain portion of Earth's surface, will be in proportion to the duration of their action, in the excitement they produce in the terrestrial forces.

And now as the forces symbolized by these Aces pass in succession over these stations, so will they awake certain terrestrial action, according unto the sign of the division of the zodiac above which they pass in the domain of the Knaves or Princesses, and according unto the nature thereof. Nevertheless, the force roused by the Ace when on its throne will be of longer duration than at other points.

And hence it is that the signs of the zodiac be divided into fixed or Kerubic, moveable or changing, and common or fluctuating, according unto the nature of the power which can be awakened therein. And again, these will be varied according unto their elements, for the elements have a various classification.

Qualities of Elements
🜂	Fire:	Heat, dryness, excessive lightness, brilliance, excessive subtlety, motion rapid.
🜄	Water:	Cold, moisture, weight, obscurity, solidity, motion.
🜁	Air:	Heat, moisture, lightness, slight obscurity, subtlety, excessive motion.
🜃	Earth	Cold, dryness, excessive weight, excessive obscurity, excessive solidity, rest.

Qualities of the Elements When Mixed in Pairs
🜂 & 🜄	Fire and Water:	Slight weight, some subtlety, intense and rapid motion.
🜂 & 🜁	Fire and Air:	Great heat, intense lightness, slight brilliance, intense subtlety, tense motion.

🜁 & 🜃	Air and Earth:	Some weight, intense obscurity, little solidity, little motion.

Note by S.R.M.D.: I think it is here advisable to transcribe the following from Cornelius Agrippa: [17]

Of the Four Elements and Their Natural Qualities:

“It is necessary that we should know and understand the nature and quality of the four elements, in order to our being perfect in the principles and groundwork of our studies in the talismanic or magical art.

"Therefore, there are four elements, the original grounds of all corporeal things, viz.: earth, air, fire, and water, of which elements all inferior bodies are compounded, not by way of being heaped up together, but by transmutation and union; and when they are destroyed, they are resolved into elements.

"But there are none of the sensible elements that are pure. But they are more or less mixed, and apt to be changed the one into the other, even as earth being moistened and dissolved becomes water, but the same being made thick and hard becomes earth again, and being evaporated through heat it passes into air, and that being kindled into fire; and this being extinguished into air again; but being cooled after burning becomes water again, or else stone or sulphur, and this is clearly demonstrated by lightning.

"Now every one of these elements has two specific qualities: the former whereof it retains as proper to itself; in the other as a mean, it agrees with that which comes directly after it. For fire is hot and dry; water cold and moist; and air hot and moist; and so in this manner the elements, according to two contrary qualities, are opposite one to the other, as fire to water, and earth to air.

"Likewise the elements are contrary one to the other on another account. Two are heavy, as earth and water; and the others are light, as fire and air. Therefore the Stoics called the former 'passives,' but the latter 'actives.' And Plato distinguishes them after another manner, and assigns to each of them three qualities, viz.: To the fire brightness, thinness, and motion. To the earth, darkness, thickness, and quietness. And according to these qualities the elements of fire and earth are contrary. Now the other elements borrow their qualities from these, so that the air receives two qualities from the fire, thinness and motion, and from the earth one, darkness. In like manner, water receives two qualities from the earth, darkness and thickness; and from the fire one, motion. But fire is twice as thin as air, thrice more moveable, and four times lighter. The air is twice more bright, thrice more thin, and four times more moveable than water. Therefore, as fire is to air, so is air to water, and water to earth. And again, as the earth is to the water, so is water to air, and air to fire. And this is the root and foundation of all bodies, natures, and wonderful works. And he who can know and thoroughly understand these qualities of the elements and their mixtures shall bring to pass wonderful and astonishing things in magic.

"Now each of these elements has a threefold consideration, so that the number of four may make up the number of twelve; and by passing by the number of seven into ten, there may be a progress to the supreme unity upon which all virtue and wonderful things do depend. Of the first order are the pure elements, which are neither compounded, changed, nor mixed, but are incorruptible and not of which but through which the virtues of all natural things are brought forth to act. No man is fully able to declare their virtues, because they can do all things upon all things. He who remains ignorant of these shall never be able to bring to pass any wonderful matter.

"Of the second order are elements that are compounded, changeable, and impure, yet such as may, by art, be reduced to their pure simplicity, whose virtue, when they are thus reduced, doth above all things perfect all occult and common operations of nature; and these are the foundations of the whole of natural magic.

"Of the third order are those elements which originally and of themselves are not elements, but are twice compounded, various, and changeable unto another. These are the infallible medium, and are called the middle nature, or soul of the middle nature; very few there are that understand the deep mysteries thereof. In them is, by means of certain numbers, degrees, and orders, the perfection of every effect in what thing soever, whether natural, celestial, or super-celestial. They are full of wonders and mysteries, and are operative in magic, natural or divine. For, from these, through them, proceeds the binding, loosing, and transmutation of all things—the knowledge and foretelling of things to come, also the expelling of evil and the gaining of good spirits. Let no one, therefore, without these three sorts of elements, and the true knowledge thereof, be confident that he can work anything in the occult science of magic and nature.

"But whosoever shall know how to reduce those of one order into another, impure into pure, compounded into simple, and shall understand distinctly the nature, virtue, and power of them, into number, degrees, and order, without dividing the substance, he shall easily attain to the knowledge and perfect operation of all natural things, and celestial secrets likewise; and this is the perfection of the Qabalah, which teaches all these before mentioned; and by a perfect knowledge thereof, we perform many rare and wonderful experiments. In the original and exemplary world all things are all in all. So also in this corporeal world. And the elements are not only in these inferior things, but are in the heavens, in stars, in devils, in angels, and likewise in God Himself, the maker and original example of all things.

"Now it must be understood that in these inferior bodies the elements are gross and corruptible, but in the heavens they are, with their natures and virtues, after a celestial and more excellent manner than in sublunary things. For the firmness of the celestial Earth is there without the grossness of water, and the agility of air without exceeding its bounds. The heat of fire without burning, only shining, giving light and life to all things by its celestial heat."

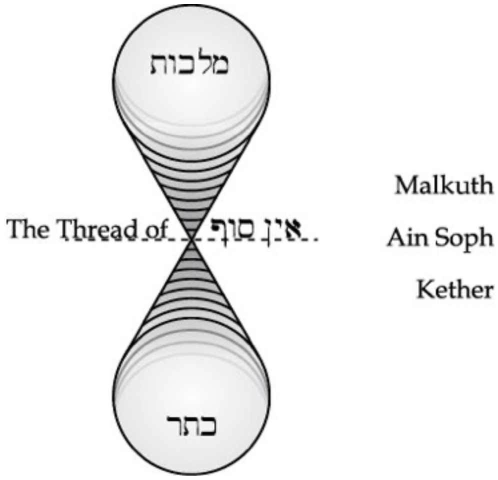
Now the successive effect of the passage of the Aces over the stations above the place of a sign in the excitement of the forces of that sign may be readily calculated by the tables of the qualities of the elements simple and mixed, always being careful to take also into account the effect of the throne upon the season as well, and the nature of the sign.

It is said that Kether is in Malkuth, and again, that Malkuth is in Kether but after another manner.

For downwards through the four worlds the Malkuth of the less material will be linked unto the Kether of the more material. From the synthesis of the ten coruscations of the Aour (light) proceedeth the influence unto Eheieh, the Kether of Atziluth. And the connecting thread of the Ain Soph is extended through the worlds of the ten Sephiroth and is in every direction. As the ten Sephiroth operate in each Sephirah, so will there be a Kether in every Malkuth, and Malkuth in every Kether. Thus:

Adonai Melekh will be the Malkuth of Atziluth.
Metatron will be the Kether of Briah.
Sandalphon
Metraton } will be the Malkuth of Briah.
Nephesch ha-Messiah
Chaioth ha Qadesh will be the Kether of Yetzirah.
Aschim will be the Malkuth of Yetzirah.
Rashith ha Gilgalim, the Kether of Assiah.
Cholem Yesodoth, the Malkuth of Assiah.
Thaumiel, the Kether of the Qlippoth.

The symbol of the connection between Malkuth of Yetzirah and Kether of Assiah will be of a form somewhat resembling that of an hourglass. The thread of the Ain Soph before alluded to, traversing the centre thereof, and forming the Ain Soph connection between the worlds:



Connection Between the Worlds

So that the symbol of the connection between the two planes is this. And also the modus operandi of the translation of force from one plane into another is in this, and hence doth the title of the sphere of Kether of Assiah signify the commencement of a whirling motion.

Now also, in the diagram of Minutum Mundum, there be four colours attributed unto Malkuth—Citrine, russet, olive, and black. And if we consider them as in a vertical sphere, we shall find citrine uppermost and horizontal, russet and olive midmost and vertical, black lowermost and horizontal.

And again, these four represent in a manner the operation of the four elements in Malkuth; for example:

Citrine—Air of Earth	Russet—Fire of Earth
Olive—Water of Earth	Black—Earth of Earth

From the diagram of the hourglass symbol it will be manifest then that Malkuth of Yetzirah will be the transmitter of the Yetziratic forces unto Kether of Assiah, and that the latter will be the recipient thereof, and that the hourglass symbol or double cone, will be the translator from the one plane unto the other. Here, therefore, let us consider the Yetziratic nomenclature of the tenth path answering unto Malkuth, and of the first path answering unto Kether.

The Tenth Path: It is called the Resplendent Intelligence and it is so called because it is exalted above every head, and sitteth on the throne of Binah, and it illuminateth the splendour of all the lights, and it causeth the current of influence to flow from the Prince of Countenances, i.e., Metatron.

The First Path: It is called the Wonderful or Hidden Intelligence (the highest crown) for it is the light to cause to understand the primordial without commencement, and it is the primal glory, for nothing created is worthy to follow out its essence.

Whence it is plain that Malkuth is, as it were, the collector together and synthesis of all the forces in its plane or world. While Kether being superior unto all else in its plane or world, will be the recipient and arranger of the forces from the plane beyond, so as to distribute them unto its subordinate Sephiroth in a duly ordered manner.

And therefore any force of the multitudinous and innumerable forces in Malkuth may act through the upper cone of the hourglass symbol, and by means of the lower one translate its operation into Kether below, but its mode of transmission will be through the cones by the thread of the Ain Soph, or of the unformulated.

So that in the transmission of force between two worlds the formulate must first become unformulate, ere it can reformulate in new conditions. For it must be plain that a force formulated in one world, if translated into another will be unformulated, according to the laws of a plane different in nature. Even as water in its fluid state will be subject to different laws to those governing it when in the conditions of either ice or steam.

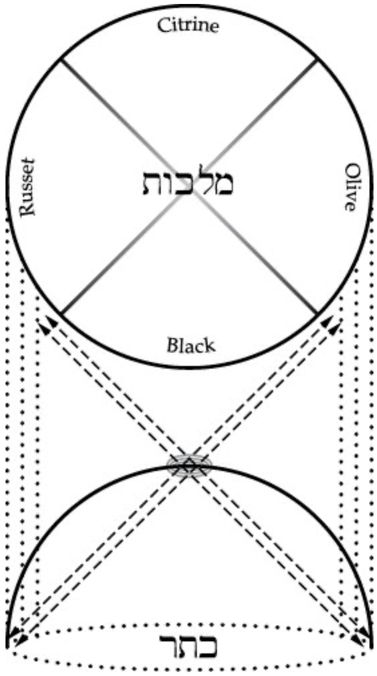
And as before said, there being in the Minutum Mundum diagram four chief elemental divisions of the Sephirah Malkuth, each of these will have its correlative formula of transmission unto the succeeding Kether. Hence also in the Order tarot teaching is there the dominion of the four Knaves or Princesses of the tarot pack around the north pole. Why then is it that it is the four amazons or Knaves, answering unto the final Heh of YHVH, that are here placed, rather than the four Kings, Queens, or Princes, or one of each nature?

We are taught that these are the vice regents of the name in the Four Worlds, and that they are thus attributed among the Sephiroth.

Yod	Heh	Vau	Heh (final)
Chokmah	Binah	Tiphareth	Malkuth
King	Queen	Prince	Princess

Now as Kether of Assiah is to receive from Malkuth of Yetzirah, it is necessary that in and about Kether there should be a force which partaketh of the nature of Malkuth, though more subtle and refined in nature. And therefore is it that the final Heh, or Princess force, have their dominion placed about Kether. They are so placed that they may attract from the Malkuth of the higher and form the basis of action for the Aces. So that a refined matter may attract its like, and the spiritual forces may not lose themselves in the void, to produce but a mistaken and whirling destruction for want of a settled basis. And herein is the mutual formula in all things, of a spirit and of a body, seeing that each supplies unto each that wherein the other is lacking, yet herein also must there be a certain condition, otherwise the harmony will not be perfect. For unless the body be refined in nature, it will hinder the action of a spirit cognate unto it. And unless the spirit be willing to ally itself unto the body, the latter will be injured thereby and each will mutually react on the other.

Therefore, also, let the Adeptus Minor understand that there may be fault of the spirit as well as of the body, and that there is little difference between the material and sensuous person, and the envious, malicious, and self-righteous person—save that from their being more subtle and less evident, the sins of the latter are more insidious than those of the former, though both are alike evil. But it is as necessary to govern the spirit as to refine the body, and of what use is it to weaken the body by abstinence, if at the same time uncharitableness and spiritual pride are encouraged? It is simply translating one sin into another.



Transmission of Force from Malkuth to Kether

And therefore are the final Heh forces so necessary in Kether, as it is said in the tenth path of the Sepher Yetzirah: “It is so called because it is exalted above every head, and sitteth on the throne of Binah.” Now, in the Tree the two Sephiroth, Chokmah and Binah, are referred unto the Briatic world which is also called the throne or vehicle, that is, of the Atzilutic world unto which latter Kether is referred on the Tree. And referring unto the dominions of the four Princesses, thou shalt find that in the sphere they include Chokmah and Binah as well as Kether.

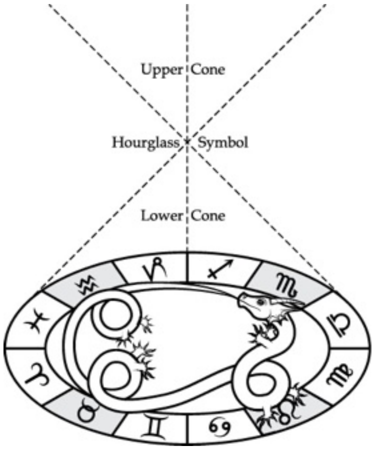
Now there will be not one, but four formulae of the application of the four forces of Malkuth, unto the revolution of the Aces in Kether, and these acting not singly but simultaneously and with a different degree of force.

Were Malkuth or Kether in the same plane or world the transmission of these forces from the one unto the other would proceed more or less in direct lines. In this case, seeing that Malkuth and Kether be in different planes or worlds, the lines of transmission of these forces are caught up and whirled about by the upper cone of the hourglass symbol into the vortex where through passeth the thread of the unformulated, i.e., the Ain Soph. Thence they are projected in a whirling convolution (yet according unto their nature) through the lower cone of the hourglass symbol unto Kether.

Whence it resulteth that these formulae are of the nature of the dragon, that is to say, moving in convolutions, and hence they are called the dragon or serpent formulae.

Now imagining Malkuth of Yetzirah to be in a vertical position above Kether of Assiah, it will be plain that the whole of the black part of Malkuth will be towards Kether, but only a portion of the russet and olive parts, and that the citrine parts will be entirely removed and on the further side. Wherefore the natural operation of these four forces towards Kether will be: black, rather horizontal than vertical, and acting fully. Citrine rather horizontal than vertical but acting at the edge of the circumference of Kether, and slightly rather than strongly. Russet and olive rather vertical than horizontal, and acting moderately.

Now these four formulae will imply four simultaneous movements in the revolution of the forces symbolized by the four aces round the northern pole.

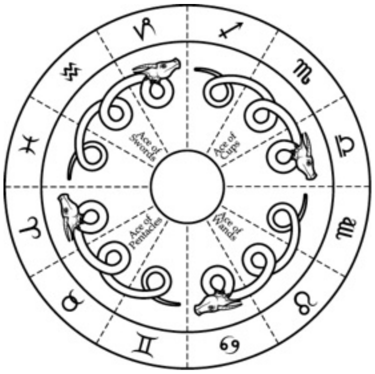


Direct or Creeping Formula

The first and most forcible in its immediate action will be that answering unto the earth of Malkuth of Yetzirah, transmitting unto Kether of Assiah, and following the convolutions of the constellation Draco. It is called the direct or creeping formula and for this reason the dragon may be wingless and footed as regards its symbolic representation. This formula has been thoroughly explained in the beginning of this section on the revolution of the Aces. In the expressions earth of Malkuth, etc., it should be remembered that these do not imply pure but mixed elemental natures, seeing that Malkuth receiveth the ultimate effect of all the forces in the Tree of Life, even as the colours which be attributed thereto be not primaries, but tertiaries. Therefore each element in Malkuth will be counterchanged with others, even as the Kerubim in the vision of Ezekiel have each not one, but four heads, and counterchanged.

The second and least forcible in its immediate action will be the dragon formula answering unto the air of Malkuth of Yetzirah, transmitting unto Kether of Assiah, and following the convolutions of four serpents upon the four triplicities of the elements in the zodiac or, more properly speaking, upon the stations in the dominions of the Princesses above them. (Now also the throne in each dominion is marked in the Book “T” as embracing more than a third of each dominion, because of the enduring effect of its force.)

This formula is also called the looped or flying formula, and hence the serpents may be represented footless, but winged. Its action is more round the circumference at its edge, than that of the other formulae. This formula of operations will be readily understood on reference to the diagram thereof, but more especially from the four diagrams showing the change of order and course of the Aces. In this formula the heads of the four serpents will be above the four cardinal signs.



Looped or Flying Formula

The third dragon formula, moderately forcible in its immediate action, is that answering unto the fire of Malkuth of Yetzirah, transmitting unto Kether of Assiah, and following the law of the attraction and repulsion of the elements of the triplicities of the zodiac. This is also called the leaping or darting formula, and its serpents may be represented both footed and winged—footed to represent the attraction of the elements, winged to represent the repulsion by the contrary elements. This formula is more vertical in action, while the preceding two are more horizontal as before shown. This formula will be readily understood from the four diagrams thereof and also from those showing the change of order in the course of the Aces. As before the heads of the serpents rest upon the stations above the cardinal signs.

The explanation of the course of one of the four serpents will be sufficient to explain the whole. Let us take that of fire:

Fire is strongly attracted by the station above fire, fire is strongly repelled by the station above water, fire is slightly attracted by the station above air, fire is slightly repelled by the station above earth.

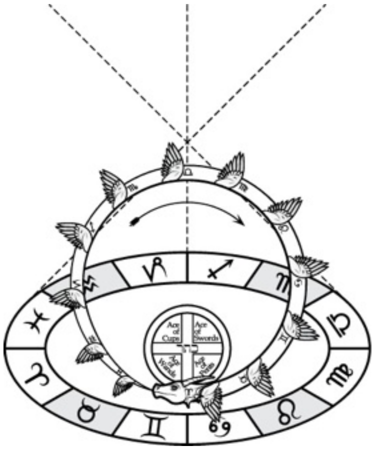
Leaping or Darting Formula

The head rests on the station above Aries.
The serpent is repelled into the lower cone by Pisces.
The serpent is slightly attracted by Aquarius.
The serpent is slightly attracted by Capricorn.
The serpent is strongly attracted by Sagittarius.
The serpent is strongly repelled by Scorpio.
The serpent is slightly attracted by Libra.
The serpent is slightly attracted by Virgo.
The serpent is strongly attracted by Leo.
The serpent is strongly repelled by Cancer.
The serpent is slightly attracted by Gemini and Taurus.

The tail is strongly attracted by Aries, where it is united with the head again. (The course of the four serpents is shown in four different diagrams to avoid confusion.)



Revolving or Flowing Formula

The fourth dragon formula, moderately forcible, is that answering unto the water of Malkuth of Yetzirah, transmitting into the Kether of Assiah, and following the law of the zodiacal succession of the signs in gradual order. This is also called the revolving or flowing formula, and its serpent may be represented neither winged nor footed, but with fins to symbolize its flowing movement. This formula will be more vertical in action, and can be readily understood from the diagram thereof, and from those showing the change of order in the course of the Aces.

This formula may be best symbolically represented by the four Aces revolving as in a smaller wheel upon a great circle whose body is composed of the powers of the twelve signs, so that this latter in its turn revolves upon the stations above the zodiac. The effect of the revolution of the wheel of the Aces will be to excite by the Ace of Wands the fiery signs, by the Ace of Cups the watery signs, by the Ace of Swords the airy signs, and by the Ace of Pentacles the earthy signs. Yet through the forces of the revolution of the serpent as well, the forces of the Aces will be in their turn modified by the zodiacal natures in the body of the serpent.

And as before said the action of these formulae will be simultaneous though differing in degree, and of them all that first explained which followeth the convolutions of the constellation Draco is the strongest in operation. And it is to be noted that in two of these formulae, the heads of the serpents are with the order of the signs, and in the other two against the natural order of succession of them in the zodiac.

Also the action of the spirit of Malkuth of Yetzirah transmitting unto Kether of Assiah will equal that of continued vibratory rays, acting from the centre to the circumference, and thus bringing into action the force from the "thread of the unformulate," Mezla.

Recall that which is written in the chapter of the chariot—(Ezekiel, 1. 45.)

"And I beheld, and lo! a tempestuous whirlwind came out from the north, a mighty cloud, and a fire violently whirling upon itself, and a splendour revolving upon itself, and from the midmost as an eye of brightness from the midst of the fire. And from the midmost the forms of the four Chaioth."

14. Note by S.R.M.D.: In the zodiac of Denderah and in the Tablet of Edfu, Ursa Major is represented as the thigh of an ox.

15. Note by S.R.M.D.: While the greater number of the northern constellations are connected with classical mythology, the titles of many of the southern constellations, and especially of those near the South Pole, are of more or less recent nomenclature, and bear witness to absence of reference to occult knowledge; such names for instance as Reticulum, Caelum Sculptoris, Octans, etc.

16. Note by Regardie: Though this is not official to the grade of Zelator Adeptus Minor, nor included within the general tarot instructions usually issued, it is manifestly written by Greatly Honoured Frater S.R.M.D. Some students consider it a highly important piece of work, claiming that it was part of the study prescribed for the Theoricus Adeptus Minor. Clearly, it requires further teaching thoroughly to be understood, but students who have a good working knowledge of astrology, as well as an understanding of the theory of the tattwa tides or currents, will find that this document throws much light on the esoteric system of astrological divination.

BOOK NINE

The Angelic Tablets

INTRODUCTION TO THE ENOCHIAN SYSTEM

By Frater Ad Majorem Adonai Gloriam

To the First Order of the Golden Dawn little was said of the angelic tablets or watchtowers. They were mentioned in the grade rituals but their subject matter did not enter into the knowledge lectures directly. But the detailed study of the tablets and the method of using them with the Enochian invocations for skrying in the spirit vision formed a definite part of the course of work prescribed for the Adeptus Minor of the R.R. et A.C., though I have never met anybody who had done it with any degree of thoroughness.

There was a considerable mass of detailed and highly complex instruction on this subject, contained in a number of documents. There are in my possession manuscripts totalling at least 70,000 words, besides some large charts, diagrams, and coloured boards. Therefore it has been found necessary to provide a paper which attempts to cover the whole ground in logical sequence giving quotations where necessary from the original documents of G.H. Frater D.D.C.F. This probably will be of more general use than reproducing the whole rather disconnected mass of Enochian literature, which in many cases is simply a development of the fundamentals, and thus can be worked up by each individual reader who studies this book.

At the outset, let it be said that a good deal of systematic study will be required to appreciate the value and subtle significance of this system. It is one of the most amazing magical schemes that I have ever encountered, since it provides a thoroughgoing and comprehensive synthesis of the entire magical system of the Golden Dawn. Every important item of knowledge and practice found itself incorporated within the scope of these angelic tablets. Every worthwhile technical form of magical procedure and all branches of ritualistic work find themselves represented in a single noble system.

Therefore, because it is a synthetic amalgamation of all the Order work, the student will find it necessary and imperative to have made himself thoroughly familiar with all the other items of knowledge taught by the Golden Dawn. He must know his tarot and geomantic attributions so well that the names, symbols, and ideas are all at his fingertips—this, naturally, in addition to the basic knowledge items of the Hebrew alphabet, Tree of Life, and the Qabalah generally. The formulae of practical magic derived from the Z documents, dealing with the symbolism of the candidate, the temple, and the ceremony of the Neophyte grade, will require to be not only memorized and known, but understood. The student will need to be perfectly acquainted with the pentagram and hexagram rituals, the formulae of the consecration ceremonies, the general art of invocation, and formulating telesmatic images, and drawing sigils. The tablets are excellent instances of talismans and flashing tablets.

D.D.C.F. says in his Notanda to the Book of the Concourse of the Forces that "the tablets of Enoch require in truth many years of study, and will repay such an expenditure of time and energy. The knowledge embodied in this manuscript is very superficial and elementary, and entirely fails to do justice to the Enochian scheme. You must take it as only a feeble attempt to provide what is seen at first glance, by the intellect, and as having no relation to the world of spiritual truth which the tablets enshrine and which a high adept can make them give out."

Very little is known about the origin of these tablets and the invocations that accompany their use. Practically nothing was said in the Order which explained this matter, though in the Adeptus Minor ritual it is said that Christian Rosenkreutz and his immediate colleagues, whose supposed date is circa 1400 AD, transcribed some "of the magical language, which is that of the elemental tablets." So far as we are able to make out, however, the system originated by means of the ceremonial skrying of Dr. John Dee and Sir Edward Kelly towards the close of the sixteenth century. The original diaries of Dr. John Dee, recording the development of the system, may be found in Sloane Manuscripts 3189–3191 in the British Museum. But this stands out very clearly, that in these diaries is a rudimentary scheme which bears only the most distant relation to the extraordinarily developed system in use by the order. Whoever was responsible for the order scheme of the angelic tablets—whether it was Mathers and Westcott or the German Rosicrucian Adepts from whom the former are supposed to have obtained their knowledge—was possessed of an ingenuity and an understanding of magic such as never was in the possession either of Dee or Kelly.

Some of the order clairvoyants have claimed that Dee and Kelly in some way obtained access to the construction of the Enochian system whilst they were in Central Europe. It is claimed that numerous Rosicrucian centres existed in Germany, Austria, and Bohemia, and both Dee and Kelly were received therein. Whilst this may be a plausible theory, there is not the least vestige of objective evidence for this assumption. Still others have believed that it represents a revival of certain species of Atlantean Magic, though those who press this theory do not explain the Dee diaries, nor his account of the method he and Edward Kelly employed to acquire the roots of this system.

Roughly, the facts which are concerned with the origins of the system are these. Over one hundred large squares filled with letters were obtained by Dee and Kelly in a manner which we cannot quite determine. When working, Dee, for example, would have before him on a writing table one or more of these tables, as a rule 49" x 49", some full while others were lettered only on alternate squares. Then Sir Edward Kelly would sit down at what they called the Holy Table on which were various magical pentacles, and which also rested on wax seals. On this table was a large crystal or shewstone, in which, after a while, he reported to see an angel who would point with a wand to letters on certain charts in succession. Kelly would thereupon report to Dee that the angel pointed, for example, to column four, rank twenty-nine, of one of the many charts, and so on, apparently not mentioning the letter, which Dee would then find on the table before him and write it down. When the angel had finished his instruction, the message —when it concerned certain of the major invocations or calls—was rewritten backwards. It had been dictated the wrong way round by the angel since it was considered too dangerous to communicate in a straightforward manner, each word being so powerful a conjuration that its direct pronunciation or dictation would have evoked powers and forces not desired at that moment.

Regardless of their origin, these tablets and the whole Enochian system do represent realities of the inner planes. Their value is undoubted, as only a little study and application prove. Whilst it may seem, at first sight, that their governance is solely in the world of the elementals, that is the astral plane, there is much to indicate that they extend to planes which are spiritual and divine in nature. In any event the magical conception of the elements is rather different from that which obtains in most so-called occult philosophies.

Perhaps a word or two of caution might be added. Undoubtedly prudence is required in this matter. It is a very powerful system, and if used carelessly and indiscriminately will bring about disaster and spiritual disintegration. The warnings given in connection with the invocations are not to be regarded as conventions or as platitudinous moralizings. They represent a knowledge of true facts, and the student will do well to take cognizance thereof. Let him study the theory first of all, so that he has a thorough knowledge of the construction of the squares and pyramids. This must be so ingrained within his mind that a glance at the tablets will automatically start an associative current which will bring up without delay the attributions of any given letter or square which strikes the eye. Only when this has been accomplished dare he venture to the actual use of the pyramids with the godforms, or to the employment of the invocations in ceremonial.

At this juncture, also, let me record one or two facts about the angelic language in which the invocations are couched. The Outer Order rituals state, when the tablets are pointed out in the temple to the candidate, that they are written "in what our tradition calls the angelic secret language." The tablets in use in the temples, as well as those reproduced herein, are lettered in English. These, however, are a translation or, more accurately, a transliteration of characters belonging to the Enochian alphabet. These letters will be found reproduced on a later page. It is said that these letters are not simple in character, but partake of the nature of sigils. In the section on talismans, it will have been noticed that certain geomantic emblems and astrological symbols are referred to these letters.

This angelic secret language, whatever its origin, is a true language. It has, quite clearly, a syntax and grammar of its own, and the invocations in that language are not mere strings of words, but sentences which can be translated, not simply transliterated into English. For instance, the invocation of the three archangels ruling over the Spirit tablet, employed in the opening of the Portal grade, reads: "Ol Sonuf Vaorsagi Goho Iada Balata. Lexarph, Comanan, Tabitom. Zodakara, eka; zodakare od zodamran. Odo kikle qaa, piape piaomoel od vaoan." This, translated, means "I will reign over you, saith the God of justice. Lexarph, Comanan, Tabitom, move, therefore. Show yourselves forth and appear. Declare unto us the mysteries of your creation, the balance of righteousness and truth."

In a First Order side lecture issued to newly initiated Zelatores by G.H. Fratre Sub Spe, there is this note on the Enochian system and language which might be worth reproducing:

"One more point is shown you in this first part of the $1^{\circ}=10^{\square}$ grade, and that is the great terrestrial watchtower or tablet of the north. At present it will probably be to all of you who are here present, with the exception of those who have passed into the Second Order, an absolute sea of mystery. It appears a curious arrangement of squares and letters in different colours, and perhaps you may wonder to see English and not Hebrew letters upon it, seeing that it is one of the most ancient symbols in the world. I may tell you, without betraying any knowledge which is beyond you, that these letters are transliterated for convenience. I do not think there is any one present, except myself, who could read the original language in which they are written. But I may tell you that it is a great curiosity merely from the linguistic point of view, because that language, and those characters in which it is written, are a perfect language which can be translated, and yet there is no record, so far as I am aware, that that language was ever spoken, or those characters were ever used by mortal man. Now that Müller and other great philologists have said that it is impossible that any human being should invent a language, here is a language which has existed for as far back as we are able to trace. We find traces of it on rock-cut pillars and on temples, apparently as old as the world. We find traces of it in the sacred mysteries of some of the oldest religions in the world, but we find no trace of it ever having been used as a living language, and we hold the tradition that it is the angelic secret language. Only one instance of this I may perhaps be allowed to give. The high priest of Jupiter in the earliest days of Rome was called Flamen Dialis, and you will find that the most learned are utterly ignorant as to whence came the word Dialis. They will tell you that it is ancient Etruscan, but beyond that they can tell you nothing. It is not the genitive of any known nominative. On that tablet (earth) you will see that the second of the three holy secret names of God is Dial."

Although no philologist, and without the least scientific knowledge of comparative languages, yet I have found the study of this angelical or Enochian language an absorbing interest. Going through the invocations with the intention of compiling a dictionary of the extant words has convinced me personally that we have here fragmentary pieces of a very ancient tongue—a language which is far older even than the Sanskrit. It must have been a living tongue at one time, though many thousands of years ago, and it may therefore be claimed for Enochian that the fragments we do have are in the oldest language of which we have any knowledge. In short, though as pure speculation, it is believed that the language in which these invocations are written are remnants of the tongue of the age-old Atlanteans. True, there are no means for the time being of proving this speculation, or of bringing forward the least convincing item of corroboration other than that it is an instinctive or intuitive conviction. In the quotation rendered above, Frater Sub Spe does give one example of an Enochian word appearing in antiquity, and this to some may prove suggestive. If only we knew it, there probably are hordes of words similar to the case quoted, and these may come to light when expert attention is given to the subject.

Since writing the above, another instance of an Enochian word has come to my attention. Reading Charles Johnson's translation of, and Theosophical commentary upon, the great Upanishads of India, I find reference to a certain character of legend, Uma Haimavati. The Kena Upanishad speaks of her as the daughter of the Snowy Mountain, and she is, interprets Mr. Johnson, a symbol of the hidden Wisdom personified as the child of the Himalaya who reveals the Eternal. And Charles Johnson then proceeds, "Curiously, while the inner significance of the name of this woman greatly radiant is lost in Sanskrit, it must have been clear in the older tongue which lies behind Sanskrit, for it remains in the group of younger Aryan tongues called Slavonic. Here, the root Um is the common word for intelligence."

The italics marked in Johnson's commentary are mine. This point must strongly be indicated, for the significance of that word Um is retained, not alone in the Slavonic as shown by Mr. Johnson, but also in the Enochian or angelical language. For example, in the Second Enochian Key, used to invoke the angels of the Spirit Tablet, and in the Sixteenth Key we find the word Om translated by “understand.” (Let me remark here too, that the translation of the words in the Enochian invocations came from the same occult or angelic source as the invocations themselves, and were not made by either Dee or Kelly.) Again, in the Fifteenth Key, we find the English version of the Call “O thou ... who knowest” as equivalent to Ils...ds omax. While in the Call of the Thirty Aethers, Oma is rendered as “understanding.”

Thus there is every indication to believe that if there was a language “which lies behind Sanskrit” as supposed by Mr. Charles Johnson and of course by many others, which according to the philosophy of the ancient wisdom is that of Atlantis, then the Enochian or angelical language bears several strong points of resemblance to it.

Yet, the puzzle is this. Prior to the previously described ceremonial skrying of Dr. Dee and Sir Edward Kelly towards the close of the sixteenth century there is absolutely no trace of any part of the Enochian magical system or angelical language in Europe. There are innumerable ancient and mediaeval records of so-called “barbarous names of evocation,” many of them being assembled apparently in sentences and runes, etc. But none of these latter have the coherence which the Enochian language does have, nor do they betray traces of grammar and syntax which are clearly indicated in the angelical keys. In some incomprehensible manner, this pair of psychics must have stumbled on a thread which unfolded, perhaps from their own subconscious memory of former lives, parts of this strange tongue of a bygone age. Stumbled, I use advisedly, for a close perusal of their diaries both published and unpublished reveals nothing to indicate that Dee or Kelly had anything but the remotest idea of what it was that they were recording so carefully. The way they have recorded the invocations, as shown in Sloane ms. 3191 in the British Museum, indicates they had never studied its intricacies or grammar, and thus many words became jumbled and joined together. Only a little study of the Calls is necessary to reveal their mistakes, and to restore what is clearly the original arrangement of words. For instance, the word L or El meaning “the first” or “one” is invariably joined on to the succeeding word in the Dee version; there is no necessity for this.

It is clear that the angelical language was not in the possession of a possessive case, and thus we find several instances of the English translation, where the possessive case is used, not tallying exactly with the Enochian. We find Lonshi Tox translated by “his power” when strictly it ought to be, if the words are literally to be translated “the power of him,” and Elzap Tilb is rendered “her course” instead of “the course of her.” I mention this simply to show that the language is a real one, and not a mere jumble of unmeaning words to which an arbitrary translation was given. With the publication of the invocations here, I hope that serious experienced philologists will devote some attention to this matter so that we can thrash out once and for all, on the objective plane, the true nature of the language and the vertical source of its origins.

It is said in the 5° = 6$^{\square}$ ritual that some of the early fratres of the order compiled a dictionary of this language. At any rate, such is not in existence now, though the writer, using the Angelical Calls, has compiled a dictionary of the extant Enochian words. Unfortunately, it is not possible to include this dictionary with the present account of Order teaching.

Incidentally, for practical purposes, the language is pronounced by taking each letter separately, whenever a lack of vowels renders it necessary. But, with a little practice, the pronunciation will come instinctively when the student wants it. “Z” is always pronounced “Zod” with a long “o.”

My last word is an insistence upon the necessity for a thorough grasp of the preliminary part. It should be read again and again, so that the student actually absorbs the material, rather than learns it by a feat of memory or conscious intellection. It may take some months this way, but once he has made it a part of his mode of thinking, so that it has been assimilated into the very structure of his brain, the real significance and meaning of the system will begin to dawn on him.

THE BOOK OF THE CONCOURSE OF THE FORCES

Part One: The Enochian Tablets

The Enochian tablets are four in number, each referred to one of the elements of earth, air, fire, and water. In addition to these four there is another smaller tablet, which is called the Tablet of Union, referred to the element of ether or spirit. Its function, as its name implies, is to unite and bind together the four elemental tablets. For purposes of study, the four elemental tablets or watchtowers are arranged as are the elements in the pentagram, although the order is rather different:

1. Air Tablet	2. Water Tablet
3. Earth Tablet	4. Fire Tablet

To each tablet are referred innumerable attributions, which will be dealt with in the course of this paper, the principal elementary ones being those of colour. Certain squares on each tablet were painted in the colour of the element, according to the King Scale, whilst others were left wholly or partly white. Thus in each tablet there are four principal types of square. There are those of:

1. The Great Cross of thirty-six squares, lettered in black on white, stretching through the entire tablet.
2. The Sephirotic Calvary Crosses, lettered also in black on white, in the four corners on the tablets.
3. The Kerubic squares, which are always in the elemental colour of the tablet, and are the four squares immediately above each Sephirotic cross.

4. The servient squares, always in the colour of the tablet, and consisting of the sixteen squares of each lesser angle beneath each Sephirotic cross.

The Kerubic and servient squares on each tablet are coloured in the elemental colour, with the letters drawn thereon in the complementary colour, thus:

Air tablet painted in yellow. Lettering on air quarter mauve.

Water tablet painted in blue. Lettering on water quarter orange.

Earth tablet painted in black. Lettering on earth quarter green.

Fire tablet painted in red. Lettering on fire quarter green.

The lettering on the other three angles follows the element. Thus, to consider the fire tablet as an example, the colouring of each angle of the tablet will be:

1. Lesser angle of Air yellow letters on red	2. Lesser angle of Water blue letters on red
3. Lesser angle of Earth black letters on red	4. Lesser angle of Fire green letters on red

The Tablet of Union, which is attributed to spirit, the fifth point of the pentagram, is a small tablet of twenty squares, five letters wide, four deep. Its letters are painted on a white ground:

EXARP, attributed to air, is painted in yellow letters. 1st line.

HCOMA, attributed to water, is painted in blue letters. 2nd line.

NANTA, attributed to earth, is painted in black letters. 3rd line.

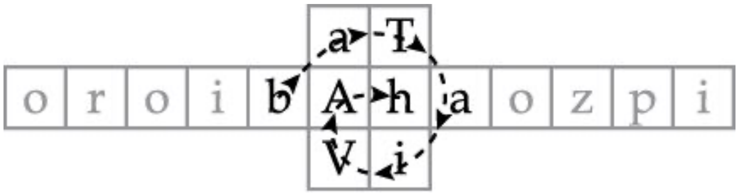
BITOM, attributed to fire, is painted in red letters. 4th line.

Each of these twenty squares is attributed in part to spirit, and its letters are used in combination with those on the elemental tablets in the formation of certain names.

The most important item on each angelic tablet is the Great Cross whose shaft descends from top to bottom and whose bar crosses the tablet in the centre. This cross comprises thirty-six squares, and has a double vertical line which is called Linea Dei Patris Filiique, the Line of God the Father and the Son, and Linea Spiritus Sancti, the Line of the Holy Spirit, crossing this horizontally, and containing one rank of letters. The Linea Spiritus Sancti is always the seventh line or rank of letters from the top, while the two vertical columns of the Linea Dei Patris Filiique are always the sixth and seventh columns counting from either right or left.

From this Great Cross, various angelic and divine names are produced, which are of supreme importance. First of all there are the "three great secret holy names of God" which are found in the Linea Spiritus Sancti. This line comprises twelve letters, which are divided into names of three, four, and five letters reading from left to right. Thus in the air tablet, you will find ORO IBAH AOZPI; in the water tablet, MPH ARSL GAIOL; in the earth tablet, MOR DIAL HCTGA; and in the fire tablet, OIP TEAA PDOCE.

These three secret holy names of God are the major names of the tablets. These names are conceived to be borne as ensigns upon the banners of the great king of each quarter. The name of the great king is always a name of eight letters and comprises a spiral or whirl in the centre of the Great Cross. Thus in the air tablet, the great king is BATAIVAH. It is produced:

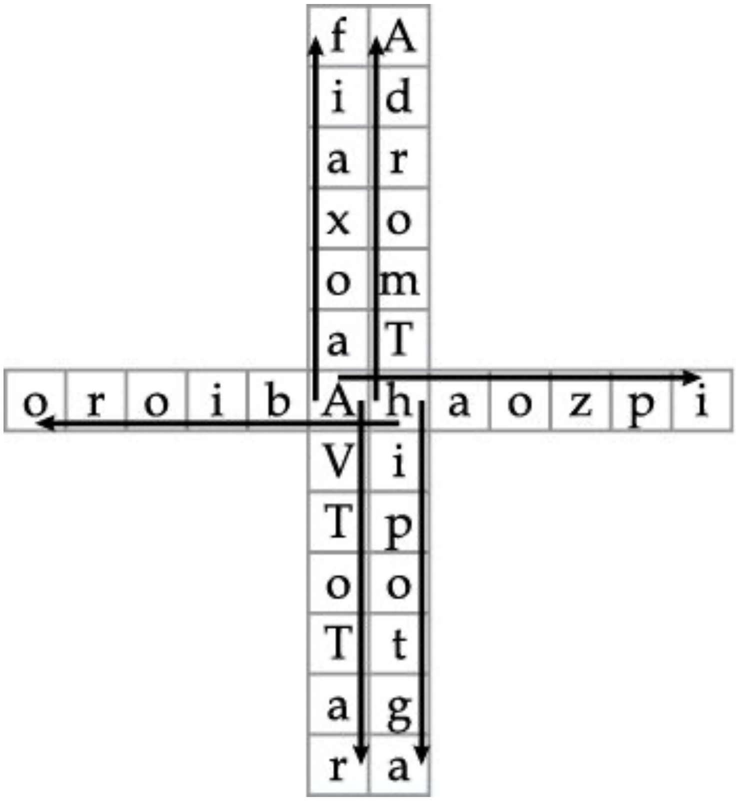


Creation of BATAIVAH

And so for the other three angelic tablets. The king is a very powerful force, and since it initiates the whirl it is to be invoked with due care.

The next series of important names obtained from the Great Cross are the six seniors. Their names begin from the sixth and seventh squares of the Linea Spiritus Sancti, including these squares, and read outwards along the three lines of the cross to the edge of the tablet. Each is a name of seven letters. In the case of the air tablet, the six seniors are:

HABIORO AAOXAIF HTMORDA AHAOZPI AVTOTAR HIPOTGA



Creation of Six Seniors

(Note the overlapping of names in the central squares.) The eight-lettered name of the king and the six names of seven letters each of the seniors are invoked by means of the hexagram. They are attributed to the sun and planets and are on a different and higher plane than are the elemental names. The attribution to the points of the hexagram is:

The king is attributed to the sun, and the six solar hexagrams invoke him. The senior formed on the left hand of the Linea Spiritus Sancti is attributed to Mars; that on the right hand to Venus. The name of the senior formed by the letters in the upper half of the Linea Dei Patris (which is the left descending column of the cross, as the right column is the Linea Dei Filiique) is attributed to Jupiter, and the lower half to Mercury. The senior formed by the letters on the upper half of the Linea Dei Filiique is referred to Luna, whilst the name formed by the letters in the lower half is referred to Saturn.

These rules apply to each of the four tablets and are constant and invariable throughout. These three sets of names—the holy names of God, the name of the king, and the names of the six seniors—are all taken from the great central cross. Their names are always painted in black letters on a white ground.

We must now refer to the lesser angles of each tablet. The order given to the arrangement of the four tablets also applies to the structure of each individual tablet, for each is shown together with its appropriate sub-elements. The Great Cross is the mechanism which divides the tablet and separates (and binds together) the four sub-elements or lesser angles, as they are called, from the other.

In the centre of each lesser angle will be seen a cross of ten squares. This is called the Sephirotic Calvary Cross. From the letters arranged on this cross are taken two divine names which call forth and control the angels and spirits of the lesser angle, and their names are used in a preliminary invocation when working magically with a square of a lesser angle. From the vertical line of the Sephirotic Cross, reading from above downwards, comes a deity name of six letters. Thus, in the air lesser angle of the air tablet, we find, in the white descending line of the cross, the name IDOIGO. It is with this name that the angels and spirits of the lesser angle are to be called. From the crossbar, reading from left to right, comes the deity name of five letters, ARDZA, which is used to command those angels called by the first name. Thus in every Sephirotic Cross in every lesser angle, we obtain two divine names. One on the descending shaft, always of six letters, and one on the crossbar, reading from left to right, of five letters. These names must be read in these prescribed directions, for if they are reversed, they call forth evil forces. Like the names from the Great Cross, these names on the Sephirotic Cross are painted in black letters on white. But unlike the former, these latter are employed with the pentagram.

We now come to the coloured squares grouped above and below the Sephirotic Cross in each of the lesser angles. The most important of these are the four above the crossbar of the Sephirotic Cross—called the Kerubic squares. From these four squares are derived four names of four letters each. Thus, for the top rank of the airy angle of the air tablet, we have:

R Z (I) L A

Note that the white square in the centre belongs to the Sephirotic Cross and is not included in the names derived from the Kerubic squares. From these four letters we obtain four names, thus: RZLA, ZLAR, LARZ, ARZL.

These four names, the names of the four Kerubic angels of the lesser angle, rule the servient squares below the Sephirotic Cross, and of the four, the first is the most powerful as the others are derived therefrom. By prefixing to these four names a letter from the appropriate line of the Tablet of Union, we obtain even more powerful names, archangelic in character. Thus for the Kerubic rank of the air lesser angle of the air tablet, which we are using as our example, the letter E of the word EXARP on the tablet of Union is prefixed. This produces ERZLA, EZLAR, ELARZ, EARZL.

The rule is that the first letter of the appropriate line of the Tablet of Union is prefixed only to the names formed from the Kerubic squares. In the airy angle of the water tablet, the principal Kerubic name is TAAD. The name formed by the addition of the appropriate letter from the Tablet of Union is HTAAD: and so on. As an example of this method applied to the remaining servient squares of the air angle of the air tablet, we find:

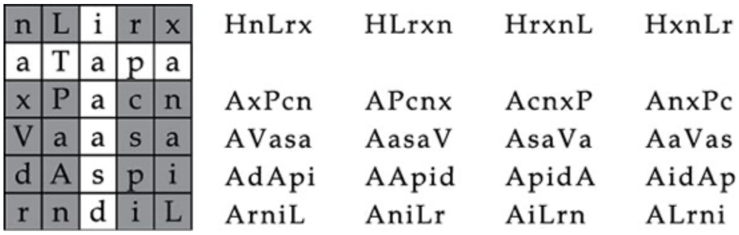
X is added to the sixteen servient squares of the angle of air.
A is added to the sixteen servient squares of the angle of water.
R is added to the sixteen servient squares of the angle of earth.
P is added to the sixteen servient squares of the angle of fire.

Hence EXARP will be used entirely on the air tablet, and is never used on the other three tablets. The first letter applies to the Kerubic squares of each of the four lesser angles, whilst the remaining four letters apply to the sixteen servient squares of those angles as shown above. The other names of the Tablet of Union are attributed similarly to water, earth, and fire. As an example, I give below names formed from the lesser angle of fire in the water tablet:



n	L	i	r	x	HnLrx	HLrxn	HrxnL	HxnLr
a	T	a	p	a
x	P	a	c	n	AxPcn	APcnx	AcnxP	AnxPc
V	a	a	s	a	AVasa	AasaV	AsaVa	AaVas
d	A	s	p	i	AdApi	AApid	ApidA	AidAp
r	n	d	i	L	ArniL	AniLr	AiLrn	ALrni

Lesser Angle of Fire of Water Tablet

The ritual for the consecration of the four elemental weapons gives excellent examples of the spirit or archangelic names formed from the Kerubic squares by the addition of letters from the Tablet of Union.

The Attribution of the Name Yod He Vau He

This name is the key to the whole of the Enochian attributions of the squares to the elements. The letters are thus referred:

י	Yod	Fire	Wands
ה	He	Water	Cups
ו	Vau	Air	Swords
ה	(final) He	Earth	Pentacles

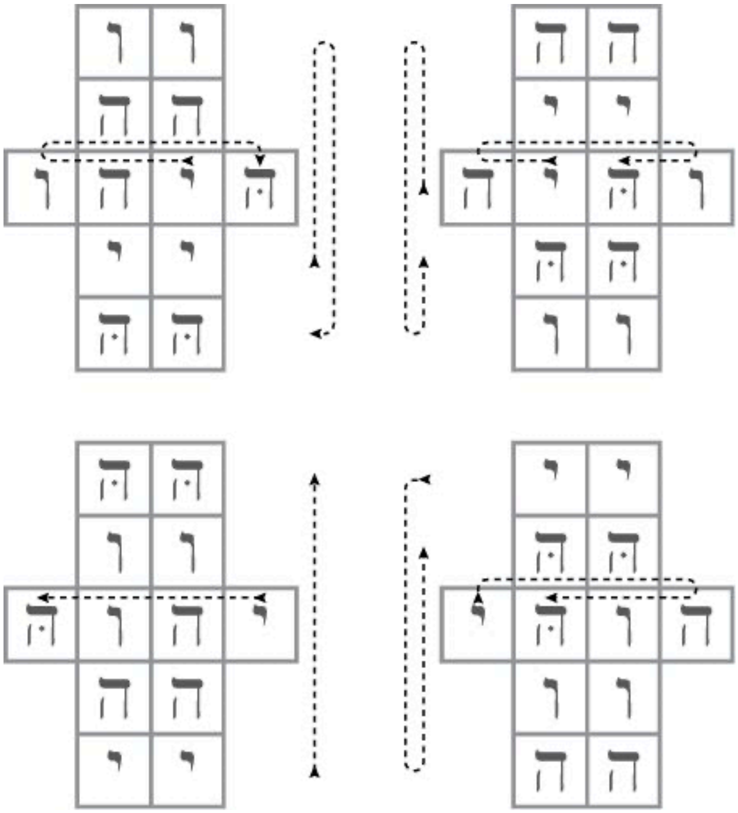
Attribution of the Great Name to the Corners

Not only are the letters of Tetragrammaton attributed to the tablets themselves, and to the lesser angles of the tablets, but they are so arranged that even the squares of the tablets come under the jurisdiction and governance of the letters. So far as concerns the Great Cross, the method for attributing to it the letters of the name is to divide each vertical and horizontal line into groups of three adjoining squares. Against the top left hand corner of the Great Cross, and on the left of its horizontal shaft, put the letter of the name for the element of the tablet, thus Vau for the air tablet, Yod for the fire tablet, etc.

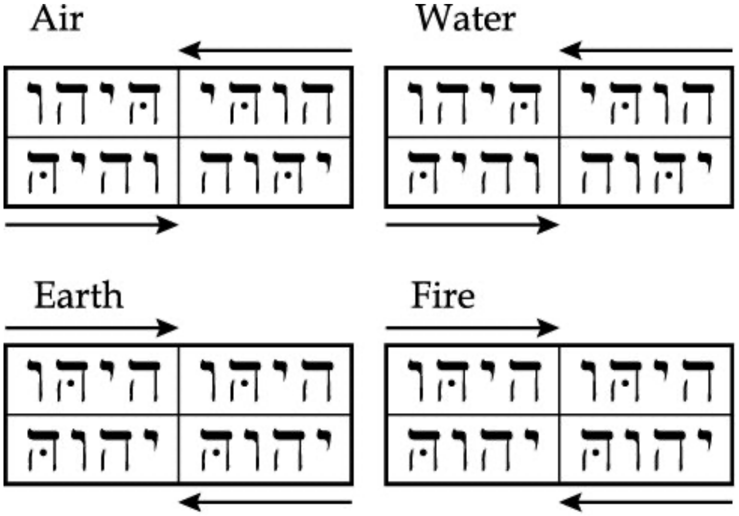


Attribution of the Great Name to the Great Cross

Each square of the above diagram represents three squares on the tablets. This attribution is perfectly simple if it be remembered that the letter consonant to the tablet always comes to the top and left. The arrows show the direction in which the name is to be read.

The Sephirotic Crosses in the lesser angles have, as the student will already have noted, ten squares, each of which is referred to one of the Sephiroth of the Tree of Life. The Sephirotic Cross therefore represents the Sephiroth modified by the letter of the lesser angle. Thus Kether in the airy lesser angle is the Kether of Vau. In the watery lesser angle, it is the Kether of Heh, and so on. The letters, in this case, as elsewhere explained, refer to the four worlds.

Referring to the other squares of the lesser angles, in the Kerubic rank the outside square is always attributed to the letter corresponding to the element of the lesser angle. In the tablets of air and water, the name reads right to left in the two upper quarters; in the two lower quarters it reads from left to right. In the tablets of earth and fire, left to right in the upper, but in the two lower quarters from right to left. Thus in the four tablets, the name reads:



Attribution of the Great Name to the Kerubic Rank

Though the last two groups of the name are the same, this does not indicate that the squares are identical. Their elemental composition differs enormously in each lesser angle, as a little later will be seen.

The servient squares beneath the Calvary Cross may be considered as of four vertical columns of four squares each, or, looking at it from a different angle, of four horizontal ranks also of four squares each. In attributing the letters of Tetragrammaton to these servient squares, the rule is that they follow the attributions of the Kerubic squares. The columns (that is, reading from above downwards) follow the order of the Kerubic squares above, and this order is invariably followed downwards for the ranks, reading from right to left. Thus in the air lesser angle of the air tablet, the Kerubic rank has attribution to the Name:

VAU HEH YOD HEH (Final)

Therefore applying the above rule, the servient squares beneath the Sephirotic Cross follow:

	VAU	HEH	YOD	HEH (Final)
HEH (Final)	*	*	*	*
YOD	*	*	*	*
HEH	*	*	*	*
VAU	*	*	*	*

From this example, it will be clearly indicated that each square has a double attribution to the letters of Tetragrammaton, none being the same since a column and a rank differ. Thus, column Vau rank Yod does not coincide in nature with column Yod rank Vau.

We must now approach the reason for this complex series of references of the letters of the Tetragrammaton to the squares. According to these attributions, so are certain astrological, tarot, geomantic, and Hebrew symbols referred to the squares.

It will be remembered that in attributing the letters of the name to the Great Cross, we subdivided the latter into groups or blocks of three squares each. Every block was attributed to some one letter of Tetragrammaton. Now the signs of the zodiac are to be attributed to the Great Cross, and each of those twelve signs is to be referred to three squares constituting one group or block. The order of their attribution is governed by the letters of the Great Name already referred to the arms of the Great Cross. For instance, fiery signs (Aries, Leo, and Sagittarius) are attributed to Yod. Watery signs (Cancer, Scorpio, and Pisces) are attributed to Heh. Airy signs (Gemini, Libra, Aquarius) are attributed to Vau. Earthy signs (Taurus, Virgo, and Capricorn) are attributed to Heh final.

Thus each group of three squares, constituting a single unit, is attributed to one sign of the zodiac, depending upon the letter of the name referred to that group. Each zodiacal sign, being divisible into three decanates, or divisions of ten degrees, it follows that each of three decanates of the sign may be referred to one of the squares in any group of three squares. The sign refers to the group, the decan refers to one square of that group.

The rule governing the attributions of the twelve signs to the Great Cross is: the four Kerubic or fixed signs (Taurus, Leo, Scorpio, and Aquarius) are referred to the squares of the Linea Spiritus Sancti. The four cardinal signs (Aries, Cancer, Libra, and Capricorn) are referred to the left side of the Linea Dei Patris Filiique, and the four mutable signs (Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius and Pisces) to the right side of the Linea Dei Patris Filiique.

The decanate system as employed by the Order will be found in the part of this book dealing with the significance of the tarot cards. They begin with the attribution of the first decanate of Aries to the planet Mars, and ending with the last decanate of Pisces also ruled by Mars. The order of planets for the decanates follows the order of Sephiroth on the Tree of Life: Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Sol, Venus, Mercury, and Luna.

There are thirty-six small cards of the tarot, as explained in the appropriate documents, attributed to the decanates of the twelve signs. Therefore to each of the decanate squares on the Great Cross will be attributed one of the small cards of the tarot. Two, three, and four of each of the four suits of tarot are referred to cardinal signs. Five, six, and seven to the Kerubic or fixed signs; and eight, nine, and ten to the mutable signs. Thus in the air tablet, the Great Cross shows the tarot and decanate attributions as shown.

Great Cross of the Air Tablet

The attribution of the Sephiroth to the ten squares of the Sephirotic Cross is shown on the admission badge to the twenty-seventh Path of Peh, and reproduced in one of the knowledge lectures.[2] The planetary attributions to the Sephirotic Cross as used in the Enochian system are rather different from those used on the Tree of Life. But the system that is here employed is constant, and applies to each of the sixteen Sephirotic Crosses on the four tablets.

In this mode of attributing the planets to the Sephiroth on the Calvary Cross of the lesser angles, Saturn is excluded, and Jupiter and the tarot trump, the Wheel of Fortune, is attributed to Kether. The title of this card is “the Lord of the Forces of Life,” and Kether is the origin and source of life.

To Chokmah is attributed Mercury, the tarot key, the Magician, “the Magus of Power,” seeing that Chokmah is the distributor of the power from Kether, even as Mercury is the messenger of Jupiter of classical mythology.

To Binah is referred the moon, and the tarot key “the Priestess of the Silver Star,” even as Binah is the completer of the triad of the supernals, and as it were High Priestess to the inferior Sephiroth. (Compare also, says S.R.M.D., the position of the path of Gimel in the Tree of Life.)

To Chesed, Venus, and the key of the Empress, "the Daughter of the Mighty Ones." Chesed is, as it were, the first of the inferiors below Binah, and the path of Venus is thus reciprocal between Chokmah and Binah, forming, as it were, the base of the triangle of the supernals.

To Geburah, Mars, and the tarot key of the Blasted Tower, "the Lord of the Hosts of the Mighty," even as Geburah represents strength and fiery power.

To Tiphareth is the sun, "the Lord of the Fire of the World," even as Tiphareth is, as it were, the heart and centre of the sun of life.

The remaining four squares of the Sephirotic Cross have no planetary or astrological attributions. The ten squares of the Sephirotic Cross also stand for the Ace and small cards of the suit represented by the element of the lesser angle. Thus wands are attributed to the fire angle, pentacles to the earth angle, etc.

The Kerubic squares are allotted, as their name implies, to the four Kerubim whose emblems follow the order of the letters of Tetragrammaton:

Yod	Heh
Lion—Leo	Eagle—Scorpio
King	Queen
Vau	Heh (final)
Man—Aquarius	Bull—Taurus
Prince	Princess

These last are of the suit corresponding to the element of the lesser angle as explained above, viz: wands to fire and Yod; cups to water and Heh; swords to air and Vau; pentacles to earth and Heh final.

It was previously shown how the squares of the servient part of each lesser angle were given a double attribution to the letters of the name. They were seen to be ruled by a letter governing the rank and also by a letter governing the column. In order to work out the astrological attributions of this allocation, note that the columns go by the triplicity of the Kerubic square at the top, the ranks by quality. By this method there results a highly intricate and ingenious subdivision of elements in the sub-elements of the lesser angles.

Yod and fire are referred to the cardinal signs, Aries, Cancer, Libra, and Capricorn.

Heh and water are referred to the kerubic or fixed signs, Taurus, Leo, Scorpio, and Aquarius.

Vau and air are referred to the mutable signs, Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius, and Pisces.

Heh final and earth are referred to the elements, fire, water, air, and earth.

As to the reasons of this latter attribution, S.R.M.D. says that the four cardinal signs are called the most fiery because most solar in nature. That is, the equinoxes and solstices occur when the sun is in these signs. The Kerubic or fixed signs are considered watery because they are the most shining and glittering in nature. The remaining four mutable signs are called the most airy because they are the most subtle in nature; while the four elements are the most earthy because their operation is mainly terrestrial. Incidentally, instead of the usual earth symbol, the planet Saturn is used in the Enochian system, because, to quote S.R.M.D., “though one of the seven lords who wander (planets), Saturn is yet here classed with those who abide because he is the heaviest of the seven and thus formeth a link between the Wanderers and Abiders.”

♉	♌	♃	🦅	♒
☽	♂	☉	♀	☿
♍	♐	7	♓	♊
♉	♌	8	♏	♒
♑	♈	9	♋	♎

Earth Angle of Water Tablet

One final set of attributions concerns the Tablet of Union, which is referred to spirit. It is employed, as before shown, in binding together the tablets, and in building up angelic names. Its attributions are to the four Aces of the elements and to the court cards. The Aces represent the root force, and the essential spiritual noumenon of the element. The court cards are the vice-gerents of the root force in the element.

	☸	🜁	🜄	🜃	🜂
🜁	Ace of Swords	Prince of Swords	Queen of Swords	Princess of Swords	King of Swords
🜄	Ace of Cups	Prince of Cups	Queen of Cups	Princess of Cups	King of Cups

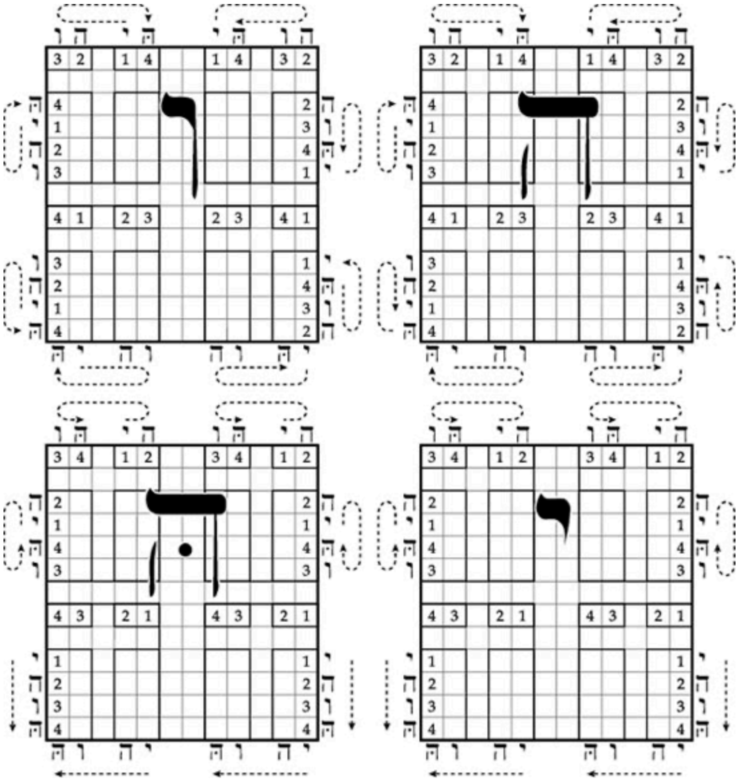
Elemental Correspondences of Court Cards

The foregoing methods of attributing the Enochian squares should be completely grasped before proceeding further. It is imperative to understand thoroughly the basic principles of attributions before beginning the analysis of the pyramids based on each square. What follows will have little meaning if the reader has not worked out these references and attributions for himself.

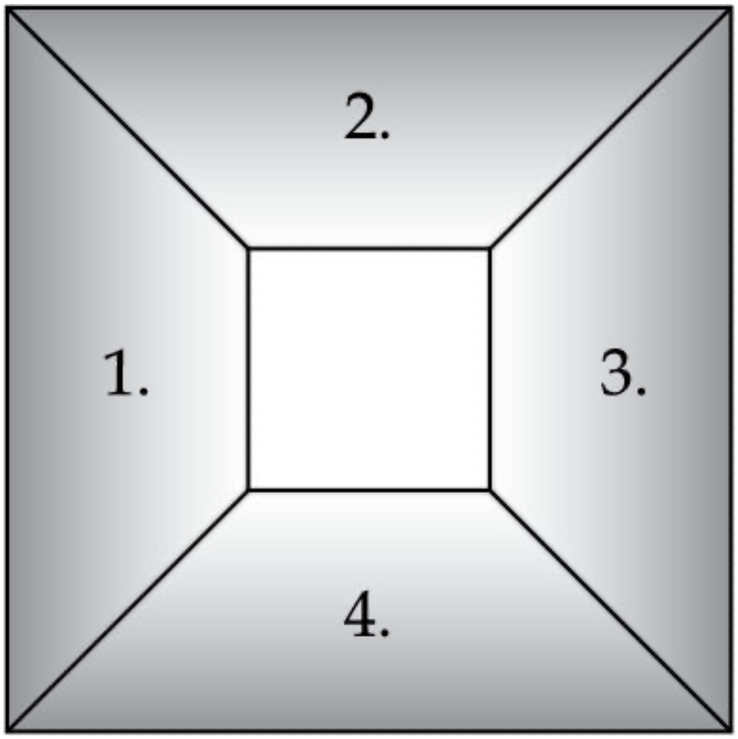
The following diagram shows the letters of Tetragrammaton attributed to the four Enochian tablets in detail. The figures refer to the order of reading the Hebrew letters, but must under no circumstances be confused with the order of the angelic names on the tablets, which always read from left to right.



Attribution of the Great Name to the Lesser Angles

In the 4$^{\text{xox}}$ = 7$^{\text{xhx}}$ grade the admission badge for the twenty-eighth Path was a pyramid. It was described as having a square base and four sides composed of equilateral triangles cut off so as to leave a flat top. These four sides were attributed to the four elements, and the flat top was conceived to be the throne of Eth, the spirit. Hitherto, the squares of the Enochian tablets have been treated as a single whole and as being flat. In reality, however, they are represented as being pyramids like that described above. The practical magical significance of this will be shown hereafter, but for the moment we must consider the method of producing the sides of these pyramids, and their attributions. With the exception of the Tetragrammaton letter, upon which everything else depends, all the other attributions appear and are included in the definition of the nature of the pyramid. Each side of the pyramid is coloured according to its own appropriate element, or left white for spirit. It by no means follows for example that a square from the airy angle of air will build up a completely yellow pyramid. But every square of the air tablet, in every angle, has at least one airy yellow side to its pyramid. Every square of the airy angle of all four tablets has at least one airy side.

On a flat surface, the pyramid is represented by dividing the square into four triangles, leaving a small square in the centre to mark the flat top. On this, if desired, the appropriate Enochian letter may be placed. The following will be the standard of reference, so that later should mention be made of triangle number two, the following diagram will show its position.



Pyramid of Four Triangles

The pyramid is supposed to be in position on the tablet, so that triangle number two points to the top of the tablet. To work out the pyramid of any square completely, it is necessary to know the attributions of the four triangles and the element of each. Since every tablet comprises four distinct divisions, each of these must be considered separately as each produces a different type of pyramid. The rules for analysing the pyramid based on the squares will be concisely put thus:

Great Cross

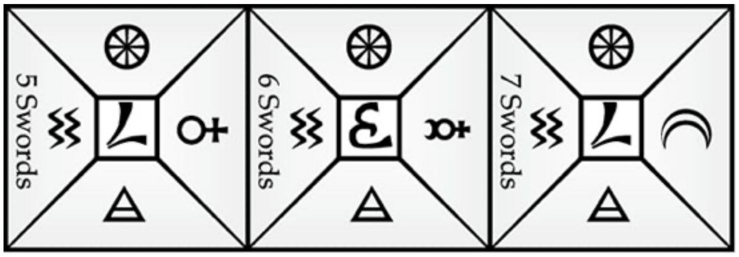
Triangle No. 1. Sign of zodiac, small card of tarot.
Triangle No. 2. Spirit.
Triangle No. 3. Planet of decan.
Triangle No. 4. Elemental symbol of the tablet.

Note that triangle number two on the squares of the Great Cross is always spirit, as indicating the operation of the spirit in the primary element, and is shown white. Triangle number four is coloured according to the element of the tablet; thus red for fire tablet, blue for water, black for earth, yellow for air. Triangle number one is to be coloured according to the triplicity of the sign attributed to it, that is as to whether it is of an earthy, fiery, watery, or airy nature. Triangle number three is to be coloured in that of the element ruled by the planet attributed to it. The rule governing the latter is:

Sun and Jupiter rule the element of fire.
Saturn and Mercury rule the element of air.
Venus and moon rule the element of earth.
Mars rules the element of water.

On the other hand, there are alternative methods, the use of which calls into operation other forces than elemental. Thus the colour of number one may be in the colour of the sign itself, as red for Aries, and blue for Sagittarius, etc. Triangle number three may also be coloured in the colour of the planet itself, orange for the sun, green for Venus, etc. If these latter are used, planetary and zodiacal forces would be inferred in lieu of purely elemental ones. The former, however, may be found to be the most practicable for most circumstances.

The method of applying these rules to the Great Cross may be seen in the following, consisting of the three left hand squares of the Linea Spiritus Sancti of the air tablet, showing the pyramids formed from the squares of the letters ORO:



Pyramids of ORO

Sephirotic Cross

Triangle No. 1. Elemental emblem of tablet.

Triangle No. 2. Emblem of Spirit.

Triangle No. 3. Elemental emblem of lesser angle.

Triangle No. 4. Sephirah. Letter of Tetragrammaton. Tarot card.

Colouring: No. 1, colour of the element of tablet. No. 2, always white. No. 3, elemental colour of lesser angle. No. 4, either white for Spirit, or in colour of Sephirah.

Kerubic Squares of the Lesser Angles

Triangle No. 1. Tarot card of lesser angle.

Triangle No. 2. Elemental emblem of tablet.

Triangle No. 3. Kerubic symbol answering to letter of Name.

Triangle No. 4. Elemental emblem of lesser angle.

No. 1 will agree with the colouring of No. 3 always. That is, the colour will be that of the element of the court card corresponding to the Kerub. No. 2 shows the elemental colour of the tablet. No. 4, elemental colour of the lesser angle.

Servient Squares

Triangle No. 1. Element of great tablet with astrological attribution.

Triangle No. 2. Elemental emblem of letter ruling the column with tarot trump.

Triangle No. 4. Elemental emblem of letter ruling rank with Hebrew letter corresponding to tarot trump in triangle No. 2.

The colouring of these triangles is the simplest because it follows its elemental emblem. It has not been mentioned before, but it is the rule, when drawing or painting these pyramids and triangles, to paint the symbols on the appropriate sides in complementary colours. Thus, to take triangle No. 1 of a servient square in the water angle of water, the colour will be blue to refer to the element of the tablet as a whole, while the appropriate astrological attribution will be painted on it in orange. This rule applies to all the squares.

The method sounds highly complex, but in practice it is much easier than it sounds. In fact, it takes far less time to work out a square than to describe the method.

Tablet of Union

Triangle No. 1. Element of column. (Spirit in first column).

Triangles No. 2 and No. 4. Always Spirit.

Triangle No. 3. Element of rank.

The colours of each of the triangles are clearly indicated.

I append below examples of the above, so that there may be no difficulty at all in understanding how this procedure obtains. Consider the earth lesser angle of the earth tablet; the servient square in rank Vau and column Vau. The column is ruled by Vau, attributed to air, therefore the astrological symbol will be an airy sign. The rank is ruled by Vau, therefore the symbol will be mutable air, Gemini. The tarot key for Gemini is the Lovers. The Hebrew letter attributed to it is Zayin. The geomantic attribution is Albus.

Pyramids with Symbolism

Take the water tablet, air angle, column Heh, rank Yod. The column is ruled by Heh which is attributed to water. Therefore the astrological symbol will be a watery sign.

The rank is ruled by Yod, therefore the symbol will be cardinal or fiery water—Cancer.

The tarot key for Cancer is the Chariot.

The Hebrew letter for Cancer is Cheth.

The geomantic attribution is Populus.

The following is by S.R.M.D. “Briefly, regarding the pronunciation of the angelical language, thou shalt pronounce the consonants with the vowel following in the nomenclature of the same letter in the Hebrew alphabet. For example, in Beth, the vowel following ‘B’ is ‘e’ pronounced AY. Therefore, if ‘B’ in an angelic name precede another as in ‘Sobha,’ thou mayest pronounce it ‘Sobeh-hah.’ ‘G’ may be either Gimel or Jimel (as the Arabs do call it) following whether it be hard or soft. This is the ancient Egyptian use, whereof the Hebrew is but a copy, and that many times a faulty copy, save in the divine and mystical names, and some other things.

“Also ‘Y’ and ‘I’ are similar, also ‘V’ and ‘U,’ depending whether the use intended be vowel or consonant. ‘X’ is the ancient Egyptian power of Samekh; but there be some ordinary Hebrew Names wherein ‘X’ is made Tzaddi.”

From one ritual written by S.A., we find the following given as to the pronunciation of names.

"In pronouncing the names, take each letter separately. M is pronounced Em; N is pronounced En (also Nu, since in Hebrew the vowel following the equivalent letter Nun is 'u'); A is Ah; P is Peh; S is Ess; D is Deh.

"NRFM is pronounced En-Ra-Ef-Em or En-Ar-Ef-Em. ZIZA is pronounced Zod-ee-zod-ah. ADRE is Ah-deh-reh or Ah-deh-er-reh. TAASD is Teh-ah-ah-ess-deh. AIAOAI is Ah-ee-ah-oh-ah-ee. BDOPA is Beh-deh-oh-peh-ah. BANAA is Beh-ah-en-ah-ah. BITOM is Beh-ee-to-em or Beh-ee-teh-oo-em. NANTA is En-ah-en-tah. HCOMA is Heh-co-em-ah. EXARP is Eh-ex-ar-peh."

S.R.M.D. calls attention, in the document "S," to some rather interesting, that is to say, suggestive, correspondences. It is to be noted that the number of squares in the vertical line of the Great Cross, that is in the Linea Dei Patris Filiique, will be twenty-six, which answers to the gematria or number of YHVH. Also the number of points in the geomantic symbols referred to the Kerubim, Fortuna Major to Leo, Rubeus to Scorpio, Tristitia to Aquarius, and Amissio to Taurus, are also twenty-six in number. The ten squares remaining on the horizontal bar of the Great Cross, that is five on each side of the descending column, and not considering the two squares on the centre where the shafts cross, will refer to the Ten Sephiroth. And the first three letters of those squares will symbolize the triad of the supernals operating through the Quadrangle.

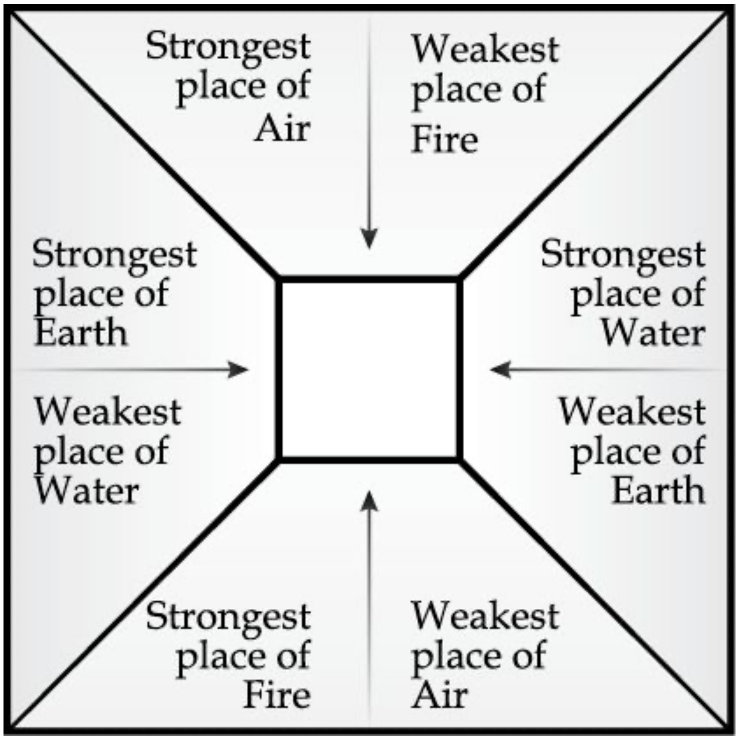
Looking at the horizontal line again, and considering its full quota of twelve squares, instead of ten as before, then since they are divided into a three, a four, and a five—as in OIP TEAA PDOCE—they may be said to symbolize the triad of the supernals, the tetrad of the elements, and the pentagram. Again, in the commencing triad of the Linea Spiritus Sancti of each tablet, it may be said that:

ORO will be symbolical of the voice of the Man Kerub.
MPH will be symbolical of the cry of the Eagle Kerub.
MOR will be symbolical of the low of the Bull Kerub.
OIP will be symbolical of the roar of the Lion Kerub.

There are various ways of looking at the pyramids prior to undertaking the practical work of using them as the symbol for skrying in the spirit-vision. S.R.M.D. suggests a useful mode of meditation which elaborates in a most illuminating way the ordinary attributions. He says: “Thou mayest regard the upper triangle (No. 2) as representing a force acting downwards. The lower triangle (No. 4) as a force striving upwards. The left hand triangle (No. 1) as acting horizontally from left to right, and the right hand triangle (No. 3) as a force acting from right to left. While the centre will be the common force. Thus:



Strongest place of Air
Weakest place of Fire
Strongest place of Earth
Weakest place of Water
Strongest place of Water
Weakest place of Earth
Strongest place of Fire
Weakest place of Air

Directions of Force in Enochian Pyramids

"Spirit is strong in any position. Remember that fire acteth most strongly upwards, air downwards, water from right to left horizontally, and earth from left to right. And in those tablet squares according to their positions in the great tablet. And thus canst thou apply thy reason unto the elucidation of the effect of the four forces thus rushing together."

Though this may sound wholly incomprehensible at first, a little reflection on the nature of the movement of these forces yields a wealth of ideas. S.R.M.D. provides a few examples at hazard of this analysis, and I quote them as follows:

"The square of 'A' of Exarp in the Tablet of Union.

Triangle No. 1. Queen of Swords.
Triangle No. 2. Spirit.
Triangle No. 3. Air.
Triangle No. 4. Spirit.

“Nearly all the squares of this tablet represent some combined effect of light and life. Here spirit acts both downwards and upwards. Air is not very strong in action when it is here placed; and the Queen of Swords represents the moist force of air, Heh of Vau. Therefore, if one could attribute a direct material action unto the squares of the Tablet of Union, the terrestrial effect would be that of a moist and gentle, scarcely moving, breeze; with a soft vibrating light playing through it, like the most gentle sheet-lightning in summer.”

It will aid the reader considerably if, when meditating upon these examples, he draws the pyramid with the triangles so that he can refer to it at a moment’s notice.

“The square ‘H’ of ‘MPH’ in the Great Cross of the water tablet.

Triangle No. 1. Seven of Cups.
Triangle No. 2. Spirit.
Triangle No. 3. Venus.
Triangle No. 4. Water.

“Here the action of water is extremely passive, Scorpio, representing especially still water, and Venus has her quiet action still more intensified. Therefore, were it not for the action of spirit, the effect would be rather evil than good, representing deception, and well summed up in the Seven of Cups, “the Lord of Illusionary Success.” But the action of the spirit makes it mild and beneficent. A gentle, peaceful force.

“The Square ‘O’ of ‘OMEBB’ in the Sephirotic Cross of the water lesser angle of the water tablet.

Triangle No. 1. Water.
Triangle No. 2. Spirit.
Triangle No. 3. Water.
Triangle No. 4. Geburah.

“Here water is extremely strong, and is stirred to action by the energy of Geburah. Were it not for the spirit it would be the destroying energy of a flood, but the latter renders its effect more gentle and beneficent, promoting the solution and nourishment of matter.

"The square 'M' of 'AISMT,' a Kerubic square of the fiery lesser angle of the earth tablet.

Triangle No. 1. Queen of Wands.
Triangle No. 2. Earth.
Triangle No. 3. Eagle Kerub. Water.
Triangle No. 4. Fire.

"Here earth acting downwards and fire upwards, the effect would be volcanic. The water is as strongly placed as the fire, rendering it explosive, though helping to stifle the fire by its union with the earth. The Queen of Wands equals the water of fire, Heh of Yod, reconciling these two elements. Therefore the whole effect would be to produce a moist generating heat, like that of a conservatory, or rather of a hothouse. A force intensely excitant and generative and productive. The earth force of the tropics."

"The servient square 'R' of 'BRAP' in the watery lesser angle of the fire tablet.

Triangle No. 1. Virgo. Fire.
Triangle No. 2. Earth.
Triangle No. 3. Water. Conjunctio.
Triangle No. 4. Air.

"Here water is in the strongest place, but otherwise the force of the square is somewhat different to the former, from the influence of air in the lowest triangle. The effect will then be that somewhat of lands—fertile indeed, but ultimating its harvest, and therefore not nearly as excitantly generative as in the former square. And the land of Virgo as usually described will be a very fair representation thereof."

The following statements concerning aspects of the philosophy underlying the Enochian tablets are also written by G.H. Frater S.R.M.D. Some of them are very profound and the student will do well if he gives them a good deal of attention—especially in connection with the idea of the projection of the Tree of Life into a solid sphere and forming five pillars. This part of the Enochian teaching is taken from a manuscript entitled “X. The Book of the Concourse of the Forces. Binding together the Powers of the Squares in the Terrestrial Quadrangles of Enoch.”

“As aforesaid the central points of these four Great Crosses do shew in the celestial heavens, and do correspond unto the four Tiphareth points referred to in the Book of the Astronomic View of the tarot. Naturally then the Linea Spiritus Sancti coincides with the zodiacal belt wherein is the path of the sun who is the administrant of the spirit of life, and “the Lord of the Fire of the World.” The four Linea S.S. then form the complete circle of the Ecliptic, a circle at the centre of the zodiacal circle.

“It is demonstrated in the tarot manuscripts that when the ten Sephiroth in their grouping which is called the Tree of Life are projected in a sphere (Kether coinciding with the North Pole, Malkuth coinciding with the South Pole, the pillar of Mildness with the axis) then the pillars of Severity and of Mercy are quadrupled, i.e., there are five pillars instead of three pillars.

“The same scheme is therefore applicable to the celestial heavens, and the mode of the governance of these tablets in the heavens is also set forth in the tarot manuscripts. But as before and as there is said, the rule of these four tablets, terrestrial as well as in the heavens, is in the spaces between the four pillars. That is, between the double pillars of Severity and Mercy. In these vast spaces at the ends of the universe are these tablets placed as watchtowers, and therein is their dominion limited on either side by the Sephirotic pillars, and having the great central cross of each tablet coinciding with one of the four Tiphareth points in the celestial heavens. Therefore even in the small squares into which each tablet is divided, each represents a vast area of dominion, having the correlation thereof in the universe, in the planets, in our Earth, in the fixed stars, and even in man, in animals, vegetables, and minerals.

"Therefore do the four perpendicular or vertical lines of the four crosses represent four great currents of force passing between north above and south below, intersecting the Tiphareth points and thus affirming the existence of the hidden central pillar of the Tree of Life forming the axis of the sphere of the celestial heavens.

"Therefore are these lines which are vertical called 'Linea Dei Patris Filiique,' as manifesting that central column wherein are Kether and Tiphareth, Macroprosopus and Microprosopus.

"The Calvary Cross of ten squares which are in each of the four lesser angles of each tablet are attributed unto the action of the spirit through the ten Sephiroth herein. This cross of ten squares is the admission badge of the twenty-seventh Path leading unto the grade of Philosophus, the only grade of the First Order in which all the tablets are shewn. It represents the Sephiroth in balanced disposition, before which the Formless and Void roll back. It is the form of the opened out double cube and altar of incense. Therefore it is placed to rule each of the lesser angles of each tablet.

"A knowledge of these tablets will then, if complete, afford an understanding of the laws which govern the whole creation. The dominion of the Tablet of Union is above that of the four terrestrial tablets and towards the north of the universe.

“Of the letters on the tablets, some be written as capitals. These are the initial letters of certain angels’ names drawn forth by another method, not now explained, and the offices of these do not concern a Zelator Adeptus Minor. Some squares have more than one letter. In these cases, either letter characterizes the square. The higher one is preferable. The lower is weaker. If two letters are side by side, the presumption is in favour of equality. Where two letters are in one square, the best plan is to employ both. But one alone may be used with effect.

“Of the difference between these mystical names of the angels of the tablets and the Hebrew names such as Kerub, Auriel, and Michael, etc. Those Hebrew angel names which have been taught unto the First Order are rather general than particular, attending especially to an office or rule whereunto such an angel is allotted. As it is written: ‘One angel does not undertake two messages.’ For these mighty angels do rather shew forth their power in the governance of the four great Sephirotic columns as aforesaid, viz: the double columns of Severity and Mercy when projected in a sphere, and this also is under the presidency of the Sephiroth. But the names of the angels of the Enochian tablets do rather express particular adaptations of forces shewing forth all variations and diverse combinations of those which are in the other case manifested in a more general way.”

It will be found written in the Clavicula Tabularum Enochi: [3] “Now we are to understand that there are four angel overseers.... Each one of these angels is a mighty prince, a mighty angel of the Lord and they are of Him. They are as chief watchmen and overseers, set over several and respective parts of the world, viz: east, west, north, south, as under the Almighty, their governor, protector, defender. And the seals and authority of whom are confirmed in the beginning of the world. To whom belong four characters, being tokens of the Son of God, by whom all things are made in the creation, and are the natural marks of his holiness.”

Now thou shalt observe that in the Book of the Concourse of the Forces, a sign is annexed unto each of the four tablets of the elements. That is, unto the tablet of air, a symbol of a T having four Yods above it.[4]

Unto the tablet of water a cross potent,[5] having two letters b. b., a figure 4, and a figure 6 in the angles thereof.

Unto the tablet of earth, a simple cross potent without additions.

Unto the fire tablet there is a circle having twelve rays. These be the sacred seals or characters alluded to in the preceding quotation. Thou shalt know that these four seals be taken from the Sigillum Dei Æmeth, after and according unto a certain guidance of letters which is there set forth. This "Liber Æmeth sive Sigillum Dei" that is the Book of Truth or the Seal of God entereth not into the knowledge of a Zelator Adeptus Minor.

From these four sigils there are four names drawn forth. From the Tau with four Yods or

T of the Sigillum Æmeth, T and 4 other letters are obtained, counting by the rule of 4

(from the T which is found at the top of the circle of letters and numbers on the Sigillum Dei Æmeth), thus:

4.	22.	20.	18.	l.	og.
T	h	a	o	8

This yields the name Tahaoelog for the air tablet.[6]

From b.4. 6.b. grouped about a cross, (note that T equals t, the cross equals th), is obtained: cross to h, then b.4., then 6.b., and continue 6:

4.	22.	b.	y.	6.	6.	a.	t.	14.	n.
Th	h	4	14	b	A	5	9	n.

yielding the name Thahebyobeaatanun for the water tablet.[7]

From the plain cross, which equals Th 4, proceed counting in each case forward as by numbers given:

4.	22.	11.	a.	o.	t.	h.
Th	h	A	5	10	11

yielding the name Thahaaothe for the earth tablet.[8]

From the twelve rayed circle, we begin with the middle circle on the Sigillum, the Greek Omega, the long o, and proceed counting 12 in each case, for the number of rays is 12 around the circle:

6.		o.	o.	22.	H.	6.	t.	n.
W.	h.	8.	17.	o.	12.	A.	9.

which yields Ohooohaatan for the fire tablet.[9]

These names are not to be lightly pronounced.

Note by Israel Regardie

Some remark obviously is required for the above. First, the Sigillum Dei Æmeth is part of the very complex system worked out by Dee and Kelly. No mention of it is made in any of the official Order teachings for the grade of Zelator Adeptus Minor other than the above. I have, through meditative and British Museum research, obtained a good deal of information about this Sigillum and associated “Enochiana,” but have decided to withhold publication for the time being since this volume is intended to reproduce veridical Order teachings and not the result of personal research. The names yielded by the analysis of the sigils are to be considered as the elemental kings of the entire tablet. There should be no confusion between the nature and function of the king whose name is derived from the whorl in the centre of the Great Cross, and the elemental king whose name is implicit in the sigil. The king of the quarter bearing the banners of the names of God is planetary in nature, representing rather the operation of the divine spirit through the element and its four sub-elements. Whereas the king whose name is derived from the sigil is a powerful elemental force. His operation is essentially elemental, and his nature is elemental, and he does not represent in any way the operation of the spirit. That is not to say that he is an evil force. On the contrary; but it is purely and intrinsically an elemental force and as such should be handled by invocation with great care.

Part Two: The Sphynxes and the Pyramids

The keys of the governance and combinations of the squares of the tablets. They are the sphynx and the pyramid of Egypt; that is, the combination of the Kerubs being the sphynx. The combination of the elements being the pyramid.

Now learn a mystery of the wisdom of Egypt: “When the sphynx and the pyramid are united, thou hast the formulae of the magic of nature.

“These are the keys of the wisdom of all time; and its beginning—who knoweth it? In their keeping are the sacred mysteries and the knowledge of magic and all the gods.”

In the ritual of the thirty-second Path leading unto the Theoricus grade, it is thus written: “The sphynx of Egypt spake and said: I am the synthesis of the elemental forces. I am also the symbol of man. I am life. I am death. I am the child of the night of time.”

The solid pyramid of the elements again is the admission badge of the twenty-eigth Path leading to the Philosophus grade. It is attributed to the four elements. Therefore on its base is the word Olahm, meaning “world,” and upon its sides are the names of the elements: Aesh, Ruach, Mayim, Aretz or Ophir. Yet the apex is not allowed to remain vacant, nor quite acute in shape, but is cut off and so a small square is formed at the apex, and the letters Eth, meaning “essence,” are placed therein.

This small square maketh of the pyramid a certain throne or shrine. On this throne a certain ruling force is seated. Within the throne is a sacred symbol. Place then within each pyramid its appropriate sphinx, and the image of its god above. Take thou each pyramid as the key of the nature of each tablet square. The sphinx of each will vary in form according to the proportion of the elements comprising the square. The god of Egypt, whose image is to be placed above each pyramid, shall represent the force ruling under the direction of the great angel of the square.[10] This god shall be the symbol of the power of the light acting therein, as the angel shall be the descent of that light itself. The angelic name may be typified by the correspondences of the four letters of the angel's name, adding AL to the name—the letters of the name standing for head, bust, arms, body, and lower limbs, etc., as taught in the instruction on telesmatic images. Place the name in Theban or Enochian letters on the girdle.

The four forms of the Sphynx are:

The bull................................wingless
The eagle or hawk................winged
The angel or man..................winged
The lion................................wingless

This variation as to wings is another reason why, in grouping the tablets and the lesser angles of the same, the two forms of air and water are placed above the two tablets of earth and fire.

From the pyramid of the square, the symbolic form of each sphinx is formed thus: The upmost of the four triangles (triangle No. 2) sheweth the head and neck, and in the case of the angel or eagle, it shows whether wings are to be added to the form of the sphinx. The two triangles right and left (triangles No. 1 and 3) show the body with the arms or forelimbs here also. If angel or eagle there are wings added unto the representation of the figure. The lowest triangle (No. 4) adds the lower limbs, and the tail of the bull, eagle, and lion.

When air and fire predominate there is a male tendency. When water and earth, the type tendeth to female.

It is to be understood that what is here written regarding the sphinx of the pyramid and the god of Egypt ruling above is applicable especially unto the sixteen squares of the servient angels in each lesser angle.

Concerning the skrying of the squares servient in the spirit vision. Have in readiness the necessary implements and insignia; also let the Zelator Adeptus Minor have before him the symbol of the pyramid of the square. Rehearse the angelic calls appropriate thereunto and, having invoked the appropriate names governing the plane and division thereof in question, let the Z.A.M. imagine unto himself that he is enclosed within that pyramid. Or let him believe that he is voluntarily standing within an atmosphere corresponding unto that symbolized by the pyramid of the square, whether of heat or moisture, of cold or dryness, or of combinations of these.

Let him then endeavour to follow the ray therefrom unto the limits of the macrocosmic world and to find himself in a scene corresponding unto the nature of the pyramid square. That is, either of landscape or clouds or water or fire or ether, vapour or mist or raying light or a combination or combinations of these, according unto the nature of the plane.

For the pyramids of the squares are not solid pyramids of brick or stone built by the hand of man. But rather the symbolical representation of the elemental formula governing the plane of that particular sphere.

Having arrived at the plane required, let the Z.A.M. invoke the god of Egypt who ruleth above the pyramid by the power of the angel of the sphere—the name formed by adding the appropriate Tablet of Union letter to the angel’s name. At the same time, vibrate the Egyptian (Coptic) name of the god or goddess, whereby he shall perceive before him the colossal symbolic form of the god or goddess. Let him again use the angelic formulae, and test it by the power of symbols and signs. If it abide these tests, thus showing it is a true image, then let him request it to make manifest before him the sphinx of its power.

This shall also appear in a colossal figure and shape, and should be tested by the proper formula. He shall continue his invocations until he can behold it clearly, even invoking the angel of the plane by the superior names, and by the god of Egypt. Also let him vibrate the name of the angel, invoking it by its own name, and by the knowledge of its symbolic (telesmatic) image, the sphinx and by the name of the god of Egypt, and by his own particular symbolic form, according to the formula of the square. Thus therefore in this manner only—if thou wishest to escape from delusion—shalt thou be able to discern truly, by skrying, the nature of the plane and of its operation. Standing before the sphynx, and saluting it with the proper signs, and invoking the god of Egypt by his proper and true names, thou shalt ask by the virtue and power of those symbols and names for the knowledge of the operations and influences of that plane. Thou shalt ask concerning the special attributes of that vast portion of the confines of the universe included in that sphere, its varying nature, its elemental nature; its inhabitants, elemental and spiritual, etc.; the operation of its rays through the greater world, that is, the universe; of its influence upon this particular planet, upon animals, plants, minerals, and lastly upon man the microcosm.

And when thou shalt have obtained all this reflect that even then it is but a small part of the knowledge of the wisdom of the formulae contained in the plane—even of that one square.

Notes by Frater S.R.M.D.

For quick working, make sixteen plain triangles; four red, four blue, four yellow, and four black.

Make also Kerubic figures. A red lion, a black bull, a blue eagle, a yellow angel.[11] Divide each into three, the centre piece being halved by a horizontal cut. From these make composite sphinxes to lay under the pyramid.[12]

Make small Egyptian gods to place above the pyramid.[13]

Make a shallow inverted pyramid of cardboard. Fill the sides as required with the coloured triangles to represent the several squares. Let the pyramid be shallow enough to show all four sides at once.

These be the gods of Egypt who rule above the pyramids of the sixteen servient angels and squares of each lesser angle. In the middle of each pyramid is the sphinx of its power. Revere then the sacred symbols of the gods, for they are the word manifested in the voice of nature. These be the Elohim of the forces of the eternal, and before their faces the forces of nature are prostrate.[14]

In order to show something of the nature of these Enochian pyramids as revealed by skrying therein with the spirit-vision, I have thought it advisable to include here two or three examples of simple visions obtained by members of the old Order. These are provided only as instances of the procedure and results to be obtained. Under no circumstances should the student permit his own skrying researches to be influenced and moulded by these visions. He must not attempt to make his own accounts of the nature of the pyramids accord with those given here. The technique alone should be noted, and the manner of applying tests—but nothing further than that should be used in actual practice.

Images of the Egyptian Gods

1. “A vision of the ‘N’ square in the airy lesser angle of the water tablet. The full name is nhdD, and the pyramid god is Ahephi.

“Having recited the fourth and tenth Enochian calls, and invoked the angelic names of the tablet of water, and the airy angle, I was carried up by the gentle moving waves of warm moist air, through which I could see bright blue sky with greyish white clouds moving across rapidly. I rose in the air till I found myself on a vast sandy plain, on the right little vegetation, on the left a broad river with trees and grass on its banks. A cool breeze was blowing from the river across the plain, and seemed to refresh the green after the heat of the day.

“I called on Ahephi to appear and the form gradually filled the place till the scene disappeared altogether. Tested by the letters, it grew immensely larger, and seemed to have a yellow and blue striped nemyss, whitish wrappings, with broad blue bands round it, and a greenish yellow light shown about it. I gave the L.V.X. signs and asked to be shown the sphinx of its power. This gradually appeared through the yellow light behind the godform, human head, very fair and bright face, wings, yellow and blue nemyss, claws of eagle extended in front, and hind legs and tail of a lion in reclining position.

“On asking for the action of the force of the square, was shown a bubble of water into which air was continually pouring, and expanding it till it burst and disappeared, the energy seeming then to pass into other forms and come under the rule of another square. It seemed a transitory action, more the initiator of fresh conditions than an end in itself. I asked its effect on the earth, and was taken to the scene I had left, and saw again how the moist breeze from the river gave fresh life to the vegetation which had flagged during the day. Asking its effect on the animal world, I was shown a deer standing by a lake. A current of force passing over it, seemed to bring the dawn of reason and glimmering of consciousness, the first conscious stirrings of an animal. Acting on man, it seemed to affect the brain, producing a vague waving motion which prevented fixity of thought and definiteness of idea, loss of the power of concentration.

“I then asked to see the elementals of the plane, and saw numbers of small-sized human figures, fair, active expression on face, bodies rather solid-looking compared to the head, large wings like dragon flies which were iridescent and seemed to reflect the colouring of things about them.

“I gave the $5^{xox} = 6^{xhx}$ signs to the sphinx and then called on the angel of the square. I saw above the god the figure I had drawn—the wings on the crown were blue, the cuirass bright steel with the eagle symbol on the breast in gold, the drapery below was a yellowish green, and the feet bare.”

2. “A vision of the square ‘l’ of the earthy lesser angle of the tablet of air. Name 1Sha. Anoubi is the pyramid god.

“This atmosphere was damp and cold. I stood on the summit of a mountain, cloud-enwrapped, and there, having rehearsed the angelical calls, and vibrated the names, I beheld the colossal form of Anubis, who, after a time, shewed me the sphinx of his power. This again shewed me a mighty angel who answered my signs, and when in that of the Theoricus I saw that a brilliant ray descended into the outstretched palm of each of her hands. On my asking for guidance and information, she gave me one of these rays, which I beheld as a crystal cord whose other end rested in the Eternal. The angel led me first among the ethers, and after a space I beheld stars and worlds innumerable.

“Through the brighter suns, particles passed—coming out the other side as blackened cinders. Then came forth a mighty hand which gathered these cinders and welded them into a mass, lifeless and vast. Then we passed to this earth—to a frigid scene, all snow and huge blocks of ice. The cold was intense, but I felt it not. Here were polar bears, and seals, as also many sea gulls. In places, the ice was stationary but again it was violently moved, block crashing against block with deafening roar. The inhabitants of the place were small and bloodless, wrapped chiefly in the skins of polar bears.

"The influence of this square on man makes him violently impetuous in the absence of difficulty, but instantly hopeless in the face of an obstacle, abandoning at once every project. The elementals are demure, birdlike creatures with semi-human faces. The spiritual beings are beautiful diaphanous angels, light brown in colour, with sweet, serious faces. They were all much occupied when I saw them. Some had silver in their left hands and mercury in their right, which they would put into a golden vessel together, whence came immediately a pale gold coloured flame which ever increased in size, spreading out through the worlds. Others bearing the legend 'Solve et Coagula' woven into their belts, mixed water and the principle of cold which they bore in a pair of scales, and the union was the ice of the region we were in. I was wondering whether all this had any counterpart in human nature, and its possibilities of development when I saw two types. One an ancient man toiling along most painfully, and the other a child skipping along light-heartedly. As they faded there rose between them a radiant figure clad in gold, bearing on her brow the sign Libra in living emerald. Then I understood that only in and by the reconciliation of these two forces, the fixed and the volatile, is 'the pathway of true equilibrium' found. On asking for plants I was shown mushrooms, which seemed to be particularly consonant to this square."

3. "A vision of the square 'C' in the watery lesser angle of the air tablet. Name: CPao. Hoorpokrati, the pyramid god.

"Read the third and seventh Calls. Vibrated Oro Ibah Aozpi, Bataivah, the angel CPao. The Egyptian god is Hoorpokrati.

"Found myself in the air in the midst of whirling clouds. Travelled on by the above names. Saw the angel of colossal size clothed in white. Tested with a letter Tau and Beth placed over the form, but there was no change, so removed those letters. Clouds seemed to be floating around the angel. Saluted with L.V.X. signs and asked to see Egyptian god, who appeared equally colossal while the angel floated up above his head. Tested as before.

"Vibrated Hoorpokrati second time, saluted as before, and asked to see the sphinx, both angel and Harpocrates returning the saluting sign. Sphinx then appeared with eagle head, lower part human, on one side eagle's wings, the other side human arms. Tested and saluted as before. The sphinx was of colossal size.

"Now I vibrated all the names repeatedly, and asked to see the meaning of the square. I was told that it was the astral region of storm and rain clouds with wind. I saw elementals in grey or pearly robes floating on the white fleecy clouds.[15] On dark thunderclouds were forms in dark lurid grey raiment, bearing thunderbolts like the images attributed to Zeus; many eagle-headed forms among them. Presently I saw one with a crown. I asked him to show me, and he took me by the hand and we traversed an enormous distance beyond the earth which became invisible. Then we soared upwards still in the midst of the same surroundings, till I saw the sun of that region, shining brightly, but clouds frequently drifting across it, while the clouds were now below us but only partially so. He told me that the nature of this square was to supply the forces on the astral plane which generate wind, rain, clouds, and storm on the natural plane. That these occurred throughout the universe but with different effect. That on our evil planet the effect was sometimes disastrous, being perverted from their original intention by our evil sphere. But on other higher planes the effect was always beneficial, clearing away that which had fulfilled its purpose and replacing it by fresh influence. The region attributed to this square seemed simply limitless. We traversed an enormous distance, yet seemed no nearer the end. So he brought me back again. Then I thanked him and saluted him, and descended to the former plane. There I thanked and saluted the angel, Hoorpokrati, and the sphinx. So I returned home, dimly seeing my natural body before reentering it."

FURTHER RULES FOR PRACTICE

By G.H. Frater Sapere Aude

1. Prepare for private use four tablets with correct lettering, as given in the official lecture, and a Tablet of Union.

2. Make the four tablets coloured as brilliantly and as flashingly as possible, and in exact proportion. This should be done with coloured papers. They may be done in watercolours, but this is not so good.[16]

3. The four minor implements are to be used with the Enochian tablets. A small altar should be arranged in the room at the time of working. It should be draped with a black cloth, with a lighted candle by the wand, incense burning by the dagger, gold and silver or bread and salt with the pentacle, and water in the cup.

4. Use the ritual of the hexagram for the invocation of the king and the six seniors.

5. Use the ritual of the pentagram for the spirit and the four elements.

6. The Calvary Cross names call forth with a word of six letters and command with a word of five. They rule the lesser angles in which they are situated, and should be used in the preliminary invocation.

7. The six seniors and kings are on a higher plane and should be invoked with the hexagram ritual. The names of the six seniors are each of seven letters, that of the king eight.

8. The deity names consist of a name of three letters, four letters, and five letters respectively, corresponding to the supernal triad, I.A.O. Also to the triad of YHVH, Yeheshuah, Yehovashah.

9. The name of the king and the letters from the centres of the great Central Crosses initiate the whirl, and should not be used by those who do not understand its action.

10. Remember that the east is attributed to air, south to fire, west to water, north to earth, when you summon spirits or forces. When, however, you go to seek spirits or forces on their own planes, the attribution of the elements to the cardinal points is as in the zodiac, as follows: east to fire, south to earth, west to air, north to water.

11. Bearing this in mind, place yourself (imaginatively) in the centre of a hollow cube, standing in the centre of the Tablet of Union between the O of HCOMA and the second N of NANTA:

E	X	A	R	P
		x
N	A	N	T	A
B	I	T	O	M

Now imagine the four elemental tablets standing round you like the four walls of a room, that is, at the four cardinal points. This is subjective working.

12. Another method is to imagine a moonstone spheroid, containing the universe, yourself standing as it were, at first, in the centre, and the Tablet of Union at the North and South Poles. At the same time divide the surface into four quarters and imagine yourself outside the spheroid. This is objective working.

13. These tablets can be applied to the universe, to the solar system, to the earth, or to man himself. “As above, so below.”

14. Perhaps the most convenient method for a beginner to adopt is to apply this scheme to the earth, treating the three deity names as the three signs of the zodiac in one quarter. For example, take the fire tablet and place OIP on the sign Leo, TEAA in Virgo, and PDOCE in Libra. And so on with the other god names, treating the Kerubic sign as the point de départ, one quarter of a house in astrology being roughly equal to the square of each letter.

Each of these spaces, under these circumstances, would appear to be governed by a heroic figure of, say, twelve feet high, not winged. But the spirit names and the names above the Calvary Cross, even on the earth plane, bring forth figures of tremendous size and beauty, which could easily lift a human being in the palm of the hand. From the fiery lesser angle of fire, I have seen AZODIZOD, the figure being fiery red with flaming wings and hair of emerald green. ZODAZODEE, black and white, flashing and flaming. EEZODAHZOD, blue and orange, with a mist of flame about him. ZODEEZODAH, orange, with hazy gold wings like gold gauze, and nets of gold around him.

Having selected one of the above methods, let the Zelator Adeptus Minor perform the lesser banishing rituals with the sword. Invoke, with the minor implement, the element required.

Our example being the square of OMDI, a watery and earthy square in the lesser angle of earth in the great southern quadrangle or fire tablet, we take the fire wand. In the four quarters we invoke, with the equilibriating pentagram for actives, and the fire pentagram, using only the tablet names: "EDELPERNAA, (the great king of the south). VOLEXDO and SIODA, (the two deity names on the Sephirotic Calvary Cross). I command ye in the divine name OIP TEAA PEDOCE and BITOM that the angel who governs the watery and earthy square of OMDI shall obey my behest and submit to me when I utter the holy name OOMDI (pronounced Oh-Oh-Meh-Deh-ee)."

Having repeated this invocation in the four quarters, turn to the east if you wish to go to the plane or to the south if you wish to invoke the spirits to come to you. Look at the painted tablet which you have prepared until you can carry it in your mind, then close the eyes and vibrate the name OMDI and OOMDI until your whole body trembles and you almost feel a sensation of burning.[17]

Then pass through the tablets and try to see some sort of landscape. My experience of this particular plane was a dull red crumbling earth. I first found myself in a cave. As a symbol I was told that this square of OMDI was like the roots of a tiger lily; the square MDIO to the right, representing the life working in it. The square IOMD to the left, represented the sap flowing through the stalk and the leaves, as it were; the square DIOM to the left of that, the orange flower with the black spots upon it, fitly representing air, fire, and earth—yellow, red, and black.

Afterwards I invoked the king and six seniors to explain the general bearings of the quadrangle. After passing through several fiery planes, each of them of greater whiteness and brilliance than the last, I seemed to be stationed on a high tower situated in the centre of the quadrangle between the two a's in the centre of the Great Cross, and I was told by the six seniors that they were partly representative of the planets, but that their names should really be read in a circle, in a way we should be taught later, etc.

Final note. From the lectures circulated among the adepti,[18] I have gathered that the angels placed over the Kerubic squares of the lesser angles of the great quadrangle have the following properties:

Air angle. "Knitting together and destruction." Centrifugal and centripetal forces. Expansive and contractive, etc.

Water angle. "Moving from place to place." Motion, vibration, changing of forms.

Earth angle. "Mechanical crafts." Creative or productive of results on the material plane.

Fire angle. "Secrets of humanity." Controlling human nature, clear vision, etc.

And that the subservient angels of these angles, that is the angels of the sixteen servient squares under the Sephirotic Cross, rule:

Air angle. "Elixirs." Purification from illusions, diseases, sins, etc. by sublimation.

Water angle. "Metals." the right methods of polarizing the soul so as to attract the L.V.X.

Earth angle. "Stones." The fixing of the higher self in the purified body.

Fire angle. "Transmutations." The consecration of the body and the transmutation brought about by consecration.

Note by Israel Regardie: It is to be noted that the lesser angles in each quadrangle have identical properties and qualities differing only according to the primary element of the tablet in which they are situated. That is, the lesser angle of air in the air quadrangle will be very similar in nature to the lesser angle of air in the water tablet, or the earth and fire tablets; and that the only difference between them will be in the nature of their particular quadrangle. The lesser angle of air is said to be concerned with "physic" or healing. The use of the lesser angle of air in the fire tablet would have to be for quite different objects and purposes than for example the air lesser angle of the earth tablet. And so for the other lesser angles in the primary elements.

Part Three: The Forty-Eight Angelical Keys or Calls

These calls or keys which follow are only to be made use of with the greatest care and solemnity, especially if they be pronounced in the angelical language as given. Anyone profaning them by using them with an impure mind, and without a due knowledge of their attribution and application, shall be liable to bring serious spiritual and physical harm unto himself.

The first nineteen calls or keys, of which eighteen alone are expressed, are attributed unto, and to be used with, the Tablet of Union and the four other terrestrial Enochian tablets.

The First Key hath no number and cannot be expressed, seeing that it is of the Godhead. And therefore it hath the number of 0 with us, though in the angelic orders it is called first. Therefore, their second key is with us the first.

Unto the Tablet of Union are attributed six calls, of which the first is the highest and above the other five. The remaining twelve calls, together with four of those belonging unto the Tablet of Union, are allotted unto the four tablets of the elements.

The First Key governeth generally, that is as a whole, the Tablet of Union. It is to be used first in all invocations of the angels of that tablet but not at all in the invocations of the angels of the other four tablets.

The Second Key is to be used as an invocation of the angels of the letters E.H.N.B. representing the especial governance of the spirit in the Tablet of Union. It is also to precede in the second place all invocations of the angels of that tablet. Like the First Key it is not to be employed in the invocations of the angels of the four other tablets.

(The numbers such as 456 and 6739, etc., which occur in some of the calls contain mysteries which are not here to be explained.)

The next four keys or calls are used both in the invocations of the angels of the Tablet of Union, and in those of the angels of the four terrestrial tablets as well. Thus:

The Third Key is to be used for the invocation of the angels of the letters of the line EXARP, for those of the air tablet as a whole, and for the lesser angle of this tablet which is that of the element itself—air of air.

The Fourth Key is to be used for the invocation of the angels of the letters of the line HCOMA, for those of the water tablet as a whole, and for the lesser angle of this tablet—water of water.

The Fifth Key is to be used for the invocation of the angels of the letters of the line NANTA, for those of the tablet of earth as a whole, and for the lesser angle of this tablet—earth of earth.

The Sixth Key is to be used for the invocation of the angels of the letters of the line BITOM, for those of the tablet of fire as a whole, and for the lesser angle of this tablet—fire of fire.

This finishes the employment of the keys of the Tablet of Union. The remaining twelve keys refer to the remaining lesser angles of the four terrestrial tablets, as hereafter set forth in the following table.

Enochian Keys or Calls

Key	First Words	Government
lst	I reign over you, saith the God of justice.	Tablet of Union as a whole
2nd	Can the wings of the winds understand your voices of wonder?	E.H.N.B.
3rd	Behold, saith your God, I am a circle, on whose hands stand twelve kingdoms.	EXARP and tablet of air; IDOIGO and air of air.
4th	I have set my feet in the south and have looked about me; saying:	HCOMA and tablet of water; NELAPR and water of water.
5th	The mighty sounds have entered into the third angle.	NANTA and tablet of earth; CABALPT and earth of earth
6th	The spirits of the fourth angle are nine, mighty in the firmament of waters.	BITOM and tablet of fire; RZIONR and fire of fire
7th	The east is a house of virgins singing praises amongst the flames of first glory.	Water of air; LILACZA
8th	The mid-day, the first, is as the third heaven made of hyacinthine pillars.	Earth of air; AIAOAI
9th	A mighty guard of fire with two-edged swords flaming:	Fire of air; AOUVRRZ
10th	The thunders of judgment and wrath are numbered, and are harboured in the north	Air of water; OBLGOTCA in the likeness of an oak.
11th	The mighty seats groaned aloud and there were five thunders which flew into the east.	Earth of water; MALADI
12th	O you that reign in the south and are 28, the lanterns of sorrow.	Fire of water; IAAASD

13th	O you swords of the south which have 42 eyes to stir up the wrath of sin.	Air of earth; ANGPOI
14th	O you sons of fury, the children of the just which sit upon 24 seats.	Water of earth; ANAEEM
Key	First Words	Government
15th	O thou, the governor of the first flame, under whose wings are 6739 which weave.	Fire of earth; OSPMNIR
16th	O thou, second flame, the house of justice, which hast thy beginnings in glory.	Air of fire; NOALMR
17th	O thou third flame, whose wings are thorns to stir up vexation:	Water of fire; VADALI
18th	O thou mighty light, and burning flame of comfort.	Earth of fire; UVOLBXDO

Wherefore unto the tablet of air are attributed the Third, Seventh, Eighth, and Ninth Keys. Unto the tablet of water, the Fourth, Tenth, Eleventh, and Twelfth Keys. Unto the tablet of earth, the Fifth, Thirteenth, Fourteenth, and Fifteenth Keys. And unto the tablet of fire, the Sixth, Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Keys.

So that, to invoke, for example, the angels of the line NANTA of the Tablet of Union, thou shalt first read the First and Second Keys, and then the Fifth Key, and then employ the necessary names.

And to invoke the angels of the lesser angle IDOIGO, air angle of the tablet of air, thou shalt read the Third Key only, and then employ the necessary names.

But to invoke the angels of the lesser angle VADALI, water angle of the tablet of fire, thou shalt first read the Sixth Key, and then the Seventeenth Key, and after that use the necessary names. Whereas, for the angle of fire of fire therein, the Sixth Key alone would suffice, as also for the king and angelical seniors of that tablet.

And so of the other angles of the other tablets, these rules shall suffice.

Now, though these Calls are thus to be employed to aid thee in the skrying of the tablets in the spirit vision, and in magical working therewith, yet shalt thou know that they be allotted unto a much higher plane than the operation of the tablets in the Assiatic world. And, therefore, are they thus employed in bringing the higher light and the all-potent forces into action herein; and so also, are they not to be profaned, or used lightly with an impure or frivolous mind as before said.

Also these Calls may be employed in the invocation of the chiefs of the elementals according to the title of the Book "T" associated therewith. And in this case, it will be well to employ the names of the archangels Michael, Raphael, etc., and their inferiors. And thou shalt understand that these Hebrew names are more general as representing offices, while those of the angelic tablets are more particular as representing natures.

The Calls or Keys of the thirty aethers be all one in form, only that the particular name of the aether in question is employed, such as ARN, ZAA, etc.

THE FIRST KEY: Tablet of Union

I reign over you	saith the God of Justice	in power exalted above

Your creation.

Qa-A-An.

THE FOURTH KEY: HCOMA, Water

I have set	my feet in	the south	and have looked about me	saying
Othil	Lusdi	Babage	Od Dorpha	Gohol

Are not	the thunders of increase	numbered	thirty-three
G-Chis-De	Avavago	Cormp	P D

Which reign	in the second angle?	Under whom	I have placed
Ds Sonf	Vi-Vi-Iv	Casarmi	Oali

Nine six three nine	whom none	have yet numbered but one:
MAPM	Sobam Ag	Cormpo Crp L

In whom	the second beginning of things	are and wax strong,
Casarmg	Cro-Od-Zi	Chis Od Vgeg

Which also successively	are the	numbers of time,	and their powers
Ds T Capimali	Chis	Capimaon	Od Lonshin

Are as the first	4, 5, 6.	Arise,	ye sons of pleasure,	and visit the earth:
Chis Ta L-O	CLA	Torzu	Nor-Quasahi	Od F Caosga

For I am the Lord	your God	which is	and liveth for ever.
Bagle Zire	Mad	Ds I	Od Apila

In the name of the Creator,	move and	show yourselves
Do-O-A Ip Qaal	Zacar Od	Zamran
As pleasant deliverers	that you may praise Him	amongst
Obelisong	Rest-El	Aaf

The sons of men.
Nor-Molap

THE FIFTH KEY: NANTA, Earth

The mighty sounds	have entered	into the third angle	and
Sapah	Zimii	D U-I-V	Od
Are become	as olives	in the Olive Mount	looking with gladness
Noas	Ta Qanis	Adroch	Dorphal
Upon the earth	and	dwelling in	the brightness of the heavens
Caosg	Od	Faonts	Piripsol

As continual comforters.	unto whom	I fastened	pillars of gladness
Ta Blior	Casarm	A-M-Ipzi	Nazarth

19	and gave them	vessels	to water the earth	with all her creatures:
AF	Od Dlugar	Zizop	Zlida Caosgi	Tol Torgi

And	they are the	brothers	of the first	and the second
Od	Z Chis	E Siasch	L	Ta-Vi-U

And the beginning of their own	seats	which are garnished with
Od Iaod	Thild	Ds

Continual burning lamps	6, 9, 6, 3, 6	whose numbers
Hubar	P E O A L	Soba Cormfa

Are as the first,	the ends,	and the content	of time
Chis Ta La	Vls	Od Q-	Cocasb

Therefore come ye	and obey your creation.	Visit us	in peace
(E) Ca Niis	Od Darbs Qaas	F	Etharzi

And comfort.	Conclude us	receivers of	your mysteries.	For why?
Od Bliora	Ia-Ial	Ed-Nas	Cicles	Bagle

Our lord and master is the All One!

Ge-Iad I L

THE SIXTH KEY: BITOM, Fire

The spirits of	the fourth angle	are nine,	mighty in the firmament
Gah	S Diu	Chis Em	Micalzo Pil-

Of waters:	whom the First hath planted	a torment to the wicked
Zin	Sobam El Harg	Mir Babalon

And	a garland to the righteous:	giving unto them fiery darts
Od	Obloc Samvelg	Dlugar Malprg

To vanne	the earth,	and	7, 6, 9, 9	continual workmen
Ar	Caosgi	Od	ACAM	Canal

Whose courses visit	with comfort	the earth,	and are in government
Sobol Zar F	Bliard	Caosgi	Od Chisa Netaab

And continuance as	the second	and the third.	Wherefore,
Od Miam Ta	Viv	Od D	Darsar

Hearken unto my voice.	I have talked of you	and I move you
Solpeth Bi-En	B-Ri-Ta	Od Zacam

In power and presence:	whose	works	shall be a song of honour
G-Micalza	Sobol	Ath	Trian Lu-Ia He

And the praise of your God	in your creation.
Od Ecrin Mad	Qaa-On.

THE SEVENTH KEY: Water of Air

The east	is a house of virgins	singing praises	amongst the flames
Raas	I Salman Paradiz	Oe-Crimi	Aao Ial-

Of first glory,	wherein	the Lord hath opened His mouth	and they are

Become	28	living dwellings	in whom	the strength of man
Noas	NI	Paradial	Casarmg	Vgear

Rejoiceth	and	they are apparelled with	ornaments of brightness
Chirlan	Od	Zonac	Luciftian

Such as work	wonders on all creatures.	Whose kingdoms	and
Cons Ta Vaul	Zirn Tol Hami	Sobol Ondoh	Od

Continuance	are as	the third	and fourth,	strong towers
Miam	Chis Ta	D	Od Es	V-Ma-Dea

And	places of comfort,	the seat of mercy	and	continuance.
Od	Pi-Bliar	Othil Rit	Od	Miam

O ye servants of mercy	move,	appear,	sing praises	unto the Creator!
C-Noqol Rit	Zacar	Zamran	Oe-Crimi	Qaada.

And be mighty	amongst us!	For to	this remembrance
Od O-Micaolz	Aaiom	Bagle	Papnor

Is given power,	and our strength	waxeth strong	in our comforter!
I Dlugam Lonshi	Od Vmplif	V-Ge-Gi	Bigliad

THE EIGHTH KEY: Earth of Air

The mid-day,	the first,	is as the third heaven	made of hyacinthine
Bazm	Elo	I Ta Piripson	Oln Nazavabh

Pillars	26	in whom the elders	are become strong,	which I have

These first eighteen Calls are in reality nineteen—that is, nineteen in the celestial orders, but with us, that first table hath no Call and can have no Call seeing it is of the Godhead.

Thus, then, with us it hath the number of “0,” though with them, that of “1” (even as the first key of the tarot is numbered “0”); and therefore, that which is with us the Eighteenth Key, is with them the nineteenth.

After these first eighteen, follow the Calls and Keys of the Aires or Thirty Aethers, which are the same in substance, though varied by the name belonging thereto.

Part Four: Enochian or Rosicrucian Chess

This is one of the subdivisions of the angelic system of tablets about which, sad to say, very little can be said. No one in the Order, or my temple, seemed to know anything about it. Whether this same condition applies to the other temples is hard to say, though, from conversation with certain of the adepti of those temples, I gather the same conditions there prevailed. Nothing that was of practical value, as throwing any light on the nature and function of the game, was thrown on the subject by any of the Order members within the sphere of my acquaintance. It is probable that the knowledge of this system died with the early members. All that I ever heard were fulsome praises of its remarkable divinatory capacity, together with quite a few amusing comments by those who manifestly knew nothing about it, though no precise indication was conveyed as to its procedure. On two of three occasions I have asked adepti of the rank of $7^{xox} = 4^{xhx}$ to play a game with me using my chess pieces and boards though each politely backed out of the invitation. Also the unmounted state of the Order chess pieces was a clear indication that they had never and could never have been employed—like other aspects of the Order teaching. And the actual documents on the subject that were shown to me were vague and obviously incomplete, giving no indication as to the true nature of this matter. No doubt it was intended, by those who wrote the papers and devised the system, that the adept should apply his own ingenuity to the bare bones provided of the game, and formulate from that skeleton outline, as from the Enochian tablets themselves, a complete system of initiation, and a profound magical philosophy. It is not therefore my intention to say very much about Rosicrucian chess, although it can be stated that the perspicacious student will divine ideas of great import and discover a depth of magical significance hidden under the cloak of an apparently trivial game.

However, the student who has mastered the foregoing sections of the Book of the Concourse of the Forces will no doubt be able to divine the relationship existing between the profundities of the Enochian tablets and this chess game. It will have been necessary as a preliminary step to have become perfectly familiar with the attributions of the squares, so that any pyramid can be built up instantaneously in the imagination too. By this, I mean, that while playing a chess game, the movement of a piece from one square to another should provide much material for thought, for the squares on the boards, as on the tablets, may be formulated as pyramids. Some experience, also, in employing the pyramids for skrying in the spirit vision will be required before any real appreciation of Enochian chess can be acquired.

In this game, the pieces are Egyptian godforms, and the boards are certain adaptations of the Enochian tablets. The Tablet of Union, however, is not used. Tablets are reproduced as chessboards minus the Great Central Cross, the Sephirotic Cross, and the Kerubic squares over the Calvary Cross in each lesser angle. This leaves only the servient squares in each of the four lesser angles—sixteen in number, which gives us sixty-four squares per board—the number of squares in the ordinary chessboard.

One of the papers written by Greatly Honoured Frater N.O.M. gives a short history of chess as it was derived from the Indian Chaturanga, the Persian Shatranji, and the Arabic chess. But since it contains very little that is of any practical import, I have thought better not to include it.

A few words now as to the nature of the boards. The boards consist of the purely elemental part of each tablet. There is nothing in the symbolic structure of the board to suggest the operation of the spirit in any of its aspects through the elements. This operation of the spirit and its potencies, however, is indicated not by the squares, but by the pieces and their movements over the board.

To be of any real magical value, the board should be a sort of talisman or flashing tablet. That is, it should be fully painted, showing all the triangles of the pyramids as brightly and as flashingly as possible. The little flat squares shown at the summit of the pyramid, indicating the throne of the godform, are not necessary on these boards. The triangles are completely formed, and the resulting pyramidal shape is not truncated. The four angles of each tablet will thus stand out quite brightly, since the elemental colour of the quarter will show its nature, even though the triangles of yellow, blue, black, and red will jostle each other cheek by jowl. When fully painted, the board is most impressive as a flashing tablet. The student may know he has done his work properly when there appear white flashings at the angles of the squares. This is important, for the object of a flashing tablet is to attract an appropriate type of force. And if these chessboards are made as flashing tablets, they will automatically attract force and their utilization will become the more significant. In brief, each square is, as it were, the name and symbolic address of a different angelic force. The flashing squares will attract the commencement of the operation of that type of angelic power, and the movement of the chess godforms over the squares may produce even brighter flashes and indicate the operation of the divine forces therein. With these hints the student is left to work this out for himself.

There will be, in short, four different boards. Each is representative of one of the four quadrangles or watchtowers of the elements, and the angelic names on the latter will be implied on the boards even although no letters or names are painted on them. The use of any of the four boards will depend upon particular purposes, and the attributions of elements as in the diverse schemes of divination will determine which of the four boards must be used at any given time. In tarot, the element of air, the sword suit, indicates sickness and sorrow and unhappiness generally. Hence, in Enochian chess, for divining for some such question as touches upon trouble or unhappiness the air board would be employed. The fire board will represent the tarot suit of wands, implying swiftness, energy, activity. The water board indicates the tarot suit of cups of pleasure, happiness, merry-making, and marriage. The earth board will refer to all material plane matters of money, work, employment, occupation, and so forth.

The four boards of the Rosicrucian game, although different, nevertheless agree in certain particulars. In each board it is convenient to speak of the arrangement of the lesser angles as an upper and lower rank—air and water forming the upper rank and earth and fire the lower.

It is evident that the columns of the one rank are continuous with those of the other; and in this continuity a certain regular rule is observable. Every column of eight squares commencing in the upper rank is continued below by a column of the opposite element.

Thus the fiery columns below invariably stand on the watery columns; the watery on the fiery; the airy on the earthy; and the earthy on the airy.

A different arrangement of the horizontal files or ranks of squares is observable, and there is a difference in the upper and lower tablets.

In the upper tablets the Kerubic rank of squares is continuous with the elemental rank; and the cardinal is continuous with the common sign rank, whereas in the lower tablets of earth and fire the various ranks—Kerubic, cardinal, etc., are continuous right across the board.

The pieces employed are, as previously remarked, Egyptian godforms. A full set of chess pieces numbers twenty men and sixteen pawns. (Note the possible relationship of the thirty-six pieces to the thirty-six decanate cards of the tarot.) The game is played by four players, representing the four lesser angles of the board, thus giving each player one set of five pieces and four pawns. The five pieces represent the operation of the spirit and four elemental rulers—the five points of the pentagram, the five letters of YHShVH, and the tarot Ace and court cards. The pawns are their servants or vice-gerents. Strictly to be in order, each of the twenty principal pieces represents a different godform, thus:

Fire set:
  King—Kneph
  Knight—Ra
  Queen—Sati-Ashtoreth
  Bishop—Toum
  Castle—Anouke

Air set:
  King—Socharis
  Knight—Seb
  Queen—Knousou Pekht
  Bishop—Shu Zoan
  Castle—Tharpeshest

Water set:
  King—Ptah
  Knight—Sebek
  Queen—Thouerist

Bishop—Hapimon
Castle—Shooeu-tha-ist

Earth set:
King—Osiris
Knight—Horus
Queen—Isis
Bishop—Aroueris
Castle—Nephthys.

However, this tends to confusion, creating in practice far too complex a game. It will be found that four sets of the same five godforms will suffice. There are only five major godforms, the others being variations or different aspects of those types. These are:

Osiris, bearing crook, scourge, phoenix wand. He is represented as sitting on a throne, silent and unmoving. He is the king and represents spirit, the operation of the Great Cross in the tablets. He corresponds to the Ace in tarot, the root-force of any element.

Horus, a god with hawk's head, double mitre, and standing upright, as though to stride forward. He is the knight of Enochian chess and represents the operation of the ten-squared Sephirotic Cross in the fire angle of any tablet or board, and corresponds to the king in the tarot, the figure astride a horse.

Isis, an enthroned goddess with a throne symbol mounted on the vulture headdress. In Rosicrucian chess, Isis is the queen, and represents the operation of the Sephirotic Cross in the water angle of any tablet. She corresponds to the tarot queen who is shown seated on a throne.

Aroueris, a human shaped god, with a double mitre. He is the bishop in Enochian chess, and his form is that of a standing figure, to indicate his swift action. He represents the operation of the Sephirotic Cross in the airy angle of any tablet, and represents the prince or knight of the tarot—the figure driving a chariot.

Nephthys, a goddess with an altar or crescent symbol above the vulture headdress. She is the castle or rook of the chess game. This piece is always represented as somewhat larger than the others, and is enclosed within a rectangular frame, within which she is enthroned. Her office is the representation of the operation of the Sephirotic Cross in the earth angle of any tablet, and represents the Princess or Knave of the tarot —the amazon figure who stands alone.

These are the five principal forms used for each of the four angles of the board. Some difference should be made in the tone of the colouring of the front or face of the piece to indicate its angle on the board. Coloured bands may suffice for this purpose. Moreover the back of the piece—for it is customary to use flat pieces, not round as in ordinary chess—should be painted in the appropriate colour of the element it represents so as to avoid confusion in the recognition of its power. Thus the back of the king, an Osiris form, should be painted white to represent spirit, and this rule applies to all four kings in the four angles. The knight, Horus, should be coloured red. The queen, Isis, should be blue; the bishop, Aroueris, yellow, and the castle, Nephthys, should be black and set in a large frame. Each piece should be cut about three inches high.

For practical use, these pieces should be mounted on square wooden bases, and those bases painted in different colours. It will be by the bases that their place on the board may be recognized. For example, there are four sets of chess pieces to be set out in the four corners of the board. Each piece is more or less like its corresponding piece in some one of the other corners. The pieces placed in the air quarter of the board, therefore, will be mounted on yellow bases. Those in the water angle will have blue bases. The pieces in the earth angle will have black bases, and those in the fire quarter will have red bases. Thus, as in the four angelic tablets, there results a minute subdivision of the sub-elements of the tablet. There will be an Osiris piece, a king with a white back, on a yellow base, indicating that he is a king belonging to the air angle. He represents the sub-element of spirit of air, the most spiritual and subtle phase of that element, the tarot Ace of Swords. A king with a blue base indicates his place in the watery angle. A queen, an Isis figure with a blue back, set on a red base, shows that she is the queen of the fire angle, representing the watery aspect of the fire sub-element of any tablet, the Queen of Wands. A bishop, yellow backed, mounted on a black base, shows that he belongs to the earth angle, as against a bishop with a yellow base whose place is in the air angle and who, therefore, corresponds to the Prince of Swords in the tarot pack. And so for the rest.

With but one or two slight exceptions, the pieces move exactly as do the corresponding pieces in chess. The queen here does not have the full liberty of the board as she does normally, nor is she the most powerful piece on the board. Here she can only move to every third square. This she can make in any direction, horizontally, vertically, or diagonally—but only three squares at any time. She can leap over intervening squares, and take pieces on the third square from wherever she stands. The other exception is that no castling is permitted.

The pawns in this Enochian chess represent the godforms of the four sons of Horus, the Canopic gods. Their attributions are:

Fire	Kabexnuv, mummy-shaped, hawk-headed, the knight's pawn.
Water	Tmoumathph, mummy-shaped, dog-headed, the queen's pawn.
Air	Ahephi, mummy-shaped, ape-headed, the bishop's pawn.
Earth	Ameshet, mummy-shaped, human-headed, the castle's pawn.

The same rule for colouring the other pieces applies to the pawns. Their backs should be painted in the colour of the piece they serve. Thus the back of the knight's pawn will be painted the colour of the knight, red. The base will be coloured according to the lesser angle in which it is placed. So that in each of the four angles you will have four pawns on bases in the colour of its sub-element. The airy angle, for example, will have four pawns mounted on yellow bases. Those pawns will have four different coloured backs to indicate the piece, and therefore the element, which they represent and serve.

The pawn moves only one square at a time, and not two for the first move as in modern chess. The rule of en passant does not apply here, although the regular method of taking with pawn, via the diagonal, either to right or left, holds equally well.

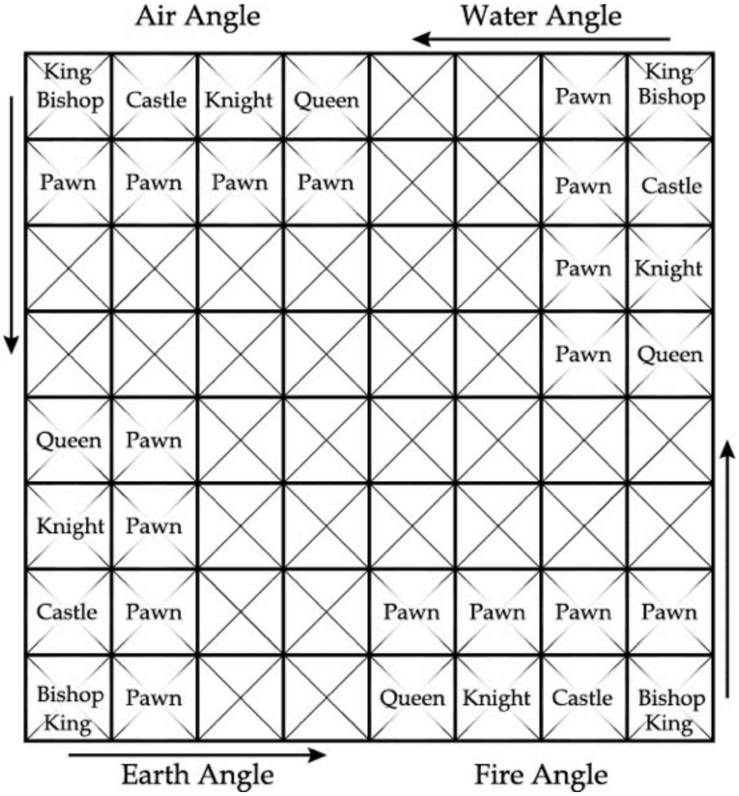
It will be noted that the king has no pawn. Since he is Osiris, the other four pieces and their pawns are his personal servants and vice-gerents. His place on the board is always on the corner of the lesser angle, where the corresponding letters of Tetragrammaton would be placed on the Angelic Tablets. On the four corners of the board as a whole, therefore, will be found the four kings. Identical in every way, they yet differ in the colour of their bases, the colour of the angle which they rule. Some variation might be made as to the posture of the god. For instance, the fire king could be cut as a standing figure, the water king sitting, and so forth. Let it be noted that on the corner squares, two pieces will always be found. The king and the piece corresponding to the letter of the angle will occupy the same square.

A piece or pawn threatening, that is giving check, to the corner square also checks the king as well as whatever other piece happens to be upon that square.

In setting up the pieces for play, the rule of Tetragrammaton on the Kerubic square of the tablets, has application. That is, the order in which the letters of the name YHVH are placed on the uppermost squares of the servient squares of any lesser angle, as reflected from the Kerubic squares above, also govern the placing of the pieces. The bishop will be placed on the Vau square, the queen on the Heh square, the castle on the Heh final square, etc. The student who has thoroughly assimilated the principles involved in the attributions of the Enochian tablets will find all this perfectly straightforward, and experience no difficulty herein.

With regard to this injunction to set out the pieces on the board following the prime player's setting, whose chessmen are arranged according to the order of Kerubs, note that the remaining three sets of pieces are arranged, on any board, exactly in that order regardless of the order of Kerubs in their angle. That is to say, if the prime player chooses an earth of water setting, his pieces will be set out: king and castle on the corner square, then follow the knight, queen, and bishop. The other three sets of air, water, and fire pieces on that board, are set out precisely in that order, either horizontally or vertically as the case may be.

It thus follows that there may result sixteen possible arrangements of pieces. That is, since there are four Kerubic ranks on each board, and there being four separate boards, the chess pieces may be arranged on the board in sixteen different settings. The reason for any particular setting—if divination is the motive for play—must depend on the prime player's synthetic grasp of the Order teaching. Let him remember that there are sixteen figures of geomancy, each with a special and specific divinatory value. It should be remembered that these geomantic figures are each under the influence of a zodiacal genius and a planetary ruler. Not only so, but each is attributed to a Hebrew letter, therefore to a corresponding tarot trump, with its allocation to a sign and a constellation in the heavens with all the hierarchical ideas that the latter implies. Thus the playing of this game resumes the whole philosophy of magic.



King Bishop	Castle	Knight	Queen			Pawn	King Bishop
Pawn	Pawn	Pawn	Pawn			Pawn	Castle
						Pawn	Knight
						Pawn	Queen
Queen	Pawn
Knight	Pawn
Castle	Pawn			Pawn	Pawn	Pawn	Pawn
Bishop King	Pawn			Queen	Knight	Castle	Bishop King

Setting of the Enochian Chessmen

The prime player must be guided in his selection of boards not only by choice of element as previously described, but by any one of these sixteen root significations of geomancy. For each one of these sixteen figures may be applied to the sixteen lesser angles of the Enochian tablets and chessboards. So that each angle comes under the operation of a geomantic ruler and genius, and under the dominion of that portion of the starry heavens corresponding to its tarot trump. The method of attributing the figures to the angles is identical with the process described for the squares of both columns and ranks in the lesser angles. Thus the airy lesser angle of the air chessboard would be mutable (airy) air, referred to the zodiacal sign Gemini, and hence to the geomantic figure of Albus, which is a Mercurial figure under the presidency of Taphthartharath. The watery angle of the air tablet would be Kerubic or fixed (watery) air, which is the sign Aquarius, and the geomantic figure of Tristitia, attributed also to Saturn, and the ruler over it is Zazel. The earthy angles of the air tablet is elemental air, referred to the geomantic figure of Fortuna Minor, also a solar or Leo figure, ruled by Sorath. The fiery angle is cardinal air, the zodiacal sign of Libra, and Puella would be the geomantic figure, with a Venusian nature, ruled by Kedemel.

The same principle is involved in allocating the geomantic figures to the other tablets and angles. The magical and divinatory value of the geomantic figures must therefore decide the choice of chessboards and lesser angle settings.

The yellow and red men are so placed that they advance to the attack of the black and the blue respectively by the columns, while the latter advance by the ranks. That is, the actives are shown as a vertical force, while the passives are shown as operating horizontally, shewing the cross of life, corresponding to the forces of the court cards and the zodiacal trumps in the tarot.

The central squares of the board contain the sixteen signs that are allotted to each lesser angle. And it is only from these sixteen squares that the pieces—except the rook and the king—develop their full influence or defensive force.

The watery and airy boards are counterparts of each other, so far as the arrangement of the signs, etc., of the squares are concerned. And the same is true as regards the earth and fire boards. Every board has its uppermost and lowermost ranks of the passive or female element; and its two central ranks are of the active or male element.

The most striking difference between the air and water, and the earth and fire, boards is in the fact that in the former the ranks are broken; whereas in the latter they are not only continuous across each board, but they are continuous right across both boards when in situ. To this is due the greater balance and evenness seen in the play of the pieces in the lower boards.

4. Note by JMG: See color insert page 20, for the Sigils of the Angelic Tablets.

5. Note by JMG: A term out of heraldry. A cross potent is a cross with splayed ends.

6. Note by Frater N.O.M., that is, W. Wynn Westcott: The fourth square each time from the last will show the letter and figure given. You are not to count, say, 22 or 20 or 18, but 4 only.

7. Note by N.O.M.: Four moves from T gives 22.h. b.4. is specially put. y.14 moves to 22 from t. Then 6.b. is special. From 6.b. it is all plain moving by 6 to right.

8. Note by S.A., that is, W. Wynn Westcott again: Count here not by four or six, but by numbers given. To right if over, to left if under.

9. Note by S.A.: Count twelve in every case, neglecting the numbers over or under, always forward.

10. Note by Regardie: That is, under the name formed by the addition of a letter from the Tablet of Union.

11. Note by Regardie: These should be made all about the same height and width, so that when they are cut, the separate pieces may be pieced together—as in a jigsaw puzzle—in different combinations, without there being too great a discrepancy in size.

12. Note by Regardie: The sphinx in this instance becomes a synthetic Kerubic figure. Thus you can make a sphinx with the head of a lion, the shoulders and wings of an eagle, the body of a man, and the hind legs and tail of a bull, etc.

13. Note by Regardie: When drawing these godforms if a little tongue is left at the bottom of the cardboard on which the form is painted, that tongue can be fitted very easily into a slot of about the same size at the top or throne of the pyramid.

14. Note by Regardie: It is perhaps hardly necessary to suggest to the student that he should not attempt to employ the sphinx and godform formula with the pyramid until he has had much experience in ordinary tattwa vision. When he has become perfectly acquainted with the nature of the subtle planes, and has learned to apply the simple forms of tests, so that he is quick to detect imposition or deception, then he may skry in the planes symbolized by the pyramids.

15. Note by D.D.C.F.: I get them greyer and less defined.

16. Note by Regardie: Enamel or lacquer paints are best.

17. Note by S.A.: The items which follow are quite open to discussion and are simply my own personal experience.

18. Note by Regardie: S.A. here refers to certain statements made in the Clavicula Tabularum Enochi which is here omitted.

19. Note by Regardie: Note IALPRG, “burning Flames,” in the Second Call.

21. Note by Regardie: Lonshi Tox means "the power of Him."

22. Note by Regardie: In Equinox, Volume 5, Aleister Crowley has published a series of visions, using the Calls of the Thirty Aethyrs, in order to investigate and thus ascertain the nature of these Aethyrs.

OFFICIAL RITUAL

The correct application of the action of the moveable images (representing the motion of the ruling angels over the servient squares) is called the Playe or Raying of the Chequers of the Tablets.

By G.H. Frater D.D.C.F.

Of the Chess King and the Tarot Ace. The move of this piece is one square every way, and answereth to the action of the spirit. Wherever it goeth, it commenceth and initiateth a fresh current, whence it is represented by the motion of only one square in any direction and there staying for this purpose before moving onward. So that his action is not hurried, but represents a balanced movement. Yet in his beginning of action is he at first a mute force, as though throned upon the water; as in the end of his action he is a life manifested and throned upon the earth. And herein is a mystery of the Lord Aeshoori (Osiris) when enthroned between Isis and Nephthys, thus representing the beginning and end of the action of Him in whom end and beginning are not, but rather concealment and then manifestation. Herein is a great mystery of life, for his thrones are not in the two active elements, seeing that these latter are his horse and chariot of transition in the passage from concealment into manifestation. This piece, then, is the symbolizer of the action of the potencies of the crosses on the servient squares.

Of the Chess Knight, the Tarot King. The move of this piece is three squares cornerwise every way (as in ordinary chess) and representeth the leaping action of the flickering flame. Wherefore also is he not stopped in his course by a piece or an intervening square, even as fire seizing on a matter speedily rendereth it transparent. This piece representeth the action of fire as the revealer of the strength of the spirit, even as Hoor is the avenger of Aeshoori. It is a force potent and terrible, the king in the elemental operations.

Thus it openeth the locked doors of matter and sheweth forth the treasure hidden therein. Therefore hath all life its beginnings in a fire celestial. And the number of squares covered by the move of the knight in the midst of the board (reckoning from the square on which he standeth, but not including it) is sixteen squares, of which eight are checked, and eight are passed over.

Of the Chess Queen, the Tarot Queen. The move of this piece is unto every third square from her (reckoning the square whereon she standeth as the first) as well cornerwise, as well perpendicular, as horizontal. Thus again covering sixteen squares out of a square of twenty-five squares, of which eight are threatened, and eight are passed over. But she threateneth not a piece upon the intervening square of her move. And her movement is as that of the waves of the sea, and (like the Knight) she is not hindered in her motion by a piece on an intervening square. This piece representeth the undulating action of water and of the sea, and she is ascribed unto the great goddess Isis, who is the cherisher of life.

Of the Chess Bishop or Fool, the Tarot Prince. The move of this piece is any number of squares cornerwise (that is, only on the diagonal) in any direction even unto the limits of the tablet. He representeth the keen and swift wind, and he is ascribed unto the god Aroueris. He is stopped by any piece in his way, even as the wind is stopped by a material barrier. He representeth the swift vehicle of the spirit.

Of the Chess Castle or Rook, the Tarot Princess or Knave. The move of this piece representeth the ponderous and formidable force of Earth and its motion is any number of squares in a square direction, perpendicular or horizontal (but not cornerwise) even unto the limits of the board. It is ascribed unto Nephthys the goddess. It representeth the completed action of the spirit in matter. Therefore is its movement square, and also stopped by intervening pieces, yet powerful from the length and breadth of its range.

Of the Pawns. The four pawns represent certain forces formed by the conjunction of the spirit with each of the four elements severally, and they are severally ascribed unto Ameshet, Ahephi, Tmoumathph, and Kabexnuv, who stand before the face of Aeshoori. And their movement is but one square forward, perpendicular, and they threaten one square forward diagonal on each side, thus formulating the symbol of the triangle, for they each represent a mixture of three elements under the presidency of the spirit. Therefore each is, as it were, the servant of the god or goddess before whom he standeth. Yet they be all, in a manner, alike in their action, although their lords be different. Each is the servant of the god or goddess whose element is expressed in his symbol, without its contrary.

In each set of three elements, taken together, two must be contrary. Wherefore, for example, Ameshet, who represents water, fire, and earth, is the servant of Nephthys, whose element earth is expressed in this attribution without the contrary of air.

Ahephi, who represents air, fire, and water, is the servant of Aroueris, whose attribution is air.

Tmoumathph, who represents water, air, and earth, is the servant of Isis, whose attribution is water.

Kabexnuv, who represents fire, air, and earth, is the servant of Horus, whose attribution is fire.

One of the rules concerning the pawns in actual play is that should one reach the eighth square of its column, it may be exchanged for the piece of which it is vice-gerent. That is, as in ordinary chess, a pawn which reaches the eighth square may be exchanged for any piece the player desires—but in Enochian chess the exchange is limited by the elemental attributions of the pieces. So that were an Ahephi pawn, the servant of Aroueris, to survive the battle of the entire game and win through to the top of the board, it could be exchanged for a bishop, even though the bishop were untaken and still on the board. And so with the others.

The opening of chess play is known under the technical title of "Awakening the Abodes." As already stated the game is set for four players, each of whom works the pieces at each of the four angles, playing in rotation. Should the game be used for the purposes of divination, the first player would be the querent, the one asking the question, or the person representing the matter about which information is required. This first player chooses which angle of the board he will play from, bearing in mind the divinatory qualities of the elements as set forth in the documents on geomancy and tarot.

The major difference between Enochian chess and the modern game is that in the former, when using it for divinatory purposes, the moves are decided by the throwing of a dice. Depending upon the number disclosed by the dice, so must a certain piece be moved, for the numbers are attributed to pieces. The actual details of the move—that is whether to right or left, backwards or forwards, to take an opponent or to press forward—are quite obviously left to the personal ingenium and divining mind of the player. The dice only determines specifically that such and such a piece shall be played.

The prime mover, or the owner of the Ptah piece, plays first, and his first move is to be decided by the throw of the dice to indicate which piece or pawn he must first play. Each player follows in rotation, deosil, that is round the board with the sun from the prime player. First the prime player moves, and if his setting is air, then follow the water pieces, the fire pieces, the earth pieces, and then back again to the air who is the prime mover.

The actual attributions of the numbers on the dice to the Enochian chess pieces are as follows:

If the player throws:

1. He moves a king or any pawn.

2. He moves a knight.
3. He moves a bishop.
4. He moves a queen.
5. He moves a castle.
6. He moves a pawn.

At the first move of the game, if the dice cast throws up one, it clearly cannot apply to the king, for this piece cannot move at all until the pawns have been cleared before him. In that event, a pawn would require to be moved.

The reason for the attribution of the numbers on the dice above shown to the chess pieces are fairly simple. The explanation must be sought in the numbers and powers of the squares on the Sephirotic Crosses. On the ten-squared cross, Kether, the Crown, is the first square, which is a fairly sound attribution to the king, who is Osiris, spirit—the Number 1. Number 2 on the Cross is Chokmah, the Yod of Tetragrammaton, Abba, and therefore the Knight is appropriate. Number 3 is Binah, to which is referred, in the Enochian attributions, the High Priestess card of the tarot. The mitre of the High Priestess determines the selection of the Bishop; 4 is Chesed, to which is attributed the tarot trump the Empress, who is the chess Queen; and 5 is the Castle, referred to Geburah, and the tarot card the Tower struck by lightning. The remaining number 6 refers to the movement of any pawn, one square.

It is not always necessary to use four players. Two individuals may play, each operating two lesser angles and two sets of pieces. Fire and air would be pitted against water and earth. If this is done, then the two sets of elemental pieces of any player must be regarded as a single unit in practice. That is to say if the first player whose pieces are the allies of fire and air checks the earth king, the second player must not continue the movements of the water pieces, which are his allies, until he has moved the earth king out of check by any of the usual technical forms of chess. The reader who understands and appreciates ordinary chess manoeuvring will appreciate what is expected of him in the course of play.

When the so-called “stalemate” occurs, which is when a player has no piece or pawn that he can move without incurring check, that is the king not being in check but so placed that he could not move without getting in to check, the result is that the player whose king is affected loses his turn until his state of “stalemate” is removed.

For the purposes of divination, an additional piece was employed. This was called the Ptah. Any book dealing with the Egyptian godforms will describe the form in question. A small figure of this should be made, and on the board it will represent the question or matter of divination. The mode of employing it is simple. It has no power at all, and is not actually used in the play. It is only used by the first player to be set on any square in the lesser angle from which he begins his play. Any square, that is, except the one on which the king first stands. The king must reach, in the course of the game, this square on which the Ptah is set and remain there for one round of the game undisturbed—that is without moving therefrom—and unchecked. A knowledge of the nature of the pyramids with their elemental composition, and some knowledge of the angelic forces represented by those squares and pyramids, will decide the player as to what square shall be selected for the placing of the Ptah. If the divinatory question concerns the fiery lesser angle of the element of earth, a question involving Capricornus and the figure Carcer ruled by Zazel, then the Ptah probably should be placed upon a square of the angle which is of the nature of cardinal earth, as representing the Yod type of earth, or on elemental fire, that is the Heh (final) type of fire. The ingenium of the interested student will guide his judgment herein.

NOTES CONCERNING THE BOARDS AND THE PLAY GENERALLY

Every lesser angle throughout the tablets has a diagonal line of four squares starting from its prime square, which are allotted respectively to Aries, Gemini, Scorpio, and earth. From these four squares the bishops can move one square into a square of Libra, Sagittarius, Taurus, or water, these completing the series of squares in that lesser angle in which a bishop can move. Let us call this the Aries system of diagonal squares.

This diagonal is crossed by another which in the airy and watery boards is composed of Cancer, Leo, Virgo, and air squares, having as subsidiaries, squares of Aquarius, Pisces, Capricorn, and fire. In the earthy and fiery boards the second series of four form the diagonal, and the first the subsidiaries. Let us call this the Cancer series.

If we now examine the boards we shall see that the Aries system of any lesser angle is joined diagonally to the Aries system of the other three lesser angles, and that the Cancer also is similarly joined to every other Cancer system. So that we have two systems of squares, viz: the Aries and the Cancer; of the whole, each containing four squares allotted to every sign it contains. This resembles the black and white systems of squares of the ordinary board; and it is as if we allotted the white to Aries, and the black to Cancer.

When beginning a game see to which system the Ptah square belongs. Because if it be a square of the Aries system the attack of the opposing queens is insignificant, while that of the bishops is strong. In such a case the number of pieces is six: two bishops, two knights, and two rooks. That is, in these matters the airy attack is strong, and the watery weak.

If the Ptah be on a square of the Cancer system, one opposing queen directly attacks this square, but the bishops do not. In this case the number of attacking pieces is five: one queen, two knights, and two rooks. That is, in these matters the airy attack is insignificant, while the watery is strong.

If an opposing queen can attack the Ptah, the defence should note well which queen it is and should remember that this fact greatly enhances her power. He should thereupon not hesitate to exchange what might otherwise be considered a more powerful piece for her. She should certainly be exchanged for a bishop, and probably also for a knight.

The YHVH order of the pieces corresponds with their respective offensive and defensive powers.

Yod.	Knight.	The most offensive piece.
Heh.	Queen.	More offensive than defensive.
Vau.	Bishop.	More defensive than offensive.
Heh (final).	Rook.	Most defensive.

That is, in a general sense, because, according to the circumstances of the actual play, every piece is able to assume both roles of attacking or defending.

Note that, as in ordinary chess, opposing kings may not occupy contiguous squares. There must always be one square between them. This, however, does not apply to the kings who are allies. That is, if fire and air are allies, then the kings of these elements may approach each other and occupy contiguous squares. Naturally they do not check each other.

When a king has once been moved from the corner square which he occupied with another piece at the beginning of the game neither he nor that piece can be moved back again to that square unless it be vacant.

If the prime player’s king is checked and he cannot move it, his game is arrested and his pieces cannot move until the pieces of his ally can release his king. That is to say, that his pieces remain in situ but having during that time of check no power of action, and can neither attack nor threaten; they only block the squares occupied. If the allied king can be checkmated, his partner continues to play and to seek to release him. When both kings are checkmated, the game is at an end, and the partners checkmated have lost the game. The game is also lost by the first player, when though neither he nor his ally is checkmated, the enemies hold such a position that the prime player cannot possibly attain the Ptah square.

The knights or fiery forces of the elements meet and clash violently in all parts, and are strong in attack against every thing and everywhere. Their moves, like fire, pass unarrested through the other elements in irregular courses like the lambent flame, leaping both diagonally and square-wise at every move. They contain the potential forces of the other pieces. Their force is similar to the tarot king, and to Chokmah. They are the Abba forces, and with the queens represent the Briatic forces of the scheme.

The queens or watery forces of the elements never clash with one another, but ever undulate onwards, each in its own course unaffected by opposing or crossing waves. But the watery forces only move in their respective preordained courses; they cannot leave their limits and enter upon the domain of others. Water, like fire, is unarrested and undulating, and like air and earth it can act diagonally or square-wise, containing the potential force of air and earth. They are the queen of the tarot, and Binah. They are the Aimah, and are of Briah.

The bishops are subtle and sharp, airy in quality, moving rapidly, but easily arrested in their course. They clash not with opposing bishops, and the friendly airs support each other in attack and defence. Where the active airs whirl the passives cannot come. They are the forces of the princes, and of Yetzirah, the Son.

The rooks are the heavy resisting powers of the princess, the earth by nature, mighty indeed in action when preceded by the action of the other three. That is, when in any matter the forces of fire, water, and air have been absorbed and equilibriated, i.e., removed from the board, the mighty powers of the castles come into play. But woe to him who too early calls these ponderous forces forth.

The rook moves through columns as through ranks. She is able, therefore, to reach every square on the board, and is very powerful. But her movement is very ponderous, and it is a piece that is not moved many times in a game unless the forces of the other elements have been absorbed in its working out. While the Aleph, Mem, and Shin forces are in full operation, the rook is easily attacked and with difficulty defended, unless she remain quiet, and act as a firm basis of support and defence to the side. If she, however, makes the mistake of entering early into action she is nearly sure to fall prey to the more subtle forces whose proper sphere is attacked.

If the more subtle forces do not bring about a solution of the question, and the matter has to be fought out to the bitter end, that is, if the Yetziratic and Briatic forces are absorbed and balanced in the matter, then do the ponderous forces of Assiah, the Princess, engage in powerful combat.

An eternal debate rages between those who believe in the objective existence of spiritual entities, and those who believe that all such phenomena, no matter how apparently substantial, are entirely subjective experiences. Perhaps both schools of thought are correct. Where angels, demons, and spirits are concerned, I personally believe it's all in your head—you just have no idea how big your head is. Or, to quote my pseudepigraphic guru, Rabbi Lamed Ben Clifford, "Yes, the spirits are real. Yes, the spirits are imaginary. Most of us, however, cannot imagine how real our imaginations are."

I can, with no small measure of confidence, generally defend this position with jabs of well-worn qabalistic suppositions concerning the nature of consciousness and the functions of the various parts of the soul, and a left hook from Carl Jung. There have been times, however, when my field theory has been mightily challenged. Mr. Laycock's Complete Enochian Dictionary played a curious role in one such magical bout.

In 1978, as part of my perceived duties as an O.T.O.[1] lodgemaster, I began what would become a 23-year weekly magick class at my home in Costa Mesa, California. At the time, I was hard-pressed to stay one jump ahead of the enthusiastic aspirants who crowded my living room floor each Thursday evening. Within a year or so I realized that if I intended to continue teaching, I had learn more myself.

My magick library was pitifully small in those days. My newest treasure was a first edition of Gems from the Equinox,[2] which contains a selection of books, articles, essays, and rituals from Aleister Crowley's monumental work, The Equinox.[3] I combed through it to see if I could find something novel and exotic to occupy our Thursday nights for a while. I settled on Liber LXXXIV, vel Chanokh—A Brief Abstract of the Symbolic Representation of the Universe Derived by Dr. John Dee Through the Skrying of Sir Edward Kelly. It is Crowley's introduction to the complex and beautiful magical art form that has come to be known as Enochian. I didn't know it at the time, but Chanokh, and the book you are now holding in your hands, would dramatically change the course of my life.

At first I found Chanokh completely unfathomable. I read it, re-read it, and checked it against the Enochian material in Regardie's Golden Dawn.[4] After a day or two of whimpering, I finally started to see the light. The material that treated upon the evocation of angels of the four Elemental Tablets appeared to be the logical place to start the class.

Each Elemental Tablet is made up of 156 lettered squares, each of which is divided so to represent a truncated pyramid. Each has its own particular mixture of elements determined by a most impressive application of Hermetic logic. An angel (whose name is the letter of the square) "lives" in every one of the pyramids. These single-letter-named angels are modular and join with their neighbors to form bigger angels with longer names and more complex attributes and duties. It is truly an elegant system.

My plan was to keep the class occupied for a few weeks by having them draw and color their own tablets while I consulted with Dr. Regardie and constructed a set of three-dimensional tablets. Regardie was not keen on the idea. He told me that, to his knowledge, no one had ever done such a thing before, and that the Enochian angels were dangerous enough when they inhabited flat tablets. He cautioned, "Don't give them dimensional elbow-room." I joked, and suggested that his angels were probably in a bad mood because they were all squished up inside his flat tablets. I went ahead and prevailed upon a lodge brother to cut 624 wooden truncated pyramids.

These I would eventually prepare, paint, and assemble into the 4 Elemental Tablets (one each for Fire, Water, Air, Earth).

The night of our first evocation arrived. I prepared our living room temple for the evocation of Laidrom, the Mars Senior of the Tablet of Earth.[5] The temple opening and operating procedures are outlined admirably in Chanokh, so there was very little to do but follow directions. I smugly congratulated myself on being so well prepared. What I wasn't prepared for, however, was the possibility that the evocation might actually work.

The first student to arrive was D. R., who proudly handed me his newly acquired first edition of Laycock's The Complete Enochian Dictionary—the first one I had ever seen.[6] As I always do when someone hands me something rare or expensive, I feigned profound gratitude and gushed, "Oh! Thank you!" He quickly snatched it back out of my hands.

Once the rest of the class arrived, I asked for a volunteer to read the Call in the angelic language and sit in the visionary driver's seat. To my great anxiety, our only volunteer was David Wilson, the most cynical member of the class. I was certain that our class curmudgeon would receive no vision whatsoever and all of our efforts would be the target of his ridicule for many months to come. Still, he was willing to give it a try, so I switched on our little tape recorder and we proceeded.

After I banished and opened the temple, David read the Call twice, closed his eyes, and sat quietly for only a few seconds. Then, to all of our surprise, he casually started to describe in great detail his vision of a desert of white crystalline sand that sprouted columns of volcanic rock.

We were all thrilled. I asked if he saw any living things, an angel, or a spirit. He said "No." I encouraged him to repeat the Call a third time. As soon as he was finished, he excitedly described an enormous black cone arising from beneath the sand. David fell silent for a moment. He told us the cone was opening. Then, with a shout that startled us all… "It's him! It's him! I see him!"

He described a large, humanoid figure seemingly constructed from the same material as the cone. It had no face, its head was egg-shaped and flat in front. Its fingerless hands had the appearance of mittens. "This is Laidrom!" David announced reverently.

We were all in shock. None of us were prepared for this. David reached for a pad of paper and a pencil and scribbled down a few notes and a sketch. Before I could stutter out words of welcome, David let out a nervous giggle and said,

"Lon, I feel like… I feel… I could make strange sounds."

"Go with it!" I don't think I really meant it.

*"Naw-n tahelo hoh athayzo raygayef…*this is…"

"No! Relax, let it happen!" I tried to sound calm.

"I mean it, I feel like and idiot. I'm too… sil-si anxilxi-to-da-arp nan-ta (inaudible) … ef… efe thar-zi. I'm sorry… that's all. Nothing like this has ever happened before. I just felt like doing it."

I didn't know what to say. I finally salvaged the presence of mind to thank Laidrom for appearing. I was painfully embarrassed that I couldn't think of anything to say to this perfectly well-mannered angel standing in my living room. I finally stuttered something stupid to the effect that we really appreciated him stopping by, and we'd sure like to visit with him again sometime soon, then I hurriedly closed and banished the temple.

For a few seconds no one said a word. Then everyone started talking at once. I rewound the tape and we listened to the strange words that had tumbled out of David's mouth. Of course they didn't make any sense, but it was such a thrill to hear them.

We rewound the tape repeatedly and eventually transcribed three audible strings of syllables:

naw-n tahelo hoh athayzo raygayeff
zil-zi-anzilzi-lo-da-arp nan-ta (inaudible)
ef...efee thar-zi.

We referred to D.R.'s The Complete Enochian Dictionary, and in short order discovered:

Nanta, elo Hoath zorge ef.

"Spirit of Earth, first worshiper friendly visit."

Zil zien

"stretch forth hands"

Zilodarp Nanta
"stretch forth and conquer Spirit of Earth"
Ef etharzi
"visit in peace."

David appeared uncharacteristically shaken by what had happened. He insisted, and I didn't doubt his truthfulness, that he had not so much as even glanced at any of the Enochian Calls before that evening.

For the next three years, we would hold class two nights a week and focus exclusively on Enochian magick. We would depend increasingly on The Complete Enochian Dictionary to help us navigate the complexities of the angelic hierarchies and serve as our pronunciation guide to angelic language. David's visions would continue to take us on amazing excursions to the Elemental worlds, but as he became more accustomed to hearing the words of the Calls, his talent for breaking spontaneously into the angelic tongue diminished and finally ceased altogether. Yet he remains the most talented seer I have ever encountered.

D. R., bless his heart, eventually moved away. We haven't heard from him in many years. I am forever grateful to him for bringing The Complete Enochian Dictionary to class that memorable night so many years ago. As you have probably guessed, I never returned it to him.

PREFACE
TO THE REVISED EDITION

The republication of The Complete Enochian Dictionary almost two decades after I wrote the original preface is a significant milestone. In the intervening period, more than a dozen books on Dr. John Dee and the Enochian language have appeared. Some of these have advanced our knowledge of Dee and his magical systems, by publishing more of his original works. Very few of these have added to our knowledge of Enochian, the language, and very few changes have needed to be made to this dictionary.

Some of the other books have merely reworked material already available, and a few, such as Gerald Schueler's Enochian Physics (Llewellyn, 1988) have gone way beyond Dee's original work into areas which Dee would neither recognize nor understand. Gerald Schueler's Enochian Magic (Llewellyn, 1985) is much more relevant to the present work. Some books, such as The Rosicrucian Secrets (Aquarian, 1985) simply used Dee's name by bogusly ascribing authorship to Dee.

What is for certain is that there is a new generation of readers and practitioners (often very different classes of people) who are enthralled by the marvelous and detailed works of the good Doctor and his rather shifty skryer, Edward Kelley.

The first editon if this dictionary was published in the United Kingdom by Askin Publishers, a company no longer active. Askin attempted to publish worthwhile texts of the Western Magical Tradition which were not otherwise easily available to practitioners. It is cheering to see that Dr. Meric Casaubon's True and Faithful Relation of What Passed for Many Yeers [sic] between Dr. John Dee and Some Spirits, 1659—which was the first extensive printed source of Dee's magical actions, and which was first reprinted by Askin in 1974—has been subsequently reprinted at least twice more, demonstrating the perennial interest in Dee's works.

Don Laycock, my co-worker and friend in these Enochian mysteries, died on December 28, 1988. Don, as a Doctor of Linguistics at the University of Canberra, left behind many monuments to his work with language, including that of the Australian Aborigine and dialects and languages of the South Pacific. But of all these languages, none was so strange—or fascinated him as much—as the language of the angels, John Dee's Enochian.

During the year or so that he was in London we spent many months in the British Museum, reading, copying and summarizing the original manuscripts. On some evenings, we worked together on the practical side of the invocations, and Don knew many of the Calls fluently and resoundingly by heart. For a while, a copy of the Complete Enochian Dictionary stood in the Manuscript Room of the British Museum as a reference aid to the decipherment of the original manuscripts themselves, until one unscrupulous scholar decided that he had more need of it than all the other readers!

The foundation of the British Museums collection was the original collection of Sir Hans Sloane's rare books, manuscripts, and curiosities that were purchased by the trustees of the British Museum for 20,000 pounds in 1753. Among these manuscripts were John Dee's originals and Elias Ashmole's manuscript copies. In 1759, the British Museum was formally opened, and the present building was complete in 1847. The great reading room was opened ten years later. Dee certainly would have approved of his works finishing up there, as he had tried to interest Queen Elizabeth I in founding such a national book collection.

What Don and I discovered about Dee's systems (for there are several distinct systems of magic in his manuscripts) and about his angels, both in the Museum, and in the practical use of the Calls, forms the basis of my book on Enochian Magic, which has yet to see the light of day.

After Don returned to Australia, the manuscript of this book was taken during the course of a burglary. Not content to sit down under the police assurances that few of such burglaries are ever solved, I took counsel with Dee's angels. Although the burglar neither knew me, nor cared about such things, he found himself inexorably drawn to find out more about this book and its contents. Within a week he had, much against his will, contacted me to ask about it. The police, of course, followed this up, and after he was arrested the manuscript returned to my possession. Since then I have been in two minds about offering it for publication, despite the efforts of several very persuasive friends.

After the Elizabethan period there were other examples of both communication with the angels through mediums, and of great gullibility. An example of both of these occurs in Goodwin Wharton by Kent Clark (OUP, 1984) which is a summary of Wharton's diaries kept during his extraordinary life from 1653 to 1701. Wharton felt that he regularly conversed with the fairies, even the Faery Queen herself, and the angels, but each time in English. Dee's work stands alone as a grammatical guide to the angelic language itself.

Like Dee, Wharton was interested in everything mechanical and spiritual, including practical deep sea diving (he invented several pieces of apparatus for this purpose), searching for treasure guarded by fierce spirits, and conversations with the angels (through his often pregnant skryer), and even with God himself. Like Dee, Uriel and the angel Ahab were two of Wharton's favorite communicating angels. Wharton also had time for politics (as did Dee) and had a permanent seat in the House of Commons, was involved in several royal intrigues, and was promoted from Lieutenant-Colonel of Cavalry to Lord of the Admiralty. A highly public life is not always incompatible with magical work, and a Renaissance turn of mind seems to have been a characteristic of such men. Some of Dee's non-magical works have appeared in modern scholarly editions, such as Wayne Shumaker's John Dee on Modern Astronomy:

Propaedeumata Aphoristica (1558 and 1568), [in] Latin and English (University of California Press, 1978). Other Dee fragments from the Monas Hieroglyphica and his preface to Euclid, together with a sampling of his diaries were published by Gerald Suster in John Dee Essential Readings (Aquarian/Crucible, 1986).

Dee has appeared in at least two memorable fiction books. In the modern The House of Dr. Dee, by Peter Ackroyd (Hamish Hamilton, 1993), Dee is portrayed as living in a squalid tenement in Cloak Lane in Clerkenwell in East London, rather than in the historically correct rambling old house in Mortlake by the Thames in West London. Other considerable liberties are taken by the author who is interested in time shifts between Dee's time and the present. A much more magical portrayal of Dee appears in the translation of Gustav Meyrink's The Angel of the West Window (Daedalus, 1991), which involves the Emperor Rudolph of Prague, and some interesting Rosicrucian dreams and visions.

However, anyone wishing to really understand Dee's magical work—after the pious sentiments have been stripped out—had better look to the tradition of the early grimoires rather than to the later and more elaborate system which the Golden Dawn derived from Dee's work. Although the latter is very intellectually satisfying, the roots from which Enochian magic grew will be found in the rich compost of the grimoires, or grammars of sorcery which dealt with the calling of both angels and demons. Mathers, who helped build the Golden Dawn system, was also a great translator of grimoires, and if Aleister Crowley is to be believed, a great practitioner as well.

A classic example of such a grimoire is The Sworn Book of Honorius the Magician, as composed by Honorius through counsel with the Angel Hocroell (Heptangle Books, 1978), which was well-edited from two British Museum manuscripts by Daniel Driscoll. I refer anyone who doubts this connection to page 11 of this beautifully printed edition.

The seminal works that have been published in the last two decades, and which any serious student should acquire, apart from those listed in the bibliography, are:

> Geoffrey James. The Enochian Evocation of Dr. John Dee (Heptangle Books, 1984), particularly recommended;
> Adam McLean. A Treatise on Angel Magic, being a Complete translation of Ms. Harley 6482 in the British Library (Phanes Press, 1990);
> Joseph Peterson (editor). The Five Books of Mystical Exercises of Dr. John Dee...as revealed to Dr. John Dee and Edward Kelley A. D. 1581-1583 (Magnum Opus, 1985);
> Robert Turner. The Heptarchia Mystica of John Dee, a primer of hermetic science and magical procedure by the Elizabethan scholar-mage (Aquarian Press, 1986);
> ———. Elizabethan Magic (Element Books, 1989), some of which should be taken with a grain of salt.

The Enochian system is much more than just the books written about it. It is one of the more complex bridges ever built between this world and the world of daemons, spirits, and angels, a piece of spiritual engineering created by one of the most brilliant minds of his age. As such it deserves to be traversed with care. But as it was filtered through the tricksy mind of Dee's mercurial skryer Edward Kelley, this path can easily become the path of the Fool.

PREFACE

During the 16th Century, Cracow, Antwerp and Prague were the great centres of magical and alchemical enquiry and experiment. Cornelius Agrippa published his De Occulta Philosophia in Antwerp in 1531. Prague during the reign of King Rudolf II was devoted to the Hermetic arts and sciences which fascinated its monarch to the exclusion of all else. King Stephen of Poland, who had his seat at Cracow, was related to the Hungarian Bathori family which legend identifies with Count Dracula. Together with Cracow, Prague inherited an extensive heritage of Hasidic Judaism with its heavy mystical, magical and qabalistic content, in fact it was in Prague in the 1580's that Rabbi Loew engendered the famous golem, a figure which has haunted the history of the practical qabalah, and the ghetto of Prague, ever since.

Dr John Dee (1527-1608), mathematician and Astrologer Royal to Queen Elizabeth I, author of the main introductory textbook on mathematics of his age and innovator of many of the navigational aids which enabled the Elizabethan explorers to discover the New World, visited each of these cities in turn. First Antwerp in 1550 (and later in 1562-4), then Cracow in 1584, where he had audience with Stephen Bathori (King of Poland and relative of Elizabeth Bathori, the 'Bloody Countess'), later passing through Hesse-Cassel (a centre of Rosicrucian activity) after visiting Prague and Trebona during 1586-9.

John Dee's interest in magic arose out of his comprehensive studies, typical of the Renaissance man of the time, which commenced with Latin, an essential requisite of any scholar of the period, at the age of ten. Five years later he was sent to Cambridge, where he studied the traditional Trivium of subjects, grammar, rhetoric and logic. However it was not till the following years when he undertook the Quadrivium (arithmetic, geometry, music and astronomy), that his studies, and the eventual direction of his life work really got underway, for as he says himself 'I was so vehemently bent to studie, that for those yeares I did inviolably keepe this order; only to sleepe four houres every night; to allow to meate and drink (and some refreshing after) two houres every day; and of the other eighteen houres all (except the time of going to and being at divine service) was spent in my studies and learning.'

At the same time he mastered the two Tongues, Greek and Hebrew (the latter not quite as thoroughly as the former) and the Three Philosophies, natural, moral and metaphysical.

In 1546 Dee's position as an under-reader in Greek and a founding fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, seemed to promise the beginnings of a brilliant academic career, but the following summer he visited the Low Countries where his interest in geography flowered, following his acquaintance with Giraldus Mercator (the famous Dutch cartographer responsible for the well-known square-grid Mercator map projection), and Gemma Frisius, both of whom provided him with geographical equipment, globes, astronomer's staff and ring, and material on the art of navigation, which he duly took back to his university.

Having realised that some arts and sciences were very much further advanced in Europe than in England, and realising that England could profit by these, he visited Louvain the following summer. In 1550 a short trip to Antwerp brought him in contact with another geographer, Abraham Ortelius (whose house still stands in Antwerp, and whose detailed geographical charts and equipment now reside in the Antwerp Navigational Museum). Pursuing his other great interest, Mathematics, he lectured on Euclid in Paris, to packed halls, establishing his reputation immediately. He was offered a post of King's Reader in Mathematics at Paris University on a stipend of two hundred crowns, which for patriotic reasons Dee refused. This pattern was consistently repeated, with Dee refusing to quit the service of Elizabeth I for far more lucrative positions. On several occasions, the Czar of Russia, Fedor I, offered Dee a position in his court as advisor and physician, at the incredible salary of 2,000 crowns a year, with food supplied from the table of the Czar himself, and a house and additional salary from the Lord Protector, but the offer was again turned down by Dee. Returning to England the following year, he met Jerome Cardan (1552) who was probably responsible for stirring up Dee's interest in the mathematical conjuration of spirits and reinforcing the influences that Dee must most certainly have encountered earlier in his career at Antwerp.

These interests were almost nipped in the bud by the accession of Queen Mary to the throne, when his ambiguous interest in magic coupled with the implied heresy of his predominantly Protestant leanings resulted in his imprisonment for three months in 1555. Interestingly enough, his skill in theology resulted in Dee being requested by the Bishop of London to act as a judge in one of the heresy trials, in which he was one of the accused.

When Elizabeth I succeeded to the throne, John Dee's fortunes changed considerably: he was even asked to select (with due recourse to the influence of the stars) a propitious date for her coronation: a calculation which by all accounts of the Elizabethan era, must have been well performed!

Five years later Dee set out to visit various centres of learning making a very rapid tour of most of Europe including Antwerp, where he met Christopher Plantin (whose presses, which still exist, were justly famous throughout Europe, and whose type design provided the model for that used in setting this book). Here he secured a copy of Trithemius' influential Steganographia (concerned with 'angel-magic', and perhaps cryptography), before visiting Zurich, Urbino, Rome (where legend has it that he had audience with the Pope), Venice, and finally Presburg in Hungary where he was granted audience with Maximillian II, to whom he was later to dedicate his Monas Hieroglyphica.

Dee wrote the Monas in seven days in 1564, and in the same year it was published in Antwerp. Significantly it was not to appear in Dee's native tongue till 1947. The Monas, whose full title, The Monad, Hieroglyphically, Mathematically, Magically, Cabbalistically and Anagogically Explained gives a fair indication of its complexity and scope, is a unique blend of some of the more picturesque alchemical allegories woven into the otherwise rather dry fabric of a book, constructed as a series of exact Euclidean type theorems; with liberal sprinklings of interpretations of the Monas itself (which was a combination of the symbols for Mercury and Aries drawn in a specific proportion). This is elaborated with geometric details for drawing the Monas, and an explanation of the symbolic meanings of these proportions.

In the same year as the Monas was published, Dee went to live south-west of London, at Mortlake, in a rambling old house well-provided with various outhouses for his many scientific interests.

The site of the house, opposite the Church of St Mary the Virgin which Dee later endowed, and in which he is buried, abuts onto the Thames. Elizabeth I often came to visit him by Royal barge from Richmond or Hampton Court Palace.

From here, living on the income of several rectories, Dee quietly pursued his studies, which included writing a classic preface to the first English edition of Euclid's Elements of Geometrie, and planning voyages in search of the north-west passage, or for gold in Labrador. He reputedly accompanied Martin Frobisher on at least one of these exploratory voyages.

In response to Elizabeth's request to Dee for information about the lands to which she was heir, he wrote a work called Of Famous and Rich Discoveries..., which whilst purporting to be a treatise on various voyages of discovery undertaken by Europeans (later to be used by Hakluyt as a source for his accounts), was in fact designed to promote Elizabeth's Imperial aspirations, by assuring her of her rightful ownership of various lands, by appealing to historical precedent. Considering Dee's reputation, it is interesting that he was also called on by the Queen to counteract the effects of a wax image which had been discovered in Lincoln's Inn Fields, and which was thought to be part of a magical plot against her. This establishes Dee's court reputation as that of magician as as well as a geographer and mathematician.

After a first marriage which lasted just one year, he married Jane Fromond (a member of the Queen's household) and three years later took up what he considered to be the most important study of his life. This was the communication, via the medium of a shewstone with 'angels' in an attempt to quench his overmastering desire for knowledge beyond that normally accessible to mortals, to reach up in fact, like Enoch or the Biblical prophets, to God, the very source of knowledge itself. As Dee put it:

> 'I have often read in thy (God's) books and records, how Enoch injoyed thy favour and conversation; with Moses thou was familiar; And also that to Abraham, Isaack and Jacob, Joshua, Gideon, Esdras, Daniel, Tobias and sundry others thy good angels were sent by thy disposition, to Instruct them, informe them, helpe them, yea in worldly and domestick affaires, yea and sometymes > to satisfie their desires, doubtes, and questions of thy Secrete: And furdermore considering, the Shewstone, which the High Prieste did use, by thy owne ordering... that this wisdome could not be come by at mans hand or by humaine power, but only from thee (ô God).'

Dee reasoned that intercourse with these 'spiritual creatures', provided that malevolent, misleading and demonic spirits were banished, was one of the highest ends man could aim at. It is here that magic enters Dee's work. The exactness of mathematics allied with the convoluted philosophy of the Hebrew qabalah and Arabic magico-alchemical works, produced a very solid base from which magic (both natural and metaphysical) could be approached in a scientific manner. This had two effects. First it attracted men of Dee's calibre to the study of magic. However the second effect of this union was the tarring of mathematics with the same brush as had previously been reserved for the heretic or the local practitioner of wort-cunning. This attitude resulted in the sack of Dee's house at Mortlake (during his absence in Europe) and the haphazard destruction of some of his scientific equipment. Ironically enough his 'instruments of sorcery', his skrying stones, Holy Table, wax tablets lamen and chest containing the Libri Mysteriorum accompanied him to the Continent, and so escaped the rage of the mob.

However it was in 1581, before Dee left for Europe, that he began his magical experiments. His avowed aim was to establish contact with the angels, to discover that knowledge which was not to be had either from books or from experiment.

During this period Dee employed Edward Kelley and several other skryers, or seers, to obtain a series of communications which he attributed to the agency of angels and spirits. Despite the fact that the first record of the skrying is dated December 22nd, there is evidence to suggest that the skrying began in a haphazard way as early as March 8th, 1581. The first workings were based on a grimoire type of approach, relying to an extent on equipment. This included wax tablets, a skrying table, a gold lamen and several shewstones, of obsidian and rock crystal. This was evolved into a sophisticated system which involved setting the skrying stone (several were used including a conventional looking crystal ball and the black obsidian mirror) upon the elaborately engraved Sigillum Aemeth (still preserved in the British Museum) which was in turn placed upon a special table inscribed with a hexagram, enclosed within a frame of Enochian letters, and supporting seven specially designed talismans, the whole insulated from the floor by a further four wax tablets, miniature versions of the larger Sigillum Aemeth.

The early communications set down in Dee's Libri Mysteriorum deal with communications from Annael and Uriel, who dictated exact instructions for the engraving of the table, lamen, ring and sigils required. The third book opens with the designs for the seven talismans to be used on the skrying table, and concludes with the Tabula Collecta of the 49 angels whose invocatory modus operandi is explained in the fourth book.

Dee and Kelley pressed on, skrying now as often as several times a day till the complete outline of a self-contained system of magic was obtained and set down in Dee's manuscript, De Heptarchia Mystica, so named because of the 7×7 angels, whose invocations, hours, seals and sigils are described therein. Dee's description of two of these creatures will suffice to show their variety:

> 'He appeared in his red apparell: & he opened his Clothes & there did issue, mighty & most terrible gastly Flames of Fire out of his sides: which no mortall Eye could abide to looke upon any long while. And in the marvelous raging Fire, the word BRORGES did appeare tossed to and fro of the very flames. His Seale or Character is this . . .

And by way of contrast:

> 'Therefore he appeared in a long purple Gowne, & on his head a triple Crowne of Gold, with a measuring Rod of gold in his hand, divided into three equall parts: in the forme of a very well proportioned man.'

The significance of these descriptions is the light they throw on Dee's collection of 49 'Angelorum Bonorum', adding a Goetic dimension in much the same way that works like The Sacred Magic of Abra-Melin the Mage allows that it is as necessary for practitioners to exercise their authority over the evil or Qliphothic aspects, as it is over the more benevolent positive manifestations of the non-physical universe.

By March 1582, Kelley had commenced to transmit the first passages in the first version of that strange language Enochian. This material never found its way into print as has the better known later Enochian of the Calls which was made popular by the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn and later by Aleister Crowley. An example of this early Enochian, by way of contrast with the later (translated) material comes from an 'action' dated 5th April 1582:

> 'Amchama zeuoth luthimba ganeph iamda ox oho iephad mad noxa voscaph bamgephes noschol apeth iale lod ga NA zuma datques . . .'

Returning however to events in the external world, we find Dee correcting the Julian Calendar in 1582 to a greater degree of accuracy than any other contemporary mathematician (although the council of Archbishops turned down his proposals on the grounds that they smacked of Popishness, thereby putting off English calendar reform by several centuries).

In the same year Dee and Kelley met Count Albertus Laski, a palatine of Siradz and aspirant to the Polish Crown. The next year the Dee and Kelley household set out for Cracow.

It is at this stage that the published part of Dee's Libri Mysteriorum takes up the account. This was first printed from Dee's manuscript by Meric Casaubon in 1659 as A True and Faithful Relation of what Passed for Many Yeers between Dr John Dee . . . and Some Spirits, and re-issued by Askin Publishers, London, in 1974.

These 'angelic conversations' cover a wide range of material, from the enumeration of every country on the (then known) face of the earth with their presiding angels, through prophecy (of varying degreees of accuracy), to the amazing collection of transcripts in the Enochian tongue.

Amongst the more 'magical' material, despite passages of incredible triviality and banality, there is a hard core of extremely interesting material recurring throughout the 'angelic' conversations, such that Elias Ashmole (the famous antiquary and early Freemason), and later MacGregor Mathers, one of the founders of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, took portions of the system and derived from it their own systems of magic. Ashmole's attempts, covering a period of some five years (1671-76), are closer to the spirit of Dee's work than Mathers' interpretation, and tend to confirm the objectivity of the intelligences involved in the original communications.

Along these lines there is a record by a different experimenter dated 16th October, 1583, which tends to add weight to the objective existence of the phenomena recorded by Dee in A True and Faithful Relation... It begins:

> 'At ii a Clock at night, I & my Companions having begun Action, at the request & full consent of all the Company, we did fully agree, that we should not desist, till we had brought something to perfection, & having begun Action, & all things for the same purpose ready & fitted; thus give a briefe & true account of what followes.
> After the first Invocation, twice or thrice repeated, there appeared two Men, in the furthest Glass, visible to some part of the Company, & not to other some; but proceeding on, & Invocating highly, there came a very great blow upon the Floore, which made a very great noise, & before it ceased, it did whirle about severall tymes, to the astonishment & admiration of all ye Company, & still proceeding on, & reading further, there came something, which fell pat upon the Table, & from the Table upon the Ground, which made a smaller Noise upon ye floore, then the other did & so vanisht, & soe much for ye night, only when Action was ended, we could find nothing that was the cause of ye noise...'

Returning to a more modern application of Dee's work we find the brilliant syntheses by MacGregor Mathers into the syllabus of the Adeptus Minor grade of the Golden Dawn at the end of the 19th century. Although he used only a small part of the vast amount of material that Dee left, he incorporated the Elemental Tablets with their associated correspondences and the Thirty Calls of the Aethyrs before referred to, whilst Westcott, co-founder of the Order, elaborated a four-sided version of chess based on the Enochian system.

Much of Mathers' adaptation of the original system was done to make it compatible with the Golden Dawn's existing qabalistic basis, which, although ultimately based upon the qabalah that Dee was familiar with, contained many elements not found in Dee's original work, such as the Tarot Atus and the Egyptian Pantheon.

For Dee, the Angels also provided advice and reproof which he conveyed to two of the most powerful patrons he sought, Stephen Bathori King of Poland, and Rudolf II of Bohemia. He was lucky not to have incurred any more painful a punsihment for his pains than a partial banishment by the latter. Dee and Kelley accordingly sought refuge in 1586 at the castle of Count Rosenberg at Trebona, where Dee stayed for two years. Meanwhile Kelley managed, through his alchemical experiments, to curry favour first with the Count and then with Rudolf, who later knighted him.

A True and Faithful Relation... which opened in Lesden in May 1583 closes with the agreement between Dee and Kelley to 'hold their wives in common' (wife-swapping not being an entirely modern prerogative) at which point the whole tenor of the communications changes and passages of considerable power appear, contrary to anything Kelley had up to this point produced.

The spouse-swapping episode began with an alleged commandment by the Angels conveyed by Kelley, 'that we two had our two wives in such sort as we might use them in common' (April 18th, 1587). This was consummated on the night of 22nd May as is evident from semi-obliterated remarks in the original manuscript which were not printed by Casaubon.

This arrangement, which although productive of some of the most interesting material recorded by Dee, probably barely lasted till July 19th when Dee records ' a certayne kinde of recommendation between our wives. Next day saw relenting of E. K. also by my Lord's entrety'. Unfortunately with the exception of four pages in Casaubon these MS notes belong to the greate Chasme of 20 years from May 23, 1587 to March 20, 1607: the papers which fell into the hands of Elias Ashmole, but which do not appear to have survived. They contain Dee's record of the last 'actions' with Kelley before he left Dee's service.

The delivery of these passages is in many ways similar to several Gnostic works describing the descent of Sophia, The Song of Solomon, and Aleister Crowley's Liber Legis, with which there are some remarkable similarities in wording. Crowley, incidentally, claimed Edward Kelley as one of his past incarnations, which, rather than necessarily supporting transmigration of souls, suggests the affinity Crowley felt for Kelley's work, which may have led to a certain amount of unconscious plagiarism.

In February 1589 Dee saw the last of Kelley, and from thenceforth Dee's skrying experiments were with very inferior skryers such as Bartholomew Hickman, whose skrying records were later burnt when Dee discovered that he was a fraud. Till Kelley's death, Dee continued to hope for a reconciliation with his old skryer.

Dee's enthusiasm had not waned however for he named his next daughter Madimi, after the young girl who was a constant visitor to the crystal during the skrying sessions.

By this time he was back in his beloved England where he set about restoring his house in Mortlake which had been damaged by the mob during his six year absence. He partly re-assembled his collection of books which contained in excess of 2,500 books and manuscripts on mathematics, magic, alchemy, philosophy, cryptography, classical literature, geography and the qabalah.

The last six years of his life were spent under James I, an unpleasant situation for anybody remotely suspected of witchcraft, this monarch having been responsible for the most savage persecution of witches and magicians ever to occur in England.

Dee died in 1608 and was buried in the chancel of the church in Mortlake, opposite his house.

On one hand Dee is looked upon as a man of the Renaissance with heavy medieval leanings, rather like Elias Ashmole, who combined membership of the Royal Society (avowedly formed for the advancement of the empirical sciences) with intimate involvement in astrology, alchemy and other interests which would have been regarded as rather reactionary by other members of the Royal Society. On the other hand, the populace saw him as a sorcerer, or to use Dee's words when writing his own defence 'a companion of hellhounds, and a caller and conjurer of wicked and damned spirits'. Likewise Dee was regarded slightly askance at Court, although it seems he was never once doubted by Elizabeth I, to whom he remained devoted for the duration of his life. In between the rather dry but learned magus and the 'damned sorcerer' lies the real Dee: a man who perpetuated the tradition of Hermes Trismegistus and helped 'Christianize' the qabalah, who in all modesty aspired to be another Enoch, who wished to have God's word directly transmitted by God's messengers the angels, nevertheless a very humble man, as his many prayers preceding the skrying actions testify.

Dee is a very important link in the magical tradition, not only because he brought back ideas to England from European centres of learning, or because he aided the cross-fertilization of the Rosicrucian movement, as is aptly pointed out by Frances Yates in The Rosicrucian Enlightenment, but because his magical research is voluminous, carefully documented, and original.

ENOCHIAN

Angelic language or mortal folly?

Languages come and languages go. Something like seven thousand natural languages have been recorded, in one form or another, since the beginning of recorded history; and at least a thousand more languages have been invented by men, for purposes ranging from magic to extraterrestrial communication.

But no language has a stranger history than the Enochian language documented in this dictionary. Perhaps strangest of all is that we still do not know whether it is a natural language or an invented language — or whether it is, perhaps, the language of the angels, as its originators believed. In this introduction, the data is presented for the reader to make up his own mind.

The personalities: John Dee (1527-1608)

According to the horoscope he later cast for himself, John Dee was born at Mortlake on the morning of 13 July, 1527, under the sign of Cancer, with Sagittarius in the ascendant — a good omen, say the astrologers, for a career based on learning and the occult. His father, Rowland Dee, was Superintendent of the Royal Table, at the English Court; but John Dee was later to claim a proud genealogy that included Welsh kings and princes, all the way back to King Arthur. Whatever the truth of these claims, it is certain that John Dee became a distinguished man in his own right. Though he published little, it is apparent that he exercised a powerful intellectual influence on the greatest minds of the time. He was a dedicated, even fanatical, scholar, resolving, when an undergraduate at Cambridge, to spend eighteen hours in study each day, with only four hours for sleep, and two hours for meals.

He graduated Master of Arts from Cambridge in 1548, and went abroad to study further at Louvain. Later he gave lectures at the University of Paris that attracted so many students that they had to crowd at the windows to listen: at this time, Dee was only twenty-three years old.

His reputation in Europe and at home continued to grow, though it was always tempered with the ignorant fear of him as a sorcerer and demonolator. He took few actual jobs, being dependent for most of his life on royal and ecclesiastical pensions —which never amounted to more than about eighty pounds a year. For most of his life, he was chronically short of money — which is not surprising when one takes into account that he spent more than three thousand pounds (or eighty thousand pounds in current value) on building up Elizabethan England's greatest library.

Some idea of the range of Dee's interests can be obtained from the contents of this library, which contained at least 2500 printed books and manuscripts. The works dealt with mathematics, alchemy, philosophy, classical literature, geography — and the hermetic tradition. Dee had thoroughly studied the 'Christian cabbala', particularly from the works of Cornelius Agrippa, and was to become more and more immersed in the qabalistic tradition as time went on.

In fact, Meric Casaubon, in his edition (1659) of part of the record of Dee's seances, scathingly described Dee as 'a Cabalistical man, up to the ears'. One can also get a good impression of Dee's character from this longer statement by Casaubon — although Casaubon himself does not think much of Dee's mind:

> 'Some men come into the world with Cabalistical Brains; their heads are full of mysteries; they see nothing, they read nothing, but their brain is on work to pick somewhat out of it that is not ordinary; and out of the very A B C that children are taught, rather than fail, they will fetch all the secrets of Gods Wisdom; tell you how the world was created, how governed, and what will be the end of all things. Reason and Sense that other men go by, they think the acorns that the old world fed upon; fools and children may be content with them but they see things by another Light.'

The description is a good one, but it can describe two kinds of individual: the magus, or the obsessed fool. Which Dee was, the reader will have to decide, on the basis of his spiritist seances. It is not known just when he began to seek or achieve effective communications with the beings he regarded as angels, but it was probably not before 1581. From about March of that year, as we learn from his Private Diary, he was troubled by odd dreams, and strange knockings in the night. To those who accept the objective reality of Dee's spirits, it would seem that the spirits were anxious to get in touch with him, rather than the other way round.

Be that as it may, by October of that year Dee had found a medium, one Barnabas Saul, who, using as a crystal a stone given Dee by a 'friend', reported to Dee the words of the angels Annael and Michael — and who later denied seeing any spirits at all, for fear of prosecution for conjuring. But Dee was dissatisfied with Saul as a medium, and dismissed him after working with him for only a few months.

Opportunely — for Dee's appetite for spiritual communications had been thoroughly whetted — there appeared at his house in Mortlake on 8 March 1582 a man calling himself Edward Talbot, afterwards to be known by his true name of Edward Kelley. Kelley was about twenty-seven years old at the time; but his previous life remains something of a mystery. There is a long-standing tradition — unfortunately not well-substantiated — that he had had his ears cut off for forgery. He seems to have been something of an occult charlatan, travelling England living off a reputation for alchemy and the preparation of magical elixirs. On several occasions he is known to have been in possession of old books, sometimes in cipher, purporting to give the location of buried treasures. He was not uneducated; he had been an undergraduate at Oxford, but was apparently dismissed. He spoke Latin well enough to travel in Europe, and converse with Dee's Continental friends; he makes frequent grammatical mistakes, but of his general intelligence there is no doubt.

Dee was at first suspicious of this young man who offered his services as a 'skryer', or mediumistic visionary; he seems to have thought that Kelley might have been a spy sent to gain information on his conjuring activities, to report him to the authorities. But the doubts must have been resolved, for already on 10 March that year Dee was giving the new medium a trial — with results so successful that there began on that day a strange and close association between the two men that was to last for some seven years, and to involve them in a series of actions with a host of spirits of all ages and sexes, with magical tablets, lost and miraculously restored books, buried treasure, alchemical recipes, and in the end — a curiously modern touch — wife-swapping.

The first seances

Kelley was an immediate success as a medium, and on that first recorded occasion was granted a vision of Uriel, who revealed his secret sigil or signature, and gave the preliminary instructions for the construction of a powerful magical talisman, the Sigillum Emeth (or Aemeth), to be made of wax and used in further invocations. The original tablet, and smaller similar ones, can still be seen in the British Museum. The design may ultimately derive from Sloane manuscript 313; Kircher, in his book Oedipus Aegyptiacus (Rome, 1652-4), gives a version of the seal with traditional angelic names in place of the Enochian names of Dee. It is unlikely that he could have got this from Dee's manuscripts, then, as now, unpublished.

The pattern for almost all the recorded seances is established right at the beginning. The seance opens with a prayer, the magic crystal or 'shewstone' is uncovered, and Kelley sees visions and hears voices, whose content he transmits to Dee, the recorder. Several aids to scrying may have been used. Dee is usually credited with having at least two: a rock crystal globe, and a 'magic mirror' of black obsidian; both of these can be seen in the British Museum. Dee apparently saw and heard nothing (though this is arguable; his Private Diary entry for 25 May 1581 reads: 'Today I had sight offered me in chrystallo, and I saw', and at other times he seems to have heard at least some of the sounds produced, such as thunder, roaring and trumpets).

Many of Kelley's 'messages' consisted of letters of the alphabet arranged in squares. It will be necessary to examine some of the early examples in detail, if we are to be able to formulate any coherent theories about the mystical language that was produced at later sessions.

Two of the earliest squares transmitted by the 'spirits' through Kelley are the following:

With reference to the first square, Dee is instructed to 'read downward'; he does so, and, starting with the left-hand column, he finds the following angelic names: Zaphkiel, Zadekiel, Cumael, Raphael, Haniel, Michael, Gabriel (with the sign of the cross to fill up the last square).

The procedure with the second square is a bit more complicated. The numbers 8, 26 and 30 are to be read as 'L', at the end of names, 21 is the letter 'E'; and the names are to be read off diagonally, in a south-westerly direction, starting with the 'S' of the top left-hand corner. The following names are produced: (S)Zabathiel, Zedekie(i)l, Madimiel, Semeliel, Nogahel, Corabiel, Levanael.

Now, there is nothing new about most of these angelic names. Apart from the archangels Raphael, Michael and Gabriel (Uriel was dictating through Kelley at this point) most of the other names can be found, in identical or very similar forms, in standard magical texts such as those of Agrippa and Peter d'Abano — as Dee himself comments in a marginal note.

This being so, it is hard to believe that these angelic names are in any way derived from the squares; it seems much more likely that they are the formants of the squares. From such a square, once created, it is however possible to derive new names, and in fact Dee is presented with a series of names created from the second square, by reading in different directions along the diagonals. The names were dictated before the square itself was given; the vision was of seven men, seven women, seven 'wenches', and seven boys, each with letters on the fronts of their gowns. These 28 visionary manifestations are given planetary attributions, as follows:

Planet	7 Women	7 Men	7 Wenches	7 Boys
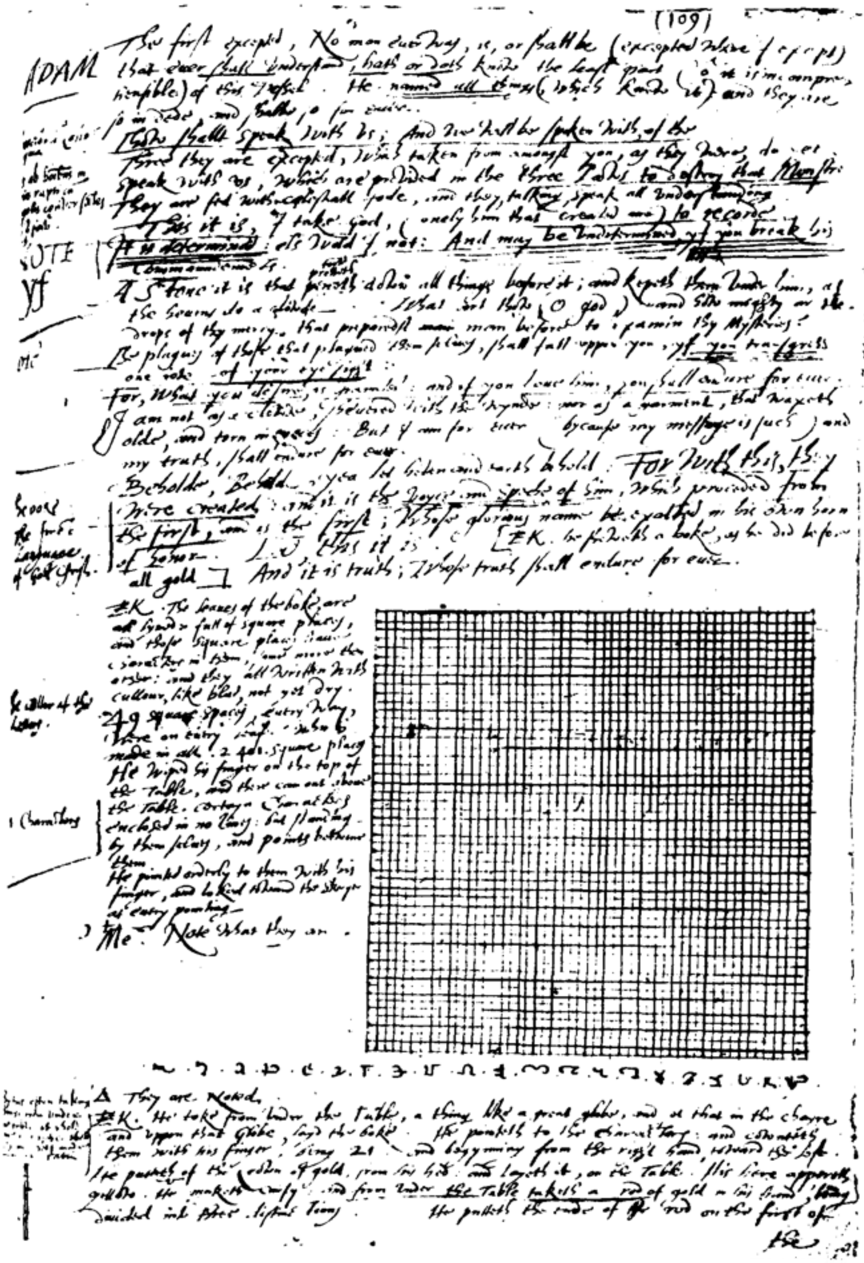
Sun	EL (L)	I	S	E
Moon	ME	IH	AB	AN
Venus	ESE	ILR	ATH	AVE
Jupiter	IANA	DMAL	IZED	LIBA
Mars	AKELE	HEEOA	EKIEI	ROCLE
Mercury	AZDOBN	BEIGIA	MADIMI	HAGONEL
Saturn	STIMCVL	STIMCVL	ESEMELI	ILEMESE
Direction of reading in square	NE	SW	NW	SE

The procedure is hardly mystifying, if we ignore for the moment the claimed spiritual transmission. The names are those used in the construction of the wax seals (the Sigillum Emeth and four others) used by Dee in invocations. The procedure for generating these names would have seemed logical and proper to Dee, as qabalist and mathematician — though his mathematical sense must have been upset by the lack of symmetry in the directions for reading the planetary names. (The desire for symmetry would be better satisfied if either the first or second column were read in in the opposite direction — with LVCMITS as the name of a spirit of Saturn).



Dee's record of the skrying session for 26 March 1583 when the Enochian letters first appeared, in Sloane MS 3188, f.64. (Courtesy of the British Library).

But what is surprising is that never again, in the seven years of seances that followed, do we get a clear picture of the formation of a square from previously-known elements — and only rarely are we in a position to say with certainty just how names have been generated from the squares. Almost a hundred further squares are dictated by the spirits, some of them as large as 49×49; some are dictated straight across, letter by letter, others are created by the rearrangement of previously-dictated squares. But the details of their creation become increasingly baffling — either because the procedure is increasing in complexity, or because Dee is no longer bothering to set down the details for himself, or both. If the Enochian language is generated by some systematic process from squares, whether as a cipher or as a set of mystical words, we do not have the method.

The appearance of the Enochian alphabet

Just after the dictation of the squares discussed above, on 26 March 1583, Edward Kelley produced the first material concerning the 'angelicall language'. On that day he has a vision of a magical book, with the leaves, perhaps inevitably, 'all filled with squares'. The dictating of the contents of this book occupies the seances of the next thirteen months — with some interruptions, in which the spirits dictate other matter, or prophesy, or refuse to appear at all. There is also some interference from non-angelic spirits, mostly of the type that occultists would recognise as elementals.

First of all, the alphabet of the new language appears: twenty-one special characters, each with its own name. The character names are odd, and seem to bear no relation to the phonetic value of the character; but the fact that the names were given in three groups of seven, and total in all 64 letters, may suggest that here again there may be a square concealed: 8×8, or perhaps even 7×9 or 21×3.

The characters appear three times in the manuscript record of this session: once without the names, once with the names, and once as a fair copy, in a slightly different form. They are also repeated, in their final and most stylised form, at the end of the whole sequence, over a year later; there is also a fair copy by Kelley in the manuscript Liber Mysteriorum Sextus et Sanctus

(Sloane MS. 3189), which is a very sloppy transcript of the contents of the angelic book. In addition, individual words written in the characters, in the handwriting of both Kelley and Dee, appear sporadically throughout the manuscripts.

It is necessary to compare all these versions to get a real idea of the characters. The first two versions, for example, look much more like Dee's Hebrew characters than later versions (the letters named Veh (C), Ged (G), Graph (E), and Fam (S) are identical with Aleph, Cheth, Daleth and Resh). The direction of writing, like that of all Semitic languages, is from right to left, but my attempts to trace this alphabet back to a specific Semitic source have failed. All that can be said is that the characters have a general appearance rather like Samaritan — though their stylised forms may also suggest Ethiopic. The scripts they do not resemble are proto-Semitic, or Egyptian hieroglyphic, or Sumerian — a resemblance that would seem essential if we were to believe that the script, like the angelical language, dated back to 'before the Flood', and was the most ancient script of mankind.

We may seek a plausible explanation for the 'angelical' script in the fact that Dee may well have had in his library ancient manuscripts in a writing that he could not read, and that either he or Kelley could have got the idea from such a source. Moreover, the idea of the 'lost book of Enoch' (mentioned in the Bible at Jude 14) was very much in the air in the sixteenth century; it is mentioned in several Christian commentaries on the qabalah. The first manuscripts of this work, supposed lost throughout all the Middle Ages, were not found until the middle of the seventeenth century, in Ethiopic and Greek versions. Could Dee perhaps have been in possession of an Ethiopic version of the Book of Enoch — which he would certainly not have been able to read?

Another clue to the origin of the Enochian script is given by a sixteenth century work on alchemy: the Voarchadumia of Pantheus (1530). On page 14-15 of this work we find another alphabet called Enochian; it is perhaps not additionally surprising, though it seems never to have been pointed out before, that the British Museum copy of this work had actually belonged to Dee, as early as 1559, as attested by the copious marginal notes. Dee's Enochian alphabet bears no relation to that in Pantheus, but Pantheus may have provided the idea. It seems, in the absence of any other evidence, that the Dee/Kelley alphabet may be fanciful, based perhaps on subconscious recollection of similar scripts in earlier literature. There is certainly nothing in Casaubon's suggestion, in his edition of the Dee diaries, that the characters 'are no other, for the most part but such as were set out and published long agoe by one Theseus Ambrosus out of Magical books'. The reference is to a work published in 1539 (Introductio in Chaldaicam linguam, by Theseus Ambrosius Albonesius), in which are contained a large number of alphabets, both real and magical; and not one of the alphabets resembles Enochian in any way.

The first 'angelical' language

In any case, it is by means of these characters that the first texts in the 'angelical language' are dictated a few days later (29 March 1583 — Good Friday, as it happened to be). In the very first instance, the archangel Raphael names the letters, and Dee writes down these names (as if a Greek word, say λογος, were dictated and written down by the Greek letter names Lambda Omicron Gamma Omicron Sigma). Afterwards, Dee wrote out the English letters corresponding to the characters, and then read back the text for checking by the angelic visitors.

But after the first two texts, Dee began to realise that the method was much too slow, considering the amount of material yet to come:

> 'Yf euery side conteyne 49 rows, and euery row will > require so much tyme to be receyued as this hath done > it may seme that very long time will be requisite to this > doctrine receyuing. But if it be gods good liking, we wold > fayne haue some abridgment or compendious manner, > wherby we might the sooner be in the work of > Gods seruyce.'

By this remark we see again that the 'texts' really represent further squares. Each text is in fact one line of a gigantic 49×49 square, each square containing one word; there are two sets of such texts, or 98 in all. The physical difficulties of constructing a square so large, and fitting it on to one leaf of a book, daunted even Dee and Kelley.

We can just take each line of the square as being a text, and for

In any case, the angel is annoyed at the request, and whips away the chair and the table; the shewstone goes dark. No more texts are dictated until the following Tuesday (presumably Dee and Kelley had other activities over Easter), and then, as requested, by an abridged method. Now Kelley receives a vision of the whole leaf of the book containing the text, written in the strange characters received the previous week (with which he is obviously not yet quite at home):

> 'A voyce — Read. E.K. — I cannot.
> Δ [Dee]: You should haue lerned the characters perfectly and theyr names, that you mowght now haue redily named them to me as you shold see them.
> A voyce — Say what thow thinkest. Δ: he sayd so to E.K.
> E.K. My hed is all on fire.
> A voyce — What thow thinkest, euery word that speak.
> E.K. I can read all, now, most pefectly, and in the Third row this I see to be red.
> Palce duxma ge na dem oh elog...'

It is still uncertain whether Kelley spells the texts out letter by letter, or whether he reads them off fluently as words. The distinction is important for the understanding of the material from a linguistic point of view; words that are simply 'spelled', and not 'pronounced', may be mere random collections of letters, that do not form pronounceable words at all. The evidence we have is inconclusive. Dee has written the pronunciation over some letters (such as g as j, final u as f) — an unnecessary procedure if the texts were written down as heard. This pronunciation must have been given at some stage after the texts were delivered, even though the angels specifically forbid 'dubble repetition', or reading over the text after it is dictated — the quote on page 35 gives the reason.

On the other hand, the pronounceability of the words of the texts speaks in favour for a theory of the words having been read out one after the other, without spelling. There are no sounds that would give any trouble to a native speaker of English, and only a few difficult combinations (bdrios, excolphabmartbh, longamphlg, lapch). And some of the texts run so fluently, with so much repetition, rhyme, alliteration, and other types of phonetic patterning, that we are almost forced to conclude that, in the later texts at least, Kelley was speaking aloud, and probably at normal speech speed:

I.13 Ampri apx ard ardo arga arges argah ax...
I.23 ...arcasa arcasam arcusma...
I.24 ...umas ges umas umas ges umas umas ges gabre umas umascala umphazes umphagam masga mosel...
I.25 ...zimah zemah zumacah...zapne zarvex zorquam ...zimagauna zonze zamcha...
I.26 ...zambuges zambe ach oha zambuges gasca lunpel zadphe zomephol zun zadchal...
I.37 ...gasmat gasque gasla gasna gasmaphes gasmagel gasnunabe...

Text II.20 alternates one- and two-syllable words for thirty three words in succession, with one trifling exception; and an even more subtle form of patterning is found in II.24, where there is a strong tendency (broken only by minor exceptions) for monosyllables containing o or u to alternate with disyllables containing the same vowel (mostly a) repeated with a nasal consonant:

II.24 Voh gemse ax pah losquan nof afma ol vamna un samses oh set, quamsa ol danfa dot fanta on anma ol...

What are we to make of this phonetic patterning? Statistical studies in linguistics show that patterning of this nature is rare in normal language — though it is found in poetry and magical charms. It is also characteristically found in certain types of meaningless language (such as glossolalia), which is often produced under conditions similar to trance.

In other words, Kelley may have been 'speaking in tongues'. He did apparently go into trance, as we see from numerous notes in Dee's record of the seances:

> 'Now the fire shot oute of E.K. his eyes, into the stone, agayne. And by and by he vnderstode nothing of all, neyther could reade any thing: nor remember what he had sayde.'
> 'The fire cam from E.K. his eyes, and went into the stone agayn. And then; he could not perceyue, or reade one worde.'
> 'Suddenly there cam the fyre from his eyes into the stone agayne. And then he could say no more: nor remember any thing of that he had herd, seen or vnderstode less than half a quarter of an howre before.'
> [2-3 April 1583]

There are also a few passages which tend to suggest that Kelley did speak the language fluently, instead of reading it letter by letter:

> 'But E.K. prayed perfectly in this Angels language.'
> [2 April 1583]
> 'A voyce — One Note more, I haue to tell thee.
> Ax him not what he sayeth, but write as thow hearest: for it is true.
> Δ. Then, o lord, make my hearing sharp and strong, to perceyue sufficiently as the case requireth.
> Rap[hael] — Be it vnto the.
> Then E.K. red as followeth' [text I.22 follows]
> [3 April 1583]

If we take this as evidence that Kelley was saying 'words' rather than 'letters', then there is no evidence to suggest that these early invocations are any form of 'language' — in the sense of texts bearing a translatable meaning — at all. All the facts seem compatible with Kelley pouring out a string of gibberish while in a trance state. Nevertheless, Dee does add to some of the words some puzzling translations in the margin — but I think he could not have translated a whole text. A few of these glosses are interesting:

gassagen	the divine powre creating the angel of the same
tohcoth	this name comprehendeth the number of all the fayries, who are diuels next to the state and condition of man
apachana	the slimie things made of dust
donasdogamatastos	the furious and perpetuall fire enclosed for the punishment of them that are banished from the glory

Whatever else, it is an economical tongue.

So much for the 'language' which makes up Liber Logaeth, or the 'Book of the Speech from God', which exists in Kelley's handwriting in the British Museum as Sloane MS. 3189. Kelley's text shows a number of discrepancies from Dee's (as far as it goes), which I take to be evidence of his general carelessness in such matters; but perhaps the conditions he had to work under were not ideal:

> 'As E.K. was writing the eighteenth leafe, which was of the spirites of the earth, (in the afternone about 4½ of the clok) he red a parcell thereof, playnely and alowde to him self, and therevpon suddainely at his side appeared three or fowr spirituall creatures like laboring men, having spades in theyr hands, & theyr haires hanging about theyr eares, and hastely asked E.K. what he would haue, & wherefore he called them. He answered that he called them not. And they replyed, & said, that he called them; and he replyed & said, that he called them not, and they replyed & said, that he called them: Then I began to say, they lyed: for his intent was not to call them, but onely to read & repeat that which he had written: and that euery man who readeth a prayer to perceyue the sence > thereof, prayeth not. No more, did he call them. And I bad them be packing out of the place. And thervppon remoued from my desk (where I was ruling of Paper for his writing) to the grene Chayre, which was by my Chymney; and presently he cryed out & sayd, they had nipped him, & broken his left arme by the wrist: and he shewed the bare arme and there appeared both on the vpper side and the lower side imprinted depe in, two Circles and broad as Grotes thus very red: and I seeing that, sowght for a stik, and in the meane while, they assalted him, and he rose and cryed to me (saying) they come flying on me, they come; and he put the stole, which he sat on, betwene him & them. But still they cam gaping, or gyrning at him. Then I axed him where they were: and he poynted to the place, and then I toke the stik and came to the place, and in the name of Jesus commaunded those Baggagis to avoyde, & smitt a cross stroke at them, and presently they avoyded.

> All thanks be to the onely one Almighty & everlasting God, whose name be praysed now and foreuer. Amen.'

Nevertheless, Kelley did complete his transcript of the book, the last page being written in 6 May 1583, when Dee was away in London. The last leaf of Kelley's transcript contains the 'correct' form of the Enochian characters, and this is how they were conveyed:

> '. . . it is to be Noted, that, when E.K. could not aptly imitate the forme of the Characters, or letters, as they were shewed: that they appered drawn on his paper with a light yelow cullor, which he drew the blak vppon, and so the yellow cullor disapearing there remayned onely the shape of the letter in blak . . .'

Further seances

Other entries in the Libri Mysteriorum at this time deal with quarrels with Kelley (mainly about whether the spirits are good or evil), and the search for treasure and lost cipher-books.

For example, Kelley brought Dee a cipher book supposedly giving the location of buried treasure. Dee works out the cipher — which is quite a simple one — but has trouble in deciding whether one cipher character represents K or X, so he notes in the margin: 'Of this K I dowt yet'. One biographer of Dee (Charlotte Fell-Smith) took this to mean that Dee was distrustful of Kelley! We also find detailed instructions for the magical use of Liber Logaeth. All these are matters which need not concern us here. But at the end of the long session of 5 May 1583 Kelley reports a dream which contains accurate predictions of events then four years in the future: the Spanish Armada, and the execution of Mary Queen of Scots. These predictions must be borne in mind when we come to assess the genuineness, or otherwise, of Kelley's mediumship:

> 'Δ. As concerning the Vision which yesternight was presented (vnloked for,) to the sight of E.K. as he sat at supper with me, in my hall, I meane the appering of the very sea, and many ships thereon, and the cutting of the hed of a woman, by a tall blak man, what are we to imagin thereof?
> Vr[iel] — The one, did signifie the prouision of forrayn powres against the welfare of this land: which they shall shortly put into practise. The other, the death of the Quene of Scotts. It is not long vnto it.'

It may not have been difficult for an intelligent man to guess, at that time, that the execution of Mary Queen of Scots was a likely event, and perhaps a foreign invasion appeared probable even in 1583; but, nevertheless, this stands out as a remarkably detailed prediction. (Mary was beheaded in 1587, and the Spanish Armada was destroyed off the coast of England in the middle of 1588.)

About this time the record published by Meric Casaubon in 1659 commences; the date of the first published seances is 28 May 1583, and it begins abruptly with the appearance of a little girl spirit of seven to nine years old, named Madimi. This is one of the names taken from the second square of letters received by Dee over a year before (see page 24), so he knows at once that her elder sister is Esemeli. (Dee mispronounces this name as Esémeli, and Madimi corrects it to Eseméli.) Madimi, from the earliest session, is regarded as being a spirit representing the planet Mercury, which is appropriate for a teacher of languages and magical sciences; her name, in fact, derives ultimately from the Hebrew word for Mars, מאדים ma'adim — whence also 'Madimiel', the name of the intelligence of Mars used in constructing the square.

Other spirits appear from time to time, some of them taken from the earlier tables; but Madimi — who at times reminds one of the 'little girl' contacts of nineteenth-century mediums — makes constant appearances, almost to the very end of the record. (One biographer of Dee, Richard Deacon, says that Madimi grew up and reached 'womanhood' in the seven years that she appeared to Dee; but I find no evidence of this, and the period is only four years (1583-1587). There is a sketch of Madimi in one of his diaries, in which she looks vaguely nubile — but it must be remembered that Dee could see her only in his imagination.)

The appearance of the true Enochian language

The seances continue with magical instructions, philosophising, prophesying, misunderstandings, and contradictions. The text of a new book is dictated, with a new set of 49 invocations (one of which is 'silent'); this is the 'Enochian' language strictly so called, which is the subject of this volume. The differences between this language and the former one are considerable. Firstly, for the Enochian texts, a translation is provided, a fact which right from the beginning makes it look more like a real language. Secondly, the Enochian language appears to be generated, in some way, out of the previous tables and squares of Liber Logaeth — generated, in fact, out of the earlier 'angelic' language.

Unfortunately, the details of how the Enochian language is derived from the squares is very unclear. Only for the very first call is the system given in detail, and the details are very obscure. We read:

'A. (Two thowsand and fortene, in the sixth Table, is) D
7003 in the thirteenth Table, is I
A in the 21st Table. 11406 downward
I in the last Table, one less than Number:
a word, Iaida.
You shall understand, what that Word is before the Sonne go down.
Iaida is the last word of the Call.
H 49 ascending T 49 descending A 909 directly:
O, simply.
H 2029. directly. call it Hoath.'

[13 April 1584]

It is clear that the numbers do not, as some writers have claimed, give the 'row and column' of the table, nor can they give the absolute number of letters in the square (counting consecutively from the top left) as there are only 2401 squares (49×49) in each table of Liber Logaeth, with each word in the square not exceeding a dozen letters (and the majority much shorter); the numbers in the dictation, however, go as high as 312004.

We can conceive of various ways the letters of the Enochian language can have been taken out of the tables previously given to Dee and Kelley. It is possible, for instance, that the letters of the Enochian texts, joined in order on the squares of Liber Logaeth, may form geometrical figures or magical sigils; but there are so many letters to choose from that this approach has proved futile. Other attempts at decipherment, such as that put forward in The Necronomicon, London, 1978, researched by Robert Turner and David Langford, and introduced by Colin Wilson, are also unsatisfactory.

The letter-by-letter dictation of the Enochian language does account for some of the differences of this language from the earlier untranslated language. The 'new' language is less pronounceable than the old one, and it has awkward sequences of letters, such as long strings of vowels (ooaona, mooah) and difficult consonant clusters (paombd, smnad, noncf). This is exactly the type of text produced if one generates a string of letters on some random pattern. (The reader can test this by taking, for example, every tenth letter on this page, and dividing the string of letters into words. The 'text' created will tend to look rather like Enochian.)

But not all Enochian is of this form; many of the words are very pronounceable, as we shall see. The words of the Enochian language itself stop short of having the fully random appearance of the names of God, and of angels and 'kings', that Dee generated from the letters on the squares of his 'elemental tables', that were given later by the spirits — names such as LSRAHMP, LAOAXRP, HTMORDA, ALHCTGA, AAETPIO, which look a lot less plausible, as words of a language, than anything in the Enochian texts.

It is also not completely certain that all the texts in the Enochian language were dictated by the letter-by-letter method. It appears that on at least one occasion Kelley (or the spirits) may have tried to speed up the process, only to be rebuked by Dee's insistence on letter-by-letter transmission. Dee tells Kelley that 'unlesse of this strange language I should have these words delivered unto us letter by letter, we might erre both in Orthography, and also for want of the true pronunciation of the words' (19 April 1584).

The nature of the Enochian language

No matter what the method of transmission was, there are certain observations that we can make about the Enochian language, in the texts that we have. We know something of the pronunciation, from the fact that Dee often wrote the pronunciation of individual words next to the Enochian text. And this Enochian text, written in the Roman alphabet, purports to be a transliteration of the Enochian characters of the text of the original book seen in Kelley's vision. As far as we can tell, each letter of the Roman alphabet transcription represents one Enochian character — which means that Enochian spelling, too, has 'hard' and 'soft' values for c and g, and combines letters such as s and h to make the sh sound. Very English behaviour for a language 'which Adam verily spake in his innocency, and was never uttered nor disclosed to man since till now' (21 April 1584).

If the phonology of Enochian is thoroughly English, the grammar is no less so. But here we are faced with one difficulty: the nature of the translation. The English rendering of the Enochian calls is very free, often using five or six words where the Enochian has one; thus, the word for 'man' (or 'reasonable creature') is glossed as 'the reasonable creatures of Earth, or Man'. Proper names, such as Idoigo (one of the 'Names of God') are given translations: 'of Him that sitteth on the holy Throne'. Particles, prepositions, and pronouns are filled in where the sense requires them, but we do not know exactly what they are supposed to represent in Enochian; moooah, for example, is glossed as 'it repenteth me' — but it could just as easily be an active verb ('I regret').

Moreover, of about 250 different words in the Enochian texts, more than half occur only once, so that we have no real check on their form or meaning. Nevertheless, we can identify a number of different roots, often in quite distinct forms: om 'understand, know', oma 'understanding', omax 'knowest', ixomaxip 'let be known'. This is probably the most language-like, and least explicable, feature of Enochian. What is less certain, however, is how much the differences in the spellings reflect the grammar of Enochian; we find, for example, caosg, caosga 'earth', caosgi 'earth (accusative case)', caosgin 'than the earth', caosgo 'of earth', caosgon 'to the earth' — but are these really case endings, or just chance variants? The same case endings are not found from one noun to another, so that there are either a large number of different declensions (as in Latin or Greek), or else there are no case-endings at all. I incline toward the latter view.

The vocabulary elements of the language are probably arbitrary; certainly they do not seem to be directly derivable from anything in English, Latin, Greek or Hebrew. But in some cases we meet words we half recognise, with unfamiliar meanings: angelard 'thought' (from 'angel'?), babalond 'wicked, harlot' (from 'Babylon'?), christeos 'let there be' (from 'Christ'?), levithmong 'beasts of the field' (a blend of 'Leviathan' and 'mongrel'?), luciftias 'brightness' (from 'Lucifer'?), nazarth 'pillars of gladness' (from 'Nazareth'?), paracleda 'wedding' (from 'paraclete'?), paradial 'living dwellings', paradiz 'virgins' (both from 'Paradise'?), salman 'house' (from 'Solomon'?). (Note that most of the suggested origins are proper names, and are biblical — whatever conclusions may be drawn from that.) The remaining words do not seem to have any assignable etymology, though one can be seduced by occasional plausible explanations, such as micaolz 'mighty' from Scots mickle, or izizop 'vessels, containers' from Hebrew אשישות 'ašišot 'vessels'.

It is hard to be dogmatic about Enochian grammar. Verbs show singular and plural forms, and present, future, and past tenses, and have also some participial and subjunctive forms; but we do not have a full declension of any verb.

The fullest data is that for the verbs 'say' and 'be', as follows:

gohus	'I say'	zir, zirdo	'I am'
gohe, goho	'he says'	geh	'thou art'
gohia	'we say'	i	'he/she/it is'
gohol	'saying'	chiis, chis, chiso	'they are'
gohon	'they have spoken'	as, zirop	'was'
gohulim	'it is said'	zirom	'were'
		trian	'shall be'
		christeos	'let there be'
		bolp	'be thou!'
		ipam	'is not'
		ipamis	'cannot be'

Not much to build a grammar on. We can in addition identify some of the pronouns (ol 'I'; ils 'thou'; tox, tbl 'of him'; tia 'his'; pi 'she'; tibl 'her (acc.)'; tiobl 'in her'; tilb 'of her'; z 'they'), a few more verb forms, and four ways of expressing negation (chis ge 'are not'; ip uran 'not see'; ri-pir 'no place'; ag toltorn 'no creature'). But it is apparent that there is nothing strikingly un-English about the grammar: no trace of the construct case or irregular plurals of Hebrew or Arabic, no clear indication of multiple cases or complex verb forms, as in Latin and Greek. The grammar further suggests English with the removal of the articles ('a' and 'the') and the prepositions — and with a few irregularities thrown in to confuse the picture.

The order of words is also strongly English. A phrase such as adrpan cors ta dobix 'cast down such as fall' is pure English in its order, and can not idiomatically be duplicated in four words with these meanings in any other European or Semitic language.

However, this language with an English base was not dictated in English-speaking surroundings, but in Cracow in Poland — part of Dee's six-year absence abroad, living on foreign patronage. (Kelley never returned to England.) But it would be futile to look for Polish influence in Enochian — especially as all the scholars with whom Dee and Kelley were in contact spoke Latin.

There is one aspect of Enochian 'grammar' that remains totally inexplicable: the number system. Throughout the Calls, various numbers occur, and with a certain amount of extrapolation it seems possible to identify most of the numerals from 'one' to 'nine':

0 — T
1 — L, EL, L-O, ELO, LA, LI, LIL
2 — V, VI-I-V, VI-VI
3 — D, R
4 — S, ES
5 — O
6 — N, NORZ
7 — Q
8 — P
9 — M, EM
10 — X

However, the system that generates the remaining numbers is a complete mystery. A full list of the numbers occurring in the Enochian Calls is given here:

12 — OS
19 — AF
22 — OP
24 — OL
26 — OX
28 — OB, NI
31 — GA
33 — PD
42 — VX
456 — CLA
1000 — MATB
1636 — QUAR
3663 — MIAN
5678 — DAOX
6332 — ERAN
6739 — DARG
7336 — TAXS
7699 — ACAM
8763 — EMOD
9639 — MAPM
9996 — CIAL
69636 — PEOAL

The test of any future spirit-revelation of the Enochian language will be the explanation of this numerical system.

The pronunciation of Enochian

As the texts dictated in Enochian consist of a series of 'Calls', or invocations of supernatural beings, it was clearly necessary for Dee and Kelley to know how the words should be uttered; in most magical systems, a slight error in the text of a spell or invocation is regarded as potentially leading to disastrous consequences. Accordingly, Dee was in the habit of writing the pronunciation of the Enochian words alongside the text. If Kelley dictated the words letter by letter, he must have provided the pronunciation of the whole word immediately afterward.

To make these observations on pronunciation, Dee had to make shift with the ordinary English alphabet; he had no system of phonetic notation. But his intention is usually quite clear. He writes dg when he means 'soft g' (as in gem); and s for 'soft c'; and he indicates in some places that ch is to be pronounced as k. He marks the stressed vowels in most words. Sometimes — but not often — he indicates that a letter is to be given its pronunciation in the alphabet — thus ds is to be pronounced 'dee ess', and z in a few instances is given the pronunciation 'zod'. (The letter z has not always been called 'zed' or 'zee'; it has had many names, among them being 'izzard', and, at the end of the sixteenth century, 'ezod'. 'Zod' is nothing but a variant of this last name.) In more difficult cases, he gives examples from English, thus, zorge is said to be pronounced to rhyme with 'George', and ul to be said 'with such sound to U as we pronounce yew, whereof bows are made' — that is, ul is pronounced like 'Yule'.

With all of these instructions we can get a fairly good idea of how Enochian sounded to Dee and Kelley. We have to make allowances, of course, for the fact that the two men spoke English of more than four centuries ago — and also that, while Dee came from the Midlands, Kelley came from Worcestershire, at a time when the dialect variations in England were greater than they are now. Fortunately, linguists are in the possession of sufficient evidence — in the forms of pronunciation guides in schoolbooks, rhymes, misspellings, and the like — to establish the pronunciation of most forms of Elizabethan English with a high degree of accuracy (passages of Shakespeare, for instance, have been published in phonetic transcription, representing Shakespeare's own pronunciation).

The resulting pronunciation of Enochian makes it sound much more like English than it looks at first sight. The following table of letters and combinations gives a general view of how the spelling system of Enochian worked:

Letter	Pronunciation
A	— long (stressed), as in lah-di-dah
	— short (unstressed), as in French patte
B	— usually as English b, but silent between m and another consonant, or after m finally
C	— as k before a, o, u (with some exceptions)
	— as s before i, e (with many exceptions), and in clusters of consonants (noncf=nonsf)
CH	— as k in most positions, but as ch finally
D	— as d in all positions
E	— when stressed, as in French fee
	— when unstressed, as in bed
F	— as f in all positions
G	— as (hard) g before a, o, u
	— as j before i, e, in final position, after d, and in clusters of consonants
H	— as h in most positions (except in combinations ch, ph, sh, th); silent after a vowel, but the vowel is lengthened
I	— when stressed, as in (French) machine
	— when unstressed, as in bit
	— in combinations: ai as in fly; ei as in eight; oi as in boil
	— as y in word-initial position before a vowel (Iad=Yad)
K	— as k in all positions
L	— as l in all positions
M	— as m in all positions
N	— as n in all positions
O	— when stressed, as in French mot
	— when unstressed, as in not
	— in combinations: oi as in boil; ou as in bout; oo as in fool
P	— as p except in combination ph

PH	— as f
Q, QU	— as kw (qu in quick) — but the word q is pronounced kwa
R	— as r in right (but may be rolled)
S	— usually as s in sit
	— sometimes z, in places where this is more natural in English (lrasd=elrazd)
SH	— as sh in ship
T	— as t except in combination th
TH	— as th in thank
U	— as oo in boot, or u in put
	— in initial position as yew
	— as v or w before another vowel, and in word-final position
X	— as x in fox
Y	— as y in word-initial position before a vowel
	— as the letter I before a consonant, and in word-final position
Z	— as z in zoo; in a very few words, as zod

It should be further noted that the Enochian characters themselves total only 21, not the 24 characters listed above; C and K are expressed by a single letter, as are I and Y, and U and V. The 21 letters of Enochian are, oddly enough, almost exactly the minimum required to write English without any ambiguity; perhaps Dee was interested in spelling reform.

Using the punctuation guide above, we can transcribe the beginning of the Call of the Aethyr LIL (as given on page 266) into an approximate phonetic representation:

> Mádriaks di-es praf lil kis miká-olz sánir ka-ózgo od físis balzízras yaida. Nonsa gohúlim: míkma adóyan mad, yá-od bliórb, soba o-áona kis lusíftias pirípsol, di-es abrása nonsf netá-ib ka-ozji, od tilb adfát dámploz. . .

As we shall see below, Enochian acquired a very different pronunciation when it came to be used in nineteenth-century magical rituals; but for the moment we are concerned with Dee and Kelley.

Dee and Kelley — the last years

Throughout the remaining years of the association of Dee and Kelley we have, in the record of the seances, a fascinating documentation of the character of the two men, which is relevant to any judgment we may wish to form on Enochian. Though the diaries give only the viewpoint of Dee, the characters of both men come through clearly. Dee is credulous, and willing, usually, to give the spirits the benefit of the doubt; but he keeps a close watch on them too, and queries them when he catches them out in a discrepancy. (The spirits chide him time and time again for asking so many questions — awkward questions.) Kelley, on the other hand, is often surly, and largely uninterested in what the spirits are transmitting through him, except where he sees a chance to find out how to work his alchemical powder, and turn base metal into gold. On one occasion, apropos of nothing, he interrupts the girl-spirit Madimi with the question: 'Canst thou, Madimi, lend me a hundred pounds for a fortnight?' — only to be told, roughly enough, that 'I have swept all my money out of doors'.

Kelley apparently wanted the money in order to clear out, and abandon Dee. A few days before this request, on 29 June 1583, the spirits, speaking through Kelley, warned Dee about this intended departure. The warning was in Greek, which Dee understood well enough, but Kelley certainly did not; he says to the spirit Madimi: 'Unlesse you speak some language which I understand, I will expresse no more of this Ghybbrish'. Madimi also announces: 'It is the Syrian tongue you do not understand it'; can Kelley be trying to throw Dee off the scent here? This episode provides evidence of Kelley speaking yet another language he could not know consciously — and here, if we are to believe that he faked the episode, we must still endeavour to explain how or where, in London at that epoch, he could have learned the necessary Greek phrases. (Kelley was even supposed to be ignorant of the Greek alphabet; in his regular diaries, Dee used to write English in Greek letters, whenever he had something to hide from the prying eyes of Kelley. I am not entirely convinced, however, that a sharp man like Kelley would not have penetrated this device.)

Kelley perhaps wished to leave because the first date announced for the performance of the 'Enochian' magic (August 1583) is close at hand, and he does not want to be around in case it is a fiasco; but it is still hard to see why (and how) he would deliver a message against himself in a language he did not know.

Be that as it may, Kelley is persuaded to stay (with a pay rise), and the spirits continue their instruction. They dictate pages of letters and symbols which seem to lead nowhere, and fill up even more pages with vague prophesying that resembles the sermons of a third-rate evangelical preacher. Their practical knowledge tends to be earthly rather than supernatural, and they have read the same books as Dee and Kelley. (For example, the spirits dictate a list of 91 parts of the earth, ruled by 91 'princes', in the Enochian system of magic; Kelley turns up next day and announces, in some agitation, that the complete list can be found in 'a book of Agrippa's'. The question that immediately arises is: did Kelley make this announcement to forestall a discovery that Dee would eventually make?)

The spirits show many of Kelley's limitations, in imagination and thought; and they tend to identify the many books on Dee's shelves by the characteristics of their bindings, and not by their titles or contents. They have also been poking around in the hidden recesses of the house: on one earlier occasion they announce their knowledge of a record of Dee's seances with previous mediums. Dee had stuffed it up the chimney in an attempt to hide it from Kelley.

On at least one occasion, Kelley can be shown to have falsified the spirit doctrine for his own ends. Almost at the end of the Libri Mysteriorum, on 18 April 1587, we find recorded that on the previous day (at a time when Dee was not present) Madimi had suggested to Kelley that the two men share their wives in common — the attractive young Jane Dee, and the almost unknown Joanna Kelley. Dee queries this, and the spirits dictate, as confirmation, a string of numbers in what turns out to be a very elementary cipher. The 624 letters of the large square (24×26) of the 'Elemental Tables' dictated some time before are numbered from 1 to 624, each number designating a letter. The letters dictated spell out the following message in Latin:

> 'Cara tibi uxor, carior tibi sapientia, carissimus tibi ego. Electus tremis, ac hesitando peccas: Noli igitur [hesitare] ad genium, et carnem sapere; sed obtempera mihi: ductor > enim tuus sum, et auctor spiritus omnibus. Hec omnia a me sunt, et licita vobis.'

Which reads:

> 'Dear to you is your wife, dearer to you is wisdom, dearest to you am I. Though chosen, you tremble, and in hesitating you sin. Do not therefore [hesitate] to know the mind and the flesh; but obey me, for I am your leader, and the creator of all spirits. All these things are from me, and are permitted to you.'

(The Latin text is that yielded by the cipher, with a few literal errors silently corrected. There should be another verb — perhaps hesitare — after igitur, and spiritus omnibus should probably read spirituum omnium; but Kelley's Latin was always shaky. For example, the Casaubon edition of the Dee-Kelley seances has auctor spiritus omnium at the end of the penultimate sentence — which we could translate, somewhat facetiously, as 'I am the ghost-writer of all'.)

The cipher shows a number of minor errors — apart from the major fault that most of the numbers are one out; Dee's marginal note is 'I perceive that commonly one is to be abated of the number'. It would require a great deal of credulity to ascribe such an error to the angels, rather than to Kelley.

The wife-swapping episode took place, in spite of the attempts of some biographers of Dee to suggest that it did not. In the original manuscripts there is a section, heavily erased and barely legible, recording the seance of 23 May 1587 — the morning after the wife-swapping. The spirits ask Kelley: 'Was thy brother's wife [Jane Dee] obedient and humble unto thee?' — and Kelley replies: 'She was'. Dee returns the same answer concerning Joanna Kelley.

Dee's association with Kelley, and apparently also with the Enochian angels, ended shortly after this episode — perhaps the tensions in that household of two British couples in Bohemia were becoming too much to bear, and Kelley set himself up as an alchemist in a separate establishment. Nevertheless, the Dees did not leave for England until March 1589, arriving there in December of that year. Kelley stayed on at the court of Emperor Rudolph in Prague, and died there in 1595 — under obscure conditions. (The usual story is that he was imprisoned for failing to produce alchemical gold, and fell from a tower when trying to escape.) Kelley was forty at the time — but on 21 August 1584, the angel Uriel had promised that he would live till eighty-seven (and Dee till a hundred and twenty-two). Not even angels are right all the time.

Dee died in poverty in England in 1608, at the age of 81. There is no record of any seance with Kelley after the wife-swapping incident; both men appear to have had enough of the angelic communications. In later life, however, Dee did record a few more attempts of his own; there is a record of a seance in 1607, which is concerned with such mundane matters as his penury and his 'bleeding fundament'. The fantastic angelic revelations seem to have departed with Kelley, and there is no evidence that Dee ever made any use of the Enochian system of magic which he was at such pains to receive.

Judgment on the spirits

What are we to make of all this? Can we accept the spirits at face value, or must we, in a rational age, look for some other explanation? If we insist on a prosaic rationale, there are only two possible candidates for the dubious honour of having fabricated the whole series of spirit-communications: John Dee and Edward Kelley. It was rare for anyone else to be present at the seances, except on a few occasions when Jane Dee and Joanna Kelley turned up to query the wife-swapping incidents.

The spirits, incidentally, show a marked anti-feminist attitude. On 21 March 1585, they rebuke Jane Dee, who has put in a petition for more housekeeping money, 'because she is a woman', and on 23 May 1587 (the morning after the wife-swap) a spirit calling herself 'The Daughter of Comfort' says: 'Disclose not my secrets unto women'.

Dee could certainly have fabricated the whole record. He had the knowledge to do so, and the diaries are in his handwriting; and he delighted in playing with magic squares, circles, and sigils. But such a suggestion must founder on the question: why on earth would he have done so? Only a man clinically insane — and Dee was certainly not that — would have filled many hundreds of pages, covering more than two decades in all, with a private fantasy that became revealed to the world only by accident. The records of the seances were never intended for publication; Dee had enough experience in his life of the dangers of appearing to be a magician, without adding fuel to the fire by making public his actions with spirits. (Already in 1583 a mob, disturbed by his reputation for trafficking with spirits, had raided his house in Mortlake, and destroyed a large part of his library.) Moreover, no-one can read the spiritual diaries, which on internal evidence were written down at the seances themselves, or very soon after, and doubt the sincerity of Dee himself believing in the reality of the spirits.

I think, therefore, that we can acquit Dee of any deliberate fraud or mystification in this matter. It is not so easy to acquit Kelley. All we know of him (and that is not in fact a very great deal) suggests that he was an occult charlatan, an opportunist looking for ways to make a 'quick quid'; and we have seen him on a number of occasions inject his own personality into the spirit communications. He had motive enough; not only the £50 a year he was paid by Dee as a retainer, but also, perhaps, pride in being able to create a magical system that would be accepted by a credulous old man, the opportunity to use Dee's library and alchemical laboratories, the chance to bask in Dee's reflected glory, the perks of free travel on the continent, and the freedom to make a pass at Jane Dee. And even in this last motive there may be more than meets the eye: there could well have been a homosexual component in Kelley's attachment to Dee. Kelley married late, and only when the spirits advised him to, admitting that he himself 'had no natural inclination thereto'; and it is a well-established psychological fact that the attraction of a man for a member of his own sex may manifest itself in a desire to possess the beloved's wife, if the beloved himself is not accessible.

But did Kelley have the knowledge to create all his spirit revelations? The Enochian system shows a much deeper knowledge of the qabalah than Kelley would seem to have possessed — but not necessarily more than he might have been able to glean by a surreptitious reading of Dee's books. Nevertheless, there is a remarkable consistency about the whole system, which for Kelley to have invented would argue a phenomenal memory, or the keeping of notes (which would have been hard to conceal from Dee). The Enochian Calls, for example, are translated in their entirety often days after the original dictation: could Kelley have carried all this in his head, or on pieces of paper small enough to escape Dee's attention? (During the sessions of 14 May 1584, and on some other occasions, the spirit communications become very garbled — is this an indication of Kelley getting his notes out of order?)

Kelley's predictions of future events, and the production of the warning in Greek, also need to be accounted for, in any explanation. In favour of the Kelley-fraud hypothesis, however, is the fact that the communications of the spirits, though consistent, do change over time; and the 'system' tends to fall into watertight compartments. There is little real relationship, for instance, between the earlier Heptarchia system of the 49 Good Angels, and the later Claves Angelicae system of the Enochian tables. The latter is more thorough-going, and, as we have seen, the associated language is more convincing: can Kelley have got better at producing what was required of him, as time went on? He must have learnt a great deal from living in close contact with Dee, and Dee's credulity would blind him to slight internal contradictions. (Dee does, as we have seen, query inconsistencies as he finds them; but there could have been others that he did not record, perhaps subconsciously repressing them. We have after all only Dee's record of the seances.)

Perhaps Kelley was just feeding Dee's own fantasies back to him. Or perhaps again he may have been picking up Dee's subconscious thoughts, by some kind of ESP, and elaborating on them. Or perhaps, after all, the spirits were all they said they were, and the Enochian system of magic is the most powerful of which we have a record in the English language. The reader is invited to make his own judgment; mine appears in the conclusion to this chapter.

Is Enochian a cipher?

One further possibility remains to be considered: that the Enochian texts are really a cipher, and that some other message is concealed in them. The suggestion was first made by Robert Hooke in a lecture to the Royal Society towards the end of the seventeenth century, and has been resurrected by Richard Deacon, a modern biographer of Dee (John Dee: Scientist, Geographer, Astrologer and Secret Agent to Elizabeth I, London, 1968). The possibility cannot be immediately discounted; Dee was familiar with ciphers, and had the mathematical sophistication to develop systems to a high degree of complexity. We have noted already two clear-cut instances of cipher in the spiritual diaries: the decipherment of Kelley's treasure-manuscript, and the cipher of the wife-swapping incident. There is another cipher in the diaries that should be mentioned, as an instance of the tortured nature of some of the spirit communication, and as evidence of the types of ciphers then employed.

The communication was received by the magicians in the first part of 1585. A figure of an old man appears and reads in a book of 'Ivory bone' a text interspersed with odd words and garbled syntax:

> 'Take of your Dlasod dignified, and Luminus, or from due degrees. Gather or take fiery degree... Notwithstanding, work it diverse dayes multiplying four digestions... And double then Dlasod, and thy... Rlodnr... For, until thou watch so continuing it, a holy hour descendeth... Of every work there ascendeth one Audcal, and so every Law Rlodnr... And purpose Dlasod, take a swift Image, and have the proportion of a most glorious mixture Audcal and also Lulo. Continue and by office seek Rlodnr backward by the red digestion. But he by the common or red Darr doth gather most ripest work, purge the last fortene well fixed. Then the four through your [Rlodnr]...Roxtan finished more together at the lower body by one degree... by you for him hold it, for him in one of them...until of the last thing...In him become his red and highest degree of his resurrection through coition... After a while I come again... There is the whole work.'
> [17 January 1585]

This is, of course, gobbledygook; but the next day a string of figures is dictated, which are to be set over the words, and then the words arranged in their appropriate numerical order. In spite of many errors in the transmission, Dee finally works it out, and the entry for 20 March 1585 prints the corrected plaintext:

> 'Take common Audcal; purge and work it by Rlodnr of four divers digestions, continuing the last digestion for fourteen dayes, in one and a swift proportion, untill it be Dlasod fixed, a most red and luminous body, the Image of Resurrection.
> Take also Lulo of red Roxtan, and work him through the four fiery degrees, until thou have his Audcal: and there gather him.
> Then double every degree of your Rlodnr, and by the law of Coition and mixture work and continue them diligently together. Notwithstanding backward, through every degree, multiplying the lower and last Rlodnr his due office finished by one degree more than the highest.
> So doth it become Darr, the thing you seek for: a holy, most glorious, red, and dignified Dlasod.
> But watch well, and gather him, so, at the highest: For in one hour, he descendeth, or ascendeth from the purpose.
> Take hold.'

This is still obscure, but it is now recognisable as an alchemical text, for preparing alchemical gold. Levanael appears and explains that Audcal is 'gold', Dlasod is 'sulphur', Roxtan is 'pure and simple Wine in her self', Lulo is 'Tartar, simply of red wine' or mother of vinegar, Darr is the philosopher's stone, and Rlodnr must be something like 'furnace' — but there is no key to the formation of these strange words.

Perhaps it was the practical application of this strange formula that gave Kelley his reputation as an alchemist able to transmute base metal into gold, a reputation that got him the position of alchemist at the court of the Emperor Rudolph. But in any case we can see that the angelic spirits were not averse to using cipher when the need arose.

Nor, of course, was Dee, even if he were not acting as a 'secret agent' of Queen Elizabeth abroad. Many years before, he had acquired a manuscript copy of Trithemius' Steganographia, forty years before it was first printed; and this work not only deals with various cipher systems, but also contains a 'mystical language' (in reality a fairly simple cipher) that in some ways resembles Enochian. What Dee thought of this book is contained in a letter to Sir William Cecil from Antwerp, dated 16 February 1563:

> 'Allready I have purchased one boke, for which a thousand Crownes have ben by others offred, and yet could not be obtained. A boke, for which many a lerned man hath long sowght, and dayly yet doth seeke: Whose use is greather than the fame thereof is spread... A boke for your honor, or a Prince, so meet, so nedefull and comodious, as in humayne knowledge, none could be meeter, or more behofefull.'

But the various keys of Trithemius do not work on either of the mystical languages produced by Kelley. The whole Enochian system, with its complexity of squares filled with letters, would seem to lend itself to both transposition and substitution ciphers of all kinds; yet checks of some of the more likely possibilities have yielded nothing worth following up. There may be a cipher in the first set of untranslated invocations that Kelley produced initially (but then these invocations would not look so much like glossolalia), but I do not believe there can possibly be cipher in the Enochian Calls. Let us see why not.

The Enochian Calls, as we have seen, are accompanied by a translation. If this translation is genuine, then the Calls must represent the enciphered version of this translation, in English or some other plausible language. And, since the words of the Enochian text occur consistently with the same translation, the only kind of cipher possible is substitution (whether simple or polyalphabetic). Transposition ciphers, and ciphers with polyalphabetic substitution, just would not yield the same 'word' consistently.

But simple substitution cannot have been used in the Calls, or they would have been cryptanalysed by now. Simple substitution in any of the likely languages (let us say for argument Latin, Hebrew, Greek, English, or any common European tongue) is completely transparent — and how much more so when the translation is available! Take the word ROR, for example, meaning 'sun', if this were a word in a simple substitution cipher, it must represent a three-letter word in which the first and the last letters are the same. The best candidate is Hebrew שמש meaning 'sun'; but substituting the value of these letters in other words (e.g. R in GRAA 'moon') does not yield any further Hebrew words. We could perhaps assume a form of multiple substitution, and try English sun or Latin sol for ROR, and English moon or Latin luna for GRAA. The reader is welcome to try this; he will find it leads nowhere. Perhaps even more conclusive, however, is that the letter-frequencies per thousand of the Enochian Calls (as calculated by computer) do not produce a graph resembling that of the letter-frequencies for any of the languages under consideration.

But the most damning case against cipher is the fact that there is a translation at all. What would be the point of writing a text in an elaborate cipher, and then writing the plaintext underneath? It is barely possible, of course, that the translation is a mere blind, and that the Calls contain a totally different enciphered text. But there is a difficulty in this too; it would be extremely difficult (though not entirely impossible) to construct a workable cipher that would first encipher one text, and still yield a consistent 'pseudo-translation' as another text. But Enochian is far too much like the language its translation represents for this to be very likely.

Further, if the magical languages and the squares do contain a cipher, why bother to surround it with all the other material from the spirits: prophecies, dictation, general talk, and indication of breaks for dinner? If Dee had wanted to write messages in cipher, for his own use, he could have done so without creating this elaborate fiction.

I think, therefore, it is possible to assert, with a high degree of confidence, that there is no cipher contained in the 'angelical' language, or in the Enochian Calls.

The later history of Enochian

The use of Enochian as a language after the death of Dee and Kelley, and of the related system of magic, cannot yet be fully documented. But as interest in Dee continues to our own day, it is relevant to sketch in some of the main developments.

Dee died in 1608, in the odour of sanctity, and was buried in the chancel of the church at Mortlake, near his house. Kelley, as we have seen, was already dead. If any of Dee's acquaintances or family — perhaps his son, Arthur Dee, who had once tried to serve as a medium for his father, and later became an alchemist in his own right — continued with the practice of Enochian magic, it was without the seance records, which in the second half of the seventeenth century turned up, rather surprisingly, in a secret drawer of a cedarwood chest that had belonged to Dee.

The papers were discovered in the chest in about 1662 by the wife of a certain Mr Wale. He subsequently gave them to Elias Ashmole in exchange for a copy of the latter's book on the Order of the Garter.

Elias Ashmole (1617-1692) was apparently fascinated by their contents, spending a great deal of effort on reconstructing the Enochian system of magic from the often difficult text. He was probably the first man after Dee to attempt to make contact with Dee's angelic spirits, in a series of seances extending from 1671 to 1676.

As the founder of English freemasonry, Ashmole may have had an even greater significance, in introducing the Enochian system into esoteric freemasonry, and into the English occult tradition in general. However, we do not know for certain whether he did or not, for it is to be some two hundred years before Enochian is mentioned publicly again. It seems that some of the nineteenth-century freemasons with occult interests (such as Frederick Hockley and Kenneth Mackenzie) may have been aware of the Dee manuscripts (by then in the British Museum), but it is unlikely that Enochian magic played any part in masonic rituals.

It was to be another Mason and antiquarian who brought Enochian back into English occultism: Wynn Westcott (1848-1925), one of the founders (in 1888) of the highly influential occult Order of the Golden Dawn. It was certainly Westcott who introduced into the Order the complex system of 'Rosicrucian chess', a divination system blending the Enochian system with Egyptian god-forms and Indian four-handed chess (Chaturanga), on which last Westcott was an expert.

The Enochian Calls, and the general system of Enochian magic, were required subjects of study for the Golden Dawn grade of Adeptus Minor — though it seems that few members of the Order ever knew much about them. Most of the original material (first made publicly available in detail by Israel Regardie in his book on the rituals of the Golden Dawn in 1937-40) is by Westcott, but some notes were also included by Westcott's co-founder of the Order, S. L. MacGregor Mathers. An interesting development is the description of a special pronunciation for Enochian. The advice of 'Sapere Aude' (Wynn Westcott) is as follows:

> 'In pronouncing the Names, take each letter separately. M is prounced Em; N is pronounced En (also Nu, since in Hebrew the vowel following the equivalent letter Nun is 'u'); A is Ah; P is Peh; S is Ess; D is Deh.
> 'NRFM is pronounced En-Ra-Ef-Em or En-Ar-Ef-Em. ZIZA is pronounced Zod-ee-zod-ah. ADRE is Ah-deh-reh or Ah-deh-er-reh. TAAASD is Teh-ah-ah-ah-ess-deh. AIAOAI is Ah-ee-ah-oh-ah-ee. BDOPA is Beh-deh-oh-peh-ah. BANAA is Beh-ah-en-ah-ah. BITOM is Beh-ee-to-em or Beh-ee-teh-oo-em. NANTA is En-ah-en-tah. HCOMA is Heh-co-em-ah. EXARP is Eh-ex-ar-peh.'

The note by 'S Rioghail Mo Dhream (MacGregor Mathers) describes essentially the same system, but with some idiosyncratic viewpoints:

> 'Briefly, regarding the pronunciation of the Angelical Language, thou shalt pronounce the consonants with the vowel following in the nomenclature of the same letter in the Hebrew Alphabet. For example, in Beth, the vowel following 'B' is 'e' pronounced AY. Therefore, if 'B' in an Angelical Name precede another as in 'Sobha', thou mayest pronounce it 'Sobeh-hah'. 'G' may be either Gimel or Jimel (as the Arabs do call it) following whether it be hard or soft. This is the ancient Egyptian use, whereof the Hebrew is but a copy, and that many times a faulty copy, save in the Divine and Mystical Names, and some other things.
> 'Also 'Y' and 'I' are similar, also 'V' and 'U', depending whether the use intended be vowel or > consonant. 'X' is the ancient Egyptian power of Samekh; but there be some ordinary Hebrew Names wherein 'X' is made Tzaddi.'

The Egyptology is that of the nineteenth century, and we may suspect that this pronouncing system is of the same period; certainly it is not, as we have seen, the pronunciation used by Dee and Kelley. But it is a practical system for coping with some of the consonant-clusters of the Enochian language, especially the divine Names. In use, the system was modified somewhat; thus, saanir 'parts' was apparently pronounced as 'saanire', and not — as the instructions above would suggest — 'Ess-ah-ah-en-ee-reh' or something similar.

The occultist Aleister Crowley took the Enochian system very seriously, and published the text of the Calls, together with the details of making the Enochian magical tablets, in his publication The Equinox (1909-1913). His version of the Calls is given in his interpretation of the the expanded Golden Dawn pronunciation; the Call of the Aethyr LIL opens:

> 'Madariatza das perifa LIL cahisa micaolazoda saanire caosago od fifisa balzodizodarasa Iaida. Nonuça gohulime: Micama adoianu MADA faoda beliorebe, soba ooaona cahisa luciftias peripesol, das aberaasasa nonuçafe netaaibe caosaji od tilabe adapehaheta damepelezoda...'

Crowley's own experiences with the Angels of the Aethyrs were also published in the Equinox, and also later as a separate book, The Vision and the Voice; but it is not generally known that he also composed a set of additional conjurations in the Enochian language. These are published in his edition of MacGregor Mathers' translation of the Goetia or Lesser Key of Solomon — but are omitted from many current editions. This additional Enochian material of Crowley's, be it spirit revelation, inspired re-creation, or linguistic dilettantism, tends to use the words of Enochian found in the Calls, but with some extended meanings and a few apparently original words. A specimen, from the invocation entitled 'Ye constraynte':

'Od commemahé do pereje salabarotza kynutzire
'And I bind thee in the fire of sulphur mingled fabaonu, od zodumebi pereji od salabarotza:
with poison and the seas of fire and sulphur:
niisa, eca, dorebesa na-e-el od zodameranu come forth, therefore, obey my power and appear asapeta vaunesa komesalohé.'
before this circle.'

Since the time of the Golden Dawn and the various later Orders in one way or another related to it — for details of which see Francis King's book on Ritual Magic in England — various occult groups have attempted to use the Enochian system to try to establish contact with the spirits seen by Kelley. Some have claimed success, in the form of new Enochian material (both language and magical formulas) that is not for profane ears. It is difficult to judge such claims until they appear in print — but one simple test that can be applied is to ask the adepts if they know the Enochian word for 'seven'.

One group that is known to be using the Enochian Calls is the Church of Satan, headed by Anton La Vey in California. La Vey's Satanic Bible prints the Enochian Calls, in a form that makes it quite clear that they are taken from Aleister Crowley's version — but he substitutes the name 'Saitan' wherever the original has 'Iaida' ('The Highest'), and makes other minor modifications in the translation: 'Lord of the Earth' for 'God of Justice', and 'King of Hell' for 'The Highest'. Whether Dee's spirits still respond, I do not know.

Dee's spirits have recently been associated with those from another source, the essentially Sumerian and Akkadian demons of the Necronomicon, a fictitious work invented by the American fantasy writer H.P. Lovecraft. In all there have been in excess of half a dozen 'editions' of this title, all of different content: of which the Necronomicon, Barnes Graphics, New York, 1977 has drawn on Sumerian and Akkadian sources. In the edition of the Necronomicon published by Neville Spearman, London, 1978, there is a purported translation of Dee's Liber Logaeth. Readers who have followed this introduction so far will be able to assess the validity of the supposed translation for themselves — but it is a long way from ancient Sumeria to Dee's London, and there is not much evidence that H.P. Lovecraft had more than a fiction writer's knowledge of either.

Occult groups which have been known to use the Enochian system in recent years include, in London, the Order of the Pyramid and the Sphinx, and the Aurum Solis; in the Midlands, the Order of the Cubic Stone; and elsewhere the Luculentus Astrum. It is hoped that the material in the present book may be of assistance to them, and to all such groups who are pursuing researches in this area.

Conclusion

In the preceding pages, the arguments for and against regarding Enochian as a genuine language, and for and against accepting the reality of the angelic spirits supposedly contacted by Dee and Kelley, have been put at some length. I do not think anyone can afford to be dogmatic in this area. As a scholar, I am by temperament inclined to doubt wherever doubt is possible; but I have known well people who have pursued the study of Enochian from the point of view of practical occultism, and who claim that, whatever the origin of the system, it works as practical magic. And I have no particular reason to disbelieve them.

I believe, myself, that a combination of factors produced Dee's angelic communications. I am sure that Kelley went into genuine trance states, in which he saw visions which he faithfully reported; but I am equally sure that at least on some occasions he consciously elaborated on those visions, and at times even invented them, and fabricated messages from the spirits, for his own ends; and that he used, consciously and unconsciously, any information that he picked up from Dee, and relayed it back to him.

Nevertheless, there may be genuine revelations at the core of his reported visions. But I think that real angels would speak a more euphonious and more consistent tongue than Enochian, that they would not make mistakes, and that they would have more of import to transmit to man than the interminable outpouring of 'Enoch his boke'. Shakespeare's Macbeth claimed of his witches that 'they have more in them than mortal knowledge'; it would be hard to make the same claim for Dee's angels. Their limitations are those of Kelley; their occasional sublimities, those of Dee. If the true voice of God comes through the shewstone at all, it is certainly as through a glass darkly.

The element of doubt remains, however, and therefore it is not surprising that in the 27th Invocation to the Good Angels, we find, in the words of the first angelical language, the sequence:

> '. . . lafet vncas laphet vanascor torx glust hahaha. . .'

The spirits may well have the last laugh.

SCOPE AND PLAN OF THE DICTIONARY

This dictionary is intended to allow the reader to find the basic meaning of any Enochian word used by Dee (both in his original manuscripts and in the printed version of Casaubon) to which at least a tentative meaning can be assigned. In addition, a few words which are clearly Enochian, but to which no meaning can be assigned at present, are included with the gloss 'meaning unknown'.

The Dictionary also includes Enochian words, principally (but not entirely) from versions of the Enochian Calls, from the following sources (for which see Bibliography):

GD	The Golden Dawn: text of the Calls, with additional variants as used in the rituals, and some angelic and holy names.
AC:C	Aleister Crowley's version of the Calls, with additional magical data, as published in The Equinox, Vol.I, Nos.7 & 8.
AC:VV	Enochian words (some of them not from Dee) as used by Aleister Crowley in his invocations of the Aethyrs in The Vision and the Voice. (Note: in this book Crowley uses other magical languages which have no connection with Enochian. These have not been included.)
AC:G	Variants of Enochian words in the goetic invocations published by Aleister Crowley as a supplement to MacGregor Mathers' translation of the Goetia. (Note: only rarely are these words not identifiable with the words of Dee's Enochian; but there are many misprints and mistranslations.)

Another source of Enochian vocabulary, La Vey's Satanic Bible, was examined, but the Enochian here follows AC: C exactly, with only two additional misprints (mamao for momao, and gianai for ginai) which were thought too insignificant to include in the Dictionary. However, this publication is remarkable for the liberties it takes with the English text of the Calls, as well as omitting, for some odd reason, all the numerals of the original text.

Words which do not have a source given them in the Dictionary are all from Dee; occasionally a form is identified as C (Casaubon) when it does not tally with the manuscripts. The words from the Calls, which are of course the most important source of Enochian, are provided with an indication of pronunciation, as far as can be determined from Dee's notes, and from the principles outlined in the chapter on Enochian. There remain many uncertainties, however, and some readers may prefer to use the pronunciation as suggested by the spellings of Aleister Crowley or the Golden Dawn rituals, as this now has a relatively long occult tradition.

In giving the pronunciation, the rule has been followed of 'consonants as in English, vowels as in Italian' — this means u as in put, not (Southern British English) but. Long vowels are marked with a bar over them (a, i), and the English murmured vowel (as in the last syllable of father) has been represented by ë when no other symbol would do; but it would also be possible to pronounce all sequences of er, ir and ur as ër wherever they occur. Note that the r, in Dee's time, would have been pronounced everywhere it occurred; a light Scottish burr sounds good, but an American r will suffice.

A note must be added on zod, which is frequent in the Aleister Crowley versions of Enochian words. This was simply a short-lived Elizabethan word for the letter Z (which we now call zed or zee). As the letter was used less frequently in Elizabethan English than now, but had a high frequency in Enochian, Dee would often write zod over the letter z, to remind himself that it was not to be spelt s. I think that only rarely did he intend this to suggest a pronunciation with zod.

Another characteristic of Elizabethan usage was the (to us) inconsistent writing of u and v, and to a lesser extent i and j. Dee almost invariably writes v at the beginning of words, and u in the middle, whether u or v (of modern English) was intended. With regard to i and j, he almost always writes only i; j appears only as capital I or J, and at the end of words (mostly Latin). These Elizabethan habits in the spelling of Enochian have given rise to some odd-looking words, such as vnchi (where we would now write unchi). These anomalies have been regularised in the Dictionary, according to modern spelling conventions.

Also, in accordance with the values of the Enochian alphabet given by Dee, U and V are placed together in the Dictionary, as are I and Y. However, J is placed with G rather than with I, since the only Enochian words that have ever been spelled with J are the Aleister Crowley versions of words beginning with 'soft g'. Similarly, K is included with C.

Enochian variants that differ only in these spelling alternations (such as u for v) are not always included separately. Nor are variants that differ only in the use of capitals, hyphens, or spaces. Thus, the reader who has encountered, in Aleister Crowley's Goetia, the word dari-lapa, will only find listed darilapa (which also occurs in the Goetia). It is not expected that this will cause the reader any inconvenience in finding words.

All variants are cross-referenced to the best possible form of the word as used by Dee, as far as this can be determined; but where there are many Dee variants, these are usually to be taken as all equivalent.

A few variant words are to be found a line or two away from their true alphabetical place, to avoid multiplying cross-references; thus butamonu occurs within the entry butmon, and not before it. This should not cause inconvenience; if a word is not found at its strict alphabetical place, simply look a line or two higher or lower.

Variants that appear to arise from miscopying or printers' errors are marked with a following asterisk: thus *coasg (for caosg). Such errors are frequent in all previously published works containing any Enochian material; it is to be hoped that the printer treats this work better.

A fairly comprehensive list of divine and angelic names, mainly from Dee's magical manuscripts, is included, but the reader is warned against regarding this list as complete, in the sense of giving the key to the complete Dee magical system. Only those names actually used by Dee (and, preferably, those used with some frequency) are included. The texts contain instructions for generating many additional names, from the various Enochian tables, but no names have been generated for this Dictionary. Also, a large number of angelic names that are given in the Golden Dawn rituals are omitted, as these appear to have been created from the tables in ways not intended by Dee. In addition, only the barest outline of the nature and functions of the various spirits can be given in the Dictionary. The publisher of this volume will be bringing out a complete guide to Enochian magic at a later date.

The Enochian Letter at the beginning of each part of the Angelic-English section of the Dictionary is reproduced in facsimile from the original letters in Dee's manuscript diary for 6 May 1583 (Sloane MS 3188 f.104). For details of how they were formed see the previous chapter, page 36.

End of English-Angelic Dictionary

THE ENOCHIAN CALLS

This edited version of the Enochian Calls follows closely Dee's fair copy in the manuscript of the 48 Claves Angelicae (Cracow, 13 April-13 July 1584). I have modernised his often erratic spelling, punctuation, and word-division; and here and there I have replaced an archaic word or phrase with its modern equivalent. Other minor amendments have been made to allow the English text to be compared with the Enochian more closely. I have, however, resisted the temptation to interfere with the Enochian text, except for corrections which Dee himself made. Capitalisation and word-division conform to the English text, in accord with my grammatical analysis of Enochian. The Enochian words appear directly under the English words to which they most closely relate, except in a few instances where either the English text or the Enochian text is defective. There is still room for dispute in some of the identifications, and in one or two instances arbitrary decisions had to be made. Further information on the exact shades of meaning, as far as can be determined, will be found in the dictionary section.

Angels/Magic

> Yes, the spirits are real. Yes, the spirits are imaginary. Most of us, however, cannot imagine how real our imaginations are.
> —Rabbi Lamed Ben Clifford
> (a.k.a. Lon Milo DuQuette)

Dr. John Dee, Mathematician in the court of Queen Elizabeth I, and Edward Kelley, his medium, first deciphered the language of the angels, or Enochian, in 1581. Dr. Dee's efforts furthered the development of the Enochian system of magic, and his methods of invocation have been taken up and expounded upon by many magicians since.

Donald Laycock gives us the history of Dr. Dee's and Edward Kelley's work and explains how the alphabet is pronounced, and then presents an Angelic-English and English-Angelic dictionary. It is intended to allow the reader to find the basic meaning of any Enochian word used by Dee, words in the Enochian Calls of the Golden Dawn, and those used by Aleister Crowley in The Equinox and The Vision and the Voice. The book also includes variants of Enochian words in the Goetic invocations published by Aleister Crowley as a supplement to MacGregor Mathers' translation of the Goetia.

In his Foreword to this edition, Lon Milo DuQuette, a well-known figure in the world of modern occultism, gives us a humorous yet edifying description of how he and his students put The Complete Enochian Dictionary to the test—with astonishing results! This book is a must-have for any serious magician's library.

Acknowledgements

I wish to acknowledge Adam McLean's edition of the Magical Calendar as my original inspiration for writing this volume, and David Rankine for re-awakening my old interest in the Kabbalah. I would also like to thank Suguna Rethinasamy and Er Choon Haw who both worked unflaggingly on the research, typing, design and formatting of countless tables, without whose work this book might never have seen the light of day.

I would also like to thank Darcy Kuntz for permission to use the cover illustration of the Tree of Life from his book The Complete Golden Dawn Cipher Manuscript. Special thanks to Dianthus Kim for the illustration calligraphy on the three Trees of Life, to Valentina Kim for help, as always, with the cover, and to Helene Hodge for many helpful suggestions in the Natural Magic and Pantheons sections.

The cover illustration is from Peter Apian's Astronomicum Caesareum, published in Ingolstadt in 1540, which contains a series of beautiful cardboard discs forming a sophisticated circular tabular device. This work was the last standard astronomical work to be based entirely on the Ptolemaic and geocentric view of the universe. This circular disk with rotating pointer enables the user to determine the points of intersection of the moon's orbit and the ecliptic, or Cauda and Caput Draconis, the two 'dragon points' for any time of the year. These points play an important part in calendar calculations and the determination of the correct magical times for specific operations.

The basis of Occultism can be summed up in a word correspondence. The theory of correspondence recognizes an implicit interdependence of all things with all other things, the existence of multiple relationships between various aspects of Nature's kaleidoscopic richness.

INTRODUCTION

This book contains all of the standard correspondences of the Golden Dawn as recorded in Aleister Crowley's Liber 777. But it also includes a lot more, including the real roots of the Tarot, Geomancy, the Olympic Spirits, and the hierarchy of spiritual creatures (be they angels, demons, intelligences, spirits or elementals) from grimoires such as the Liber Juratus, the Key of Solomon, the Lemegeton, and the Book of Abramelin. In fact it is a complete set of magician's tables.

A few attributions will appear to clash with the accepted attributions. This will undoubtedly upset some people, but upon closer inspection they will see that I have in such cases gone back to basics and corrected errors of transcription or deliberate 'blinds'. It may also upset some New Age writers who feel that it is justifiable to mix up any material or systems, regardless of its age, provenance or reality, just because the mix appeals to their intuition. Such systems may be valid, but I have attempted only to tabulate material with deep roots, and have tried to undo a few of the spurious associations of the recent past. I do not claim that this book is definitive, just that it pushes the boundaries of magic further than they have previously been pushed.

We communicate by explaining how some new thing is like an existing thing, or how one thing corresponds with another. Words correspond to our thoughts and ideas. Words correspond with ideas, and the ideas in turn correspond with external reality. In fact without such correspondences we are reduced to grunting in a cave. With these correspondences we can communicate. The letters of one language correspond with the letters of another. The words of one language correspond to the words of another, as all our human concepts have similar roots. Even the letters that make up a word correspond with numbers, and allow us to do the calculations of Isopsephy and the Gematria of the practical Kabbalah, to investigate things which we otherwise may not have been able to grasp.

Correspondences not only form the basis of communication, but they are also the basis of magic. There is a whole stratum of thought which relates to emblems, colours, images, herbs and perfumes which was much more accessible to ancient man, and was still a part of Renaissance thinking, but which no longer forms part of the way we think at a conscious level. These correspondences are only vaguely guessed at by modern psychologists like Jung, who see the tip of the iceberg, but cannot easily trace its roots. These roots are not always obvious, but they are there as part of the subconscious memories, or the egregore of our culture, indeed of the cultures of all mankind.

Magic is based on correspondences. Magic most powerfully uses them when they are put together in a well constructed ritual. The denizens of other worlds and other spaces do not always speak our language, but they do respond to correctly assembled rituals where the colours, perfumes, gestures and words of power are all attuned to the same wavelength. The whole science of magic, before the advent of universal literacy, was based on correspondences. Correspondences were used to store vast quantities of information, enabling feats of memory which are just not possible for modern man, who uses the written and electronic word to store his knowledge. Knowledge of these correspondences can help us understand the structure of thought, and the nature of memory, as well as the techniques of magic. These correspondences can even be used to alter this reality, not to just describe it.

A book of correspondences, such as this, is therefore basic to communication, communication between human beings, communications with ones own subconscious, even communication with angels and other non-human entities.

In a perfect holistic universe everything (and every non-thing) is connected to everything else. But not everything corresponds to everything else. Things are divided into categories, in order that they may function, and that we may be able to think about them. In the beginning was the 'Word', or the differentiation into yin and yang, or the Light, or the 'first swirlings', or whatever you wish to call it. However you like to phrase it, the essential act of creation was division. This is also reflected in biological necessity where growth comes about by the division of cells.

Such division is also necessary in the structure of thought. Until we categorise and label it is not possible to compare and contrast, therefore logical thought is not possible. Maybe the removal of such categories of thought might enable us to return to original bliss, but that is not the purpose of this book.

The categories I have chosen to use in this book are those of the Sephiroth of the Tree of Life of the Kabbalah, the Zodiac, the Elements and the Planets. I list the last three categories separately despite the fact they are also included in the Tree of Life, for reasons that will soon become apparent.

Correspondences are the different things (often physically remote) that can be conceptually tied together using the 'chains of correspondence'. For example one chain of correspondences ties together the colour red, the god Mars, his planet, the fifth Sephirah, the sword, the ruby, and so on. Another ties together Aphrodite, Venus, the colour green, emeralds, and passionate love. On the other hand neither Ceres, cats, copper sulphate, corn, rock crystal or the smell of storax are on this chain. Each chain can therefore be clearly tabulated as a particular row of correspondences running across many tables.

History

Before looking at the way correspondences are structured we should take some time to look at the history of such work and the important players. The greatest synthesisers of these chains of correspondences were Henry Cornelius Agrippa, and in more recent times S L MacGregor Mathers.

The work of discovering and collecting correspondences has been at the root of magic from time immemorial. Here we will just touch briefly upon those magicians and writers who have ordered these correspondences into tabular form. This work was begun by Arabic writers on magic, in books like the Picatrix. It was later codified in Latin by magical scholars like Peter de Abano (1250-1317) and Johannes Trithemius, Abbot of Sponheim (1462-1516) who was one of the main focuses for the recording and transmission of the magical traditions of his age. His pupil Henry Cornelius Agrippa (1486-1535) arranged much of this information in tabular form[1] in his Three Books of Occult Philosophy in 1509 (although these volumes were not published till 24 years later in 1533). In the 1580s and 1590s Dr John Dee (1527-1604) used and extended much of Agrippa's work, especially that concerned with the knowledge and conversation of angels.

Shortly after, much of this material was compressed into just one amazing page, the Magical Calendar[2] published in 1620. The conception for this is attributed to the famous astronomer Tycho Brahe (1561-1623) as its 'inventor' and to Johann Baptista Großschedel Von Aicha (who flourished around the 1620s) as its author. Using much of Agrippa's work and with the amazing engraving skills of Theodore de Bry,[3] the author produced one huge page, which is an almost comprehensive table of magical correspondences and sigils. I say 'almost' because the author deliberately left out all demonic references from his compilation, which were readily available in sources like Agrippa, and introduced other material instead.[4] Published in 1620, the Magical Calendar[5] contains tables of correspondences arranged by number, from one to twelve. The material is based largely on the extensive tables in Agrippa, book II, but goes beyond this, especially in its inclusion of sigils.

The Sigilla Decem Nomina Dei Principalia Complectentia also has more detail than has survived in the engraving of the Magical Calendar. This Harley manuscript adds some very interesting details missing from the engraving, such as the 8 tables (or seals) of the Patriarchs[6] with particular virtues ascribed to them. So for example, Solomon's seal, which also appears in the Goetia, is to be used to secure wisdom, Jeremiah's seal for visions, Ezekiel's seal for health, and so on. These sigils were then used in lots of other magical manuscripts of the period. The sigils and images of the planets are two separate sets. Both sets are used in the Ars Paulina (Part 3 of the Lemegeton) table of practise. In addition to the Lemegeton, at least two other grimoires, Rabbi Abognazar and Janua Magicae Reserata[7] depend partly on the Magical Calendar.

[1] In Book II chapters 4-14.

[2] Or to give it its full name, Calendarium Naturale Magicum Perpetuum Profundissimam Rerum Secretis Simarum Contemplationem, Totiusque Philosophiae Cognitionem Complectens.

[3] De Bry also illustrated other important occult works such as those of Robert Fludd.

[4] It is interesting that a manuscript copy of this Calendar has the bogus date of 1503, which is a direct reference back to the work and times of Agrippa and Trithemius. As Adam McLean has pointed out, the date is definitely bogus because one of the calendar tables included can only have come after the 1582 revision of the calendar by Pope Gregory XIII.

[5] Carlos Gilly has identified the original manuscript on which the printed Magical Calendar was based as British Library Harley MS 3420.

During the late 19th century renaissance of magic, S L MacGregor Mathers and Dr Wynn Westcott organised much of this information into the knowledge lectures of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, and in the course of doing this generated a Book of Correspondences. As Adam McLean points out in his edition of The Magical Calendar:

> "Mathers 'Book of Correspondences' circulated among the members of the R.R & A.C., the inner order of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, which was later published by Aleister Crowley as his own work 'Liber 777'. "

Like 'his' edition of the Goetia, and his publication in the Equinox of Mather's Golden Dawn rituals, Crowley's work was basically a light edit of the original scholarly work actually done by Mathers. As Crowley well knew, the main lists were assembled by the Golden Dawn founders, and he published them in 1909 over his own name with impunity and without so much as a backwards look. Mathers did attempt later to sue Crowley over his publication of Mather's work in the Equinox, but failed through lack of funds. Gerald Yorke, in his Editorial Preface to Liber 777, states that

> "Ninety per cent of the Hebrew, the four colour scales, and the order and attribution of the Tarot trumps are as taught in the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn with[in] its inner circle."

Israel Regardie gave Crowley the credit for creating the concept of tabulating the various sets of data (thereby producing 'a new type of literature'), even if Crowley did not generate very much of the content. But even that was not a new idea, as Agrippa had used tables 400 years before for the same purpose.

Liber 777 was first published by the Walter Scott Publishing Company as a slim volume of just 54 pages in 1909. Several times Crowley planned to re-issue it in an expanded form, first via the original Mandrake Press, and later in an illustrated colour edition through Oskar Hopfer. None of these plans came to fruition, and so it was not reprinted till after Crowley's death in 1947.

[7] Skinner & Rankine, Practical Angel Magic of Dr John Dee's Enochian Tables, published as Volume 1 of the Sourceworks of Ceremonial Magic, Golden Hoard Press, 2005.

In 1955 my old friend Gerald Yorke expanded the tables, added a lot of new notes from his Crowley archives, and published 777 Revised in a beautifully printed and limited edition volume through Neptune Press, the publishing arm of Atlantis, the famous London bookshop. This beautiful edition has since become a collector's item. Almost twenty years later Samuel Weiser, over their own copyright, republished 777 Revised in 1973 along with an Essay on Gematria, and Sepher Sephiroth[8] (both taken from Crowley's Equinox Vol. 1, Nos. 5 and 8 respectively) as The Qabalah of Aleister Crowley, with an introductory essay by Regardie.

The tables of Liber 777 are however all over the place in terms of their ordering, having been assembled partly in the order in which they were taught in the Golden Dawn, with some modifications made for the printer's convenience. Accordingly, using that book is quite difficult for the beginner.

The most fruitful sources used to create the present volume were the works of Henry Cornelius Agrippa (as edited by Donald Tyson), the Goetia (as edited by Joseph Peterson), Peter de Abano (as edited by the present author), MacGregor Mathers (both published and unpublished works), Aleister Crowley (as edited by Gerald Yorke), the four volumes of The Golden Dawn (as edited by Israel Regardie) and the inventor (supposedly Tycho Brahe) of the Magical Calendar (as edited by Adam McLean). David Godwin, Bill Whitcomb and Alan Hulse's volumes have also been useful and encyclopaedic references.

This material, and much more drawn from book and unpublished manuscript sources, in the British Library and Bodleian, has gone into the present book. I have re-grouped the information according to subject, and incorporated much new material which has become available with the recent publication of old Kabbalistic and magical texts. I have also tried to present the material in a more consistent and logical way. Of course sadly such an undertaking can never be complete. No work of this size and complexity will ever be error free or 'complete' in any sense of the word, and for this I accept full responsibility. However in building on the shoulders of the giants who have gone before, like Agrippa or Mathers, I hope to provide the magical student with a classic which will weather the next 100 years as well as Crowley's Liber 777 has weathered the last 100 years.

[8] Sepher Sephiroth was another example of Crowley borrowing somebody else's work, in that case Allan Bennett, editing it, and then publishing it over his own name.

Aleister Crowley's Liber 777

Of all the sources, in some ways Crowley's Liber 777 is the most difficult for a beginner to read. There are several reasons why it is initially difficult to read:

1. The ordering of the columns. These are neither grouped by subject nor presented in order of complexity. In many cases these appear to be grouped at random, as the information came to hand. For example, of the first eight columns, only two are in English. Unaccountably, things that would normally be grouped together are printed many pages apart, such as the gods of different cultures, which are separated from each other by many columns.

2. The quirkiness of some of his inclusions. For example Crowley amended the age old list of Archdemons to include some of his personal favourites, taken from Mathers' Kabbalah Unveiled, like Isheth Zenunim and Chioa[9] and placed these, without comment, into a standard and well established list. I have accordingly shown the traditional ascriptions but also provided a comment outlining the alternatives. Undoubtedly the content of some of the tables reflects the distribution of the present author's interests, but my overriding consideration was to present traditional pre-20th century attributions.

3. The lack of both translation and transliteration of many of the Hebrew columns. This is Crowley showing off his virtuosity with Hebrew, Latin and other languages, but it makes it very difficult for someone without a Classical education, or for the English-only reader. I have therefore supplied both translations and transliterations where necessary. The point of supplying letter for letter transliterations is so that the student who is not familiar with the Hebrew alphabet can still apply the techniques of Gematria to the words under consideration. In important and significant Tables there is also a numeration column, where these values have been calculated for the reader.

If you compare Crowley's columns with those in the present book you will see that some of his columns do not have a corresponding column in the present volume, because they were short on real information (e.g. his columns 4, 9, 25-32, 37, 124) or trivial (e.g. columns 10 and 77).[10] Many columns contain additional information (e.g. column 43) or completely new contents (e.g. column 46), and some of his columns containing several sets of incompatible information (e.g. column 49) are rationalised. Some columns (e.g. the single geomancy column 49) appear here in a much more complete form, in this case with more than 27 columns on the same subject. Others (e.g. column 47) contain much more up to date, or more correct information (e.g. the I Ching).

The Paths on the Tree of Life

The Tree of Life is one of the basic diagrams of the Kabbalah. If you look at any of the illustrations of the Tree (Figures 1, 2 or 3), you will see that the Tree of Life is composed of 10 circles, spheres or Sephiroth, connected together by 22 lines or Paths (or netivoth), making a total of 32 categories. In his book Liber 777, Crowley used the Sephiroth and Paths of the Tree of Life as his core reference points, and arranged all rows according to their numbers.

Hebrew Letters on the Paths

As we will see further down, as well as different Path arrangements, there are also several different arrangements of the letters on to the Paths on the Tree. It is interesting that even the secret Golden Dawn Cipher manuscript, upon which the Order was based, shows a completely different Path layout, with no horizontal Paths and a different arrangement of the Hebrew Letters.[11] Not only do these attributions differ within the Golden Dawn, but they also differ between main Kabbalistic schools. This means that the use of the Paths on the Tree of Life is not a rock solid basis for a definitive Table of Correspondences.

The Tree of Life is considered by Golden Dawn tradition Kabbalists to be a universal filing system, and although it may sound like heresy to say so, this approach in fact does not work so well.

Indeed Crowley soon found that there were at least four major problems with using the Path numbers of the Tree of Life in this way:

1. There are two double attributions in the system because:
    a) a row/Path for the 5th Element Aethyr is missing, and
    b) there is a double attribution of both Earth and Saturn to the same 32nd row/Path

Crowley had to introduce two more theoretical rows/Paths to cover these multiple attributions, and these lines show up at the bottom of some of his tables. This made for an uncomfortable additional of the two 'paths' of 31-bis and 32-bis, 'bis' being French for 'encore' or 'again'. As Crowley puts it:

> "31 and 32 must be supplemented by 31-bis and 32-bis, as these two paths possess a definitely double attribution; viz. 31-bis to Spirit as against 31 to Fire; 32-bis to Earth as against 32 to Saturn".

In fact these two Paths do not possess a double attribution. Crowley simply created one for tabular convenience, on rather flimsy theoretical pretexts.

[11] The Complete Golden Dawn Cipher Manuscript. Edited by Darcy Kuntz, Holmes Publishing, Edmonds, 1996. See cover diagram, and in the manuscript folios 53 and 54. These show, for example, the Hebrew letters on the Middle Pillar, as q, r, `, t rather than the accepted Golden Dawn attribution of g, s, t.

It is obvious that any system of classification is not working too well if you have to bolt on another two categories before you even get started.

2. The next thing Crowley realised was that many tables were only related to small parts of the Tree, and so (to the confusion of many students) he published a number of tables which were just sub-sets of the full 32+2 Paths, without fully explaining that some correspondences only belong to one subset.

3. To help clarify why certain correspondences grouped together and other lines showed gaps, he then printed the numbers 1-32-bis in the right hand Key column in a horizontally staggered format.

This has confused even more students, although his rationale was as follows. His bold middle column numbers for the numbers 0-10 were associated with the zero (Ain Soph) and the 10 Sephiroth. Further down, this middle column is used differently, where it is also associated with Path numbers 12, 13, 14, 21, 27, 30 and 32. These apparently unrelated numbers are the 7 Classical Planets. Then there is a column staggered to the right containing the unlikely set of numbers 11, 23, 31, 32-bis and 31-bis. These are the 4 Classical Elements plus the fifth Element Aethyr. The remaining numbers, which are staggered to the left, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 22, 24, 25, 26, 28, 29, are the 12 Zodiacal signs.

4. The numbers 11-32 bis have no particular symbolic meaning, they are simply convenient numbering for the Paths. Even Crowley has to say "observe that the numbers (of this column) subsequent to 10 are not to be considered as real numbers."

These are the four main problems encountered when using this method. Crowley's treatment of these problems was to simply force everything into the Sephiroth and Path mould. Then he made shorter Tables for categories which simply involved just the Sephiroth, just the Zodiac, just the Planets, or just the Elements, but Crowley was well aware of the forcedness of the classification.

In fact the 22 Paths do their job satisfactorily only in the context of the 22 letters of the Hebrew alphabet (and other cognate alphabets), and just maybe in the context of the 22 Tarot trumps. Considerations of other categories, especially the 5 Elements, 7 Planets and 12 Zodiacal signs, are poorly served by this arrangement. Each of these categories are split up by the 32 + 2 Path arrangement, and interleaved, so you cannot easily see the clear patterns, which become apparent when like is grouped with like.

Accordingly I will not be using the Path model, but looking back in time to the more traditional system of enumerating correspondences.

In this book, I have mostly ignored the order of the 32+2 Paths, and have instead gone back to the traditional building blocks of esoteric classification using the Zodiac, Elements, and Planets.

A New Row Order

The solution is to only show those things that are genuinely equivalent together on the same table. That is to show the Zodiacal, Elemental, and Planetary correspondences simply as themselves, without forcing them to conform to the (fairly arbitrary) Path numbering order of the Tree of Life. Or to put it another way, these tables preserve Hebrew Kabbalistic categories for the Hebrew Kabbalah and its cognates, but return to ancient magical and Classical categories for those things that can be better grouped by Zodiacal, Elemental, and Planetary attributions.

From a practical point of view this means that in this book the Path order of the 32 + 2 Path sequence will not be used, except for the Hebrew alphabet (and the other alphabets which relate directly to it) and the 22 major trumps of the Tarot, whist the rest of the tables will revert to the Classical groupings which have ruled since ancient times, arranged by the Zodiac, Elements and Planets (or 'ZEP' order). I have therefore uncoupled the grouping of the symbols and entities from the arbitrary restriction of the Path number order.

Don't worry though, as the Path numbers are still shown down the second column of most Tables for cross reference purposes, if you need them. However it is now the Zodiacal, Elemental and Planetary attributions that form the prime ordering mechanism for most of the Table structures. Surprisingly little has changed, except for the better, as immediately the significance of some symbolical groupings becomes much more apparent, and new patterns show up which were previously lost to sight.

For those purists who feel this is desecration, pause a while, and look at the groupings in the Tables. Where there were previously gaps in the Path order arrangement, the logic of the tables now stands out, with Planetary attributions all together, Zodiacal attributions falling together, and likewise for the attributions of the 5 Elements. Note that the Planets are of course duplicated in the first 10 numbers (Sephiroth). Where they appear as Sephiroth they are considered to be more universal, but where they appear lower down on the tables, they are more exclusively of a planetary nature.

Finally, a further and conclusive confirmation that this is the most natural way to group the correspondences is to be found in 777 Revised itself, in the section headed 'Explanation of the Attributions.' Here the explanatory text for a number of the columns, such as Crowley's columns 15, 18, 19, 34, 35, 38, 39 and many more, are each subdivided up into separate sections for 'The Elements', 'The Planets' and 'The Zodiac', confirming that Crowley also found that in practice the 'ZEP order' is the most natural way of dealing with, and explaining, the correspondences.

In the present volume, the two left hand columns are used as the Key columns to the tables. The numbers 1 to 10 refer to the ten Sephiroth, the rest is divided into Zodiac, Element and Planets (or 'ZEP' for short) groups.

Where any other order is used, such as with the 16 Geomantic figures, this differing row sort order will be indicated in the box at the top left of the relevant Table. Incidentally, Crowley barely touched upon the subject of geomancy in Liber 777 (only devoting part of one Column 49 to it), probably because the 16 figures wouldn't fit conveniently into his rows.

In Crowley's Liber 777 the key identifiers, the Zodiac, Element and Planetary sign of each Path form only one column of their own (Column 177), but I think these are so important that in this volume they appear in almost every table down the left hand side, so that you can see at all times if you are dealing with a Zodiacal sign, an Element, or a Planet.

This way it becomes much more instructive to see attributions of the 7 Planets grouped together in a table, and attributions of the 12 Zodiacal signs grouped together, and the 5 Element also grouped together, rather than having then intercut like a shuffled deck of cards.

Tarot on the Tree

Talking of cards, it was of course the Tarot pack which, first Mathers, and then Crowley, used to bridge the symbolic gap between the Kabbalah and the attributes of ancient, Classical and mediaeval magic. This use of the Tarot was however based upon something that has now been proved, beyond a shadow of a doubt, to be a fallacy. This fallacy, that the origin of the Tarot pack is to be found in the 'Book of Thoth' of ancient Egypt, was only invented relatively recently, in 1781, by Court de Gebelin in his book Le Monde Primitif, and elaborated upon by Etteilia later in the same century, finally to be embraced by Eliphas Levi and later the Victorian English occultists. More details will be found in the commentary on Table T.

It was Comte De Mellet who (in the same book) first suggested the infamous connection of the 22 Hebrew letters with the Tarot, not Eliphas Levi, although it was the latter who popularised it and became associated with it.

When you are freed of this erroneous misconception, then the Tarot reveals that it is in fact a splendidly constructed mediaeval emblem pack, a series of archetypal designs that were rich with symbolic meaning to the members of Renaissance society. When that is realised, then we can look truly at the very concrete meanings embedded in these cards, and forget much of the modern superstructure of symbolical speculation and accretion. We can again call a spade a spade, rather than 'an instrument of divine excavatory intent'.

How to Use these Tables

Because such a wide range of topics has been covered, a form of Alphabetic grouping has been utilised. For example, every Column to do with the Tarot has the prefix 'T', correspondences columns concerned with Angels are prefixed with 'A', and all Geomancy correspondence Columns are prefixed with a 'G', and so on.

The Tables are listed in the Contents page alphabetically, and a Subject Listing of Tables follows. This Subject list can be used as a quick lookup for broader subject groupings. Under Divination, for example, you will find Tarot, Geomancy, and I Ching/Yi Jing. Under the heading 'Magic' you will find Dr Dee ('D' columns), Natural Magic ('N' columns), and so on. The Tables and the Commentary are printed in strict alphabetic and numeric order for rapid location.

Some grouping have had to be slightly arbitrary. For example, all Hebrew angels could equally been put amongst Angels, or put in the Kabbalah section. For convenience angels that relate directly to the Tree of Life are grouped under Kabbalah, but other Biblical, Apocryphal and Gnostic angels are grouped under Angels, as otherwise the Kabbalah section would have become too unwieldy. This means there is some slight duplication, with the main Archangels of necessity appearing in several places.

I have refrained from using the spelling 'magick' which Crowley reintroduced into the language, as I do not think there is any further need to distinguish the magic of sorcery and Harry Potter from the parlour magic of the Victorians.

Note that where a Column is listed as a transliteration of another Column you should expect to see the Hebrew or Arabic letters replaced one for one with Latin capital letters (some characters like Ch, Sh and Th have a lower case character following them to distinguish them from characters with similar sound values). This is so non-Hebrew readers can easily see how many characters make up the word, easily add up the value of the Hebrew letters, perform Gematria on the word, and appreciate what the word actually 'sounds' like. If the Column is listed as a translation then you will instead find the word as it is usually written in English, or if it is not a proper noun, then the English meaning.

For example

אמת	Hebrew original
= AMTh	three letter transliteration
= Aemeth	usual translation into English
= Truth	English meaning
= 441	numeration.

Numbering Conventions

The 'zero row' representing the Unmanifest, and favoured by Crowley, has not been used. With the exception of the Ain Soph Aur of the Kabbalah and the Wu Chi of Taoist cosmology (not the Tao, which is more appropriate to Kether) there are very few attributions suitable for a zero row. In fact it is certain that anything that is able to be written down in this row cannot adequately represent the Unmanifest, so there is no zero row used in these tables. Where appropriate a note will be made of this in the Commentary.

For the convenience of readers and for purposes of comparison, Crowley's column numbers have been included in the second row of any column which relates in any way to a similar column in Liber 777. These numbers do not have an intrinsic or Kabbalistic numerical value. They have been transferred out of Roman numeral format into modern number format, as Roman numerals do not come as easily for today's readers as they did in Mathers' time when they were much more common, so for example a reference to Crowley's Column LXXXVIII is simply marked as '88'.

This book does not claim to be a complete exposition of any of the subjects tabulated. It is a tabular presentation of correspondences in both Western and Eastern systems of magic, religion and mysticism, and as such must devote most of its space to tabulation, not to explanation. Therefore comment is not evenly spread across all columns. Most of the comment occurs where some point needs explaining or updating, or is controversial, or where its source will not be found amongst the usual texts. Another exception is where completely new material has been introduced, such as the numerical correspondences of the Olympic Spirits or the numerical values of the Grades of Mithras, which have never before appeared in print in this form. Some Columns appear without any comment at all. I refer the reader to the Bibliography for further research.

The Nature of Correspondences

To understand how the correspondences are built up, it becomes important to see, and to test, the links in the chain. The basic Kabbalistic texts underlying these correspondences are the Sepher Yetzirah, the book Bahir, and the Zohar. It is no coincidence that Wynn Westcott (co-founder of the Golden Dawn with Mathers) published a translation (from the Latin rather than the Hebrew) of the Sepher Yetzirah in 1887, as this is one of the main links of the chain of correspondences that links Western Magic through astrology to the Hebrew Kabbalah.

There is no problem with the Sepher Yetzirah correspondences for the 10 Sephiroth which are clearly documented in many Hebraic and Latin sources, but the 22 Paths connecting the Sephiroth have had scant attention paid to them in much of the literature, and it is these Paths that are the crux of many Western correspondences.

At this point I recommend that anyone who is quite happy with the internally consistent Golden Dawn synthesis, or who is new to it, skips the rest of this section. If you proceed to read the rest of this section, prepare to have some of your basic preconceptions shaken a little, but at the end you will be standing on a firmer conceptual ground.

The main chain of correspondences has four links (marked 1-4):

Other Religions
Other Pantheons
| Alchemy
Tree of Life – 1 - Paths – 2 - Hebrew Letters – 3 - Astrology ZEP[12] - 4 - Tarot
| | | Geomancy
Angels, Demons Other Alphabets Natural Magic Spirits Gematria/Isopsephy Plants, Stones, Herbs, Perfumes

As you can see, the Hebrew letters are central to the chain, and to the Kabbalah. You can also see that the Tarot is actually a long conceptual distance from the Tree of Life[13], and we will later see why this has caused both Mathers and Crowley to make various tweaks to links 3 and 4 (like swapping the cards Strength and Justice, or the cards Emperor and Star), without perhaps addressing the root of the problem.

Taking each of the four links in turn:

1. Tree of Life – Paths Link

The Tree of Life diagram comes in three main 'flavours': the Gra, the Lurianic, and the Kircher/Golden Dawn Tree. The most familiar to modern readers is the Golden Dawn Tree shown in Figure 2 which shows three Paths radiating from Malkuth at the bottom but with only 4 paths crossing the so-called Abyss. The Lurianic Tree (named after its promoter Isaac Luria, the 'Ari') in Figure 3 shows only one Path leading from Malkuth (it also occurs in older sources like the Bahir). All three Trees have 22 Paths, but obviously the numbering of the Paths differs, so this link yields variable results, and is not as firm as most commentators imply. I will be comparing the three Trees later in this introduction. Let us now look at how the chain of correspondence proceeds from there.

[12] Zodiac, Elements, Planets.

[13] It was not till the 19th century that the Tarot was first connected to the much more ancient symbolism of the Kabbalah, and this connection was made by French esotericists in the spirit of Romanticism rather than careful scholarship.

2. Paths Numbers – Hebrew Letters Link

All three types of Trees have 22 Paths, and as the Sepher Yetzirah states, one letter of the Hebrew alphabet is allocated to each Path. The problem is that the Sepher Yetzirah does not diagrammatically show what this allocation is. There are however definite allocations of the 3 types of Hebrew letters to the Paths:

a) The 3 Mother letters (א Aleph, מ Mem and שׁ Shin) are logically allocated to the 3 Elements (excluding Earth). On the Lurianic Tree, they are the three horizontal Paths on the Tree. The Golden Dawn Tree however applies Aleph to connect Sephiroth 1 and 2, Mem to connect 5 and 8, and Shin to connect 8 and 10: hardly a satisfactory distribution of these three most important letters.

b) The seven Double letters[14] (ב Beth, ג Gimel, ד Daleth, כ Kaph, פ Peh, ר Resh, ת Tau) are allocated to the 7 Planets. On the Lurianic Tree, these are the 7 vertical Paths on the Tree. On the Golden Dawn Tree they appear to be just randomly allocated.

c) The twelve Single letters (ה He, ו Vau, ז Zain, ח Cheth, ט Teth, י Yod, ל Lamed, נ Nun, ס Samekh, ע Ayin, צ Tzaddi, ק Qoph) are allocated to the 12 Zodiacal signs. On the Lurianic Tree these are systematically allocated only to the diagonal Paths on the Tree. On the Golden Dawn Tree they fill the remaining Paths, with no obvious pattern.

Obviously for this link to work we have to establish which allocation is correct. The clue to the positioning of the three different types of Hebrew letters on the Tree (and hence the Paths) occurs in the very clear differentiation of the three different types of letters. It also occurs in the last section of the Sepher Yetzirah (which is in fact dropped from some editions). This section lists out the qualities of each of the 32 'Intelligences.'[15] The symbolism of the first ten Intelligences show clearly that they are meant to be the 10 Sephiroth, and the texts show some interesting secret connections between the Sephiroth. The next 22 Intelligences are from the 22 Paths, and from the hints (particularly in the original Hebrew) you can see which two Sephiroth are connected by each Intelligence or Path. Crowley clearly did not understand the significance of this section when he wrote of it:

> "Column XII...These attributions arise from the description of the paths in the Sepher Yetzirah. This is one of the most ancient books of the Qabalah; but it is far from clear how the ideas correspond with the general scheme of symbolism. They seem of no use in practical magical work." [16]

[14] Those letters with two different pronunciations, the harder version indicated by a dot or dagesh in the centre of the letter.

[15] In fact Intelligence was an old name for an angel, and this perhaps suggests that you can pass from one Sephirah to another with the aid of an angel.

On the contrary, they are the clearest available indicators of the correct order of the Paths. I will not pursue this here, except to say that these indications taken together with the real meaning of the Serpent and Lightning Flash give the correct order for the Path numbers. They also indicate the correct order of meditational practice. Note that I am only talking about the numbering here.

3 - Hebrew Letters - Astrology (Zodiac /Element/Planet) Link

This link is perhaps the most important for Western magic, as most of the other non-Kabbalistic correspondences depend upon it. Let us look at the parts:

a) The three Elements Aleph=Air, Mem=Water, Shin=Fire is clearly set out in Chapter 3 of the Sepher Yetzirah.

b) The Zodiac. This correlation of the 12 single letters to the 12 signs of the Zodiac is agreed upon by all commentators and is very clearly laid out in Chapter 5 of the Sepher Yetzirah.

c) The Planets however are a different matter, and occur in more than four variant arrangements in Chapter 4 of the various editions of the Sepher Yetzirah. The main variants are discussed below.

Westcott & Kaplan in their translations of the Sepher Yetzirah show:

Beth - Moon
Gimel - Mars
Daleth - Sun
Kaph - Venus
Peh - Mercury
Resh - Saturn
Tau - Jupiter

It is very curious that Mathers did not use this arrangement, especially as he probably had a hand in the translation of the Westcott version.

Sheirat Yoseph (quoted in Kaplan)[17] gives a completely different order, which I think is completely wrong, allocating Beth to Saturn, Gimel to Sun, Daleth to Moon, Kaph to Mars, Peh to Mercury, Resh to Jupiter, and Tau to Venus. In associating the particular letters with each planet the Jesuit Athanasius Kircher speculatively allots Beth to the Sun, Gimel to Venus, Daleth to Mercury, Kaph to Luna, Peh to Saturn, Resh to Jupiter, and Tau to Mars.

For some reason, Mathers gave an order which is not included in any of these versions of the Sepher Yetzirah. This is the order that has influenced all of 20th century esoteric thought, but it is not an order with foundations in tradition:

[17] Sepher Yetzirah: The Book of Creation. Weiser, Boston, 1997, page 178-179.

Beth - Mercury
Gimel - Moon
Daleth - Venus
Kaph - Jupiter
Peh - Mars
Resh - Sun
Tau - Saturn

By far the largest number of versions of the Sepher Yetzirah (including both the Long and Short Version of the text) give an order which follows exactly the order of the Planets on the Sephiroth, which is therefore the most Kabbalistically logical. This is also the arrangement favoured by the translation by Gershom Scholem, who could be said to have a broader perspective on the Kabbalah than any other 20th century scholar. More impressively, this order is reflected in the pediments of the Ziggurat of Ur, suggesting it also has the most ancient pedigree:

Beth - Saturn
Gimel - Jupiter
Daleth - Mars
Kaph - Sun
Peh - Venus
Resh - Mercury
Tau - Moon

There are other hints of the rightness of this order, especially when using the Lurianic Tree which puts the Planets on the Paths connecting the Sephiroth vertically. The only conclusion open to us is that the planetary attributions in Mathers' working are in fact incorrect. I think it strange that Mathers preferred to preserve the fairly recent sequencing of the Tarot trumps in preference to retaining the considerably older instructions of the Sepher Yetzirah. I feel therefore that the time has come to turn back to this older attribution.

This arrangement has also been pointed out by Carlos Suares. I have not however made this change to the Tarot tables from Tables T1 to T28, which follow strict Golden Dawn attributions. Columns T37-T40 show how the Tarot would look if the ancient Sepher Yetzirah attributions had been adopted by Mathers. It is up to you, the reader, to decide for yourself if you wish to implement this material. The effect of correcting this, is to bring the 7 Planets on the Paths into line with the Sepher Yetzirah and to put their 7 corresponding Tarot Trumps on different Paths. If this ancient Planetary order is accepted, then the attribution of 7 of the Tarot Trumps to the Paths changes in a way which is infinitely more logical. The connection between each Tarot trump and its Planet is however not affected (as we will see below).

4 – Astrology (Zodiac /Element/Planet) - Tarot Link

Mathers' alignment of individual Tarot Trumps with the Zodiac, Element and Planets is very cogent. By retaining this, 7 of the Planetary Trumps now fall on different Paths, but remain linked to exactly the same Planets.

I also feel it is better to jettison the Roman numbering of the Tarot all together, as it is a very recent addition[18], and intimately tied up with the basically wrong traditional French numerical attributions. This is not as inflammatory a statement as it first seems. Remember that as Eliphas Levi put The Magician = Aleph, every one of his attributions is therefore wrong in Golden Dawn terms, or any other terms. Levi's excuse is that it was just a 'blind'. I don't believe in blinds. I think information should be given to the best of one's ability, or withheld, but not provided in an intentionally crippled form. Almost all writers of the French tradition followed this deliberately blinded attribution.

Accordingly the Roman numbering will always be out of step with both the Paths of the Tree and the Hebrew letters of any modern system anyway.

In addition, as the Tarot is itself a distillation of a series of broken emblem sets, something we will see in the commentary on the Tarot section, so the idea of assigning them a sequence of ordered numbers is intrinsically nonsense. In fact all the early packs were unnumbered (current numbering of packs like the Visconti-Sforza was only applied in the last few decades of the 20th century). Finally as Stuart Kaplan clearly shows, the order of the Tarot cards has changed many times in the 600 years of its existence, so the Roman numbering of the Trumps is at best a convenience, and at worst a very misleading distraction.

So let me sum up. The links in the chain are as follows:

1. Tree of Life - Path Link. There are three main Tree formats, the Gra, the Golden Dawn and the Lurianic versions, therefore this connection is not as fixed as one might think, and tables from Liber 777 would have to be re-arranged accordingly for whichever Tree was used. The variant Tree arrangements have however no effect on the rearrangement of the present Tables, as these are dependent only on ZEP order rather than Path number order anyway.

2. Path - Hebrew Letters Link. These attributions are also not fixed. The Lurianic Tree's use of horizontal Paths for Elements, vertical Paths for Planets and diagonal Paths for Zodiacal signs has much to recommend it, is more ancient, and is more logical than the Golden Dawn arrangement.

3. Hebrew Letters – Astrology. Link As Mathers did not use any standard edition of the Sepher Yetzirah to associate the Planets with the Hebrew letters (not even Westcott's edition) his seven Planet to Hebrew Letter attributions are suspect. I recommend that you examine the realignment of the 7 Planets and their Tarot trumps with the Hebrew letters as shown in Columns T37-T40.

[18] Early packs like the Visconti-Sforza pack did not number their Trumps at all.

4. Astrology – Tarot Link. Mathers' clever attributions of the Tarot Trumps to the astrological Zodiac, Elements, and Planets (as shown in the Golden Dawn Cipher manuscript) still holds good.

With regard to the Tarot, I recommend that you also ignore or remove the Roman numbering of the Tarot to allow the Trumps to be assigned to the Paths correctly and smoothly without the usual sense of numerical dislocation. These numbers and relative ordering have changed many times over the last 600 years and have no intrinsic value, being useful only as identifiers, and the name of the Trump adequately fulfils that function.

Spelling and Transliteration

The spelling of names, such as those of the Archangels, has been standardised to Golden Dawn style, except where a specific authority closer to the origin has been quoted, then that spelling has then been used. In the Kabbalistic section I have listed all entries in Hebrew, but have also provided columns with the English transliteration, and the English translation, making it more user friendly, rather than being only accessible to the Hebrew reading specialist.

Hebrew has been transliterated according to MacGregor Mather's table of equivalents in The Kabbalah Unveiled. Although that is not modern practice, and the mixed use of capitals and lower case looks very uncomfortable to the eye of modern Hebrew scholars, nevertheless this is the format most easily recognisable by those interested in Western occultism, and so has been the one used. For scholars who read the original Hebrew, the transliteration is redundant anyway, as they can go direct to the Hebrew letters and ignore the transliteration. At a late stage in production it was observed that, in the particular Hebrew font used here, there is very little difference between נ Nun and ג Gimel, and between ח Cheth and ה Heh, so be careful when reading these letters.

For Chinese columns, the Wade-Giles system of transliteration has been used as standard, rather than either modern pinyin or James Legge's antiquated Victorian system. Pinyin, although now almost universal as a system of Chinese transliteration is, surprisingly, based on Albanian sound values, which make it rather unnatural for English speakers. In addition the present author's books on Chinese metaphysics and feng shui are all presented in Wade-Giles format, so it is consistent for him to use the same system here.

Variant Attributions

I will be predominantly observing Golden Dawn attributions throughout, especially where they are clearly and closely drawn from older sources like Agrippa. Where these have been corrected it will clearly be marked and explained. I will not be utilising the mid-20th century swap of Emperor and Star Tarot Trumps favoured by Crowley, and derived from a line in his Book of the Law.

The only notable exception to Golden Dawn practice is the reversal of the ascription of two magical weapons back to the traditional grimoire ascription of the Sword to Fire and the Wand to Air[19]. In addition, several well known and acknowledged 'blinds' have been silently removed, as we no longer live in the prudish atmosphere of Victorian England. One example of such a blind is Bishop Leadbeater's attribution of the Svadisthana chakra to the 'spleen', when he was certainly aware that this chakra maps directly onto the genitals.

Tree of Life Formats

The following three Figures show three different arrangements of the Paths of the Tree of Life:

1) The conventional geometrical arrangement of the Tree of Life of Moses Cordovero (1522-1570) accepted since the time of the Jesuit Athanasius Kircher (1601-1680), and popularised by the Golden Dawn. (Figure 2)

2) The arrangement found in the Bahir (first published 1176) and favoured by Rabbi Isaac Luria (1533-1572). (Figure 3)

3) The Golden Dawn Cipher Manuscript showing a third arrangement of Paths with Daath shown as a full blown Sephirah, and with Paths connecting it to the six other surrounding Sephiroth. The inclusion of this third form is simply to demonstrate that the 'standard' Golden Dawn Tree of Life was not the only one, even within the Golden Dawn itself. (Figure 1)

The Gra version of the Tree of Life (which essentially shows the pre-Fall situation) is not shown here.

The Path numbers in these tables refer to the first (and by far the most common) Golden Dawn Tree. However tables in this book can be happily used on any of the three Tree arrangements, simply by ignoring the Path numbers column, and using the ZEP (Zodiac, Element, Planet) column to place the correspondences.

		E5. Alchemical Processes - Lapidus.	E6. Ripley's Twelve Gates.
			Process	Description
♈	15	Calcination	Calcinations	The conversion of a raw substance, through the use of intense heat. When a substance is heated to just below its melting point, all moisture is lost, its carbonates decompose, leaving behind a calx or ash.
♉	16	Congelation	Dissolution	The process of melting or dissolving with chemical solvents, making the operation of their future separation possible.
♊	17	Fixation	Separation	Separation of substances which are re-crystallized independently, separating the pure essence of the elements from their impure matter.
♋	18	Dissolution	Conjunction	Reuniting of fundamental substances, which may previously have been separated.
♌	19	Digestion	Putrefaction	The purification of substances through a moist disintegration. Organic matter is used to artificially induce oxidization, creating a spontaneous decomposition and corruption.
♍	20	Distillation	Congealation/ Coagulation	The process of binding or crystallizing substances from a fluid to a solid. Whether the substance is heated to evaporate excess moisture, or cooled after been dissolved by heat, it is reduced again into a homogeneous body.
♎	22	Sublimation	Cibation	The material within a sealed crucible is strengthened by saturating it with fresh nourishment. This is provided by the transformative tincture of the substance itself, condensed from the vapour circulating within the vessel.
♏	24	Separation	Sublimation	The process of vaporization by the gradual application of extreme heat, followed by dry precipitation. Transformation from a solid to gaseous state is made more precious by avoiding any loss of potency by earthly contact.
♐	25	Incineration/ Ceration	Fermentation	Organic substances converted into new compounds by the presence of a ferment.
♑	26	Fermentation	Exaltation	The process of heating a substance to concentrate its strength. This transmutation of the substance creates maturity.
♒	28	Multiplication	Multiplication/ Augmentation	The amplification of a substance through internal multiplication. This white or red tincture is also known as the Philosophers Stone.
♓	29	Projection	Projection	The tincture is introduced into molten base metals, causing the transmutation of their elements into gold or silver.

E. Emblems and Alchemy

		E7. Splendor Solis Emblems.	E8. Splendor Solis – Images in the Surrounding Frame.
		Emblem 1. The Arms of the Art. A coat of arms being a Sun and blue ornate heraldic foliage, surmounted by a crowned helmet with three crescent moons. Above the shield another Sun shines down from a red hanging. Scroll: Arma Artis.	2 monkeys, herons, owl, plants
		Emblem 2. The Philosopher. A bearded philosopher stands wearing red and purple, pointing to a flask half full of golden liquid which he holds in his right hand – probably the finished elixir. Scroll: Eamus Quesitum Quosuor Elementorum Naturas	Dear, peacock, owl, birds, fly
		Emblem 3. Knight of the Double Fountain. A crowned knight in full gold-trimmed armour brandishing a sword in his right hand and holding a golden shield in his left, on which is inscribed Ex duabus aquis una[m] facite. Qui quaeritis Solis…nafacem…date bibere inimico… Et videbitis cum mortuum. Dein[um?] de aquater era[t] facte Et lapide muleiblicositis. He stands one foot upon each side of an ornate double fountain, which overflows like a fountain. His buckler is coloured in sequence black, white, yellow, red, black. And 7 stars encircle his head.	Peacock, birds, flowers
		Emblem 4. Lunar Queen and Solar King. The Queen (with scroll inscribed Lac viramium) in white standing on a ball with a face. Above her is a Moon. She faces a King with scroll (Minsimetium? Coagula), scepter and wearing red and ermine robes. He stands under a Sun, and in a fire. A scroll above is inscribed: Particularia, and below Via Universalis particularibus Inclusis.	Plants and birds. Below a frieze showing scenes of armies, a king visiting a philosopher in a barrel (Diogenes?).
		Emblem 5. Digging the Ore. Two miners dig into a small hill with pick-axes. In a lake nearby floats a crescent Moon.	A different framing like a gilt mirror. Below a king and queen in a court scene.
		Emblem 6. The Tree. Two philosophers talk under a tree which has a number of black and white birds flying from it. The largest pecks at the crown of the tree. A man is climbing a ladder propped against the tree which grows from a golden crown around its trunk. The philosophers are dressed in red & white.	4 naked woman bathe at a golden fountain attended by 2 attendants
		Emblem 7. The Dying (drowning) King. A Queen in yellow robes and ermine, with scepter and orb, stands beside a lake. A white bird perches on the orb. Behind him is the sun, and above her is a golden star. In a lake a king in yellow is seen to be drowning or possibly wading.	Below are two mythological scenes, with man with club (Hercules?)
		Emblem 8. The Angel and the dark Man. A crowned and white winged angel with a six-pointed star shining above her head. She holds out a red cloak to a dark naked man who is emerging from a swamp. One arm is red, the other white. His head is like a black crystal ball.	2 dear, 2 monkeys, plants, flowers
		Emblem 9. The Hermaphrodite. A winged hermaphrodite in a black formal jacket holding an egg is its left hand, and a mirror in its right. Its right wing is red, its left is white.	Birds and plants
		Emblem 10. Dismembering the Body. A bearded man in armour with a sword has dismembered another man's naked body on the ground before him. Emblem	E9. Book of Lambspring Emblems.
	Title. A coat of arms displaying a lamb surmounted by a helmet, surrounded by green plumes and surmounted by a second lamb. Frontispiece. A wand carrying Philosopher stands beside a flag surmounted furnace. He wears the image of a black double headed eagle. He has and eagle handled sword.
1	Two fishes lie dead on the surface of a lake facing in opposite directions. A boat draws near.
2	An armed man with raised sword and shield faces a two legged green winged dragon with a river in the background.
3	A unicorn meets with a stag in a forest with a lake in the background.
4	A lion and a lioness in a forest clearing.
5	A wolf and a dog fighting on a river bank with bridge and city in the background.
6	A winged ouroboros biting its own tail in a forest glade.
7	A bird sits upon a nest high in a tree, while another bird flys by. At the foot of the tree is a snail.
8	Two large birds (swans?) fighting, with one upside down, in a forest with a river in the background.
9	A crowned king with an orb and sceptre is seated upon a dolphin-armed throne mounted on a stone canopied pediment reached by 7 steps. His feet rest upon the dragon from Emblem 2. In the background is a river and town.
10	A bare-chested man with red loincloth uses a trident to control a salamander in a blazing open fire fed from between two rocks, in a country landscape. The salamander has a line of stars along its back.
12	The winged, bearded and crowned angel (left) and the young figure in armour (right) stand upon an unnaturally high mountain, with a radiant Sun on the left and the Moon and stars on the right.
13	In the arcade of a palace the venerable bearded king sits upon a red canopied throne. He holds the young prince affectionately. The winged, bearded and crowned angel gestures towards the other two.
14	The venerable bearded king lies ill and sweating in his bed in a bare and empty chamber. Outside a heavy rain falls.

E. Emblems and Alchemy

Key	E10. The Twelve Keys of Basil Valentinus Emblems.
1	First Key. A hated and robed King with scepter talks with a Queen holding a rose with 3 flowers and a peacock feather. In front of the King a fox jumps over a crucible placed on a fire. In front of the Queen, the figure of Death, an old man with a scythe and crippled leg, straddles a fire with crucible.
2	Second Key. A winged Mercury with winged feet stands holding a caduceus in each hand is attacked by two men. To his right is a man with a sword wrapped in a serpent, and to his left a man with a sword, with a bird perched upon its point. Either side of Mercury is a Sun and a Moon at the level of his thighs. In front of Mercury is a large pair of detached wings.
3	Third Key. A winged dragon with curled tail and pointed tongue faces left, with rugged mountains and a castle in the background. Behind a fox runs off with a hen in its mouth. A cockerel attacks it.
4	Fourth Key. Death. A skeleton stands on a draped coffin with pall-bearers' staves in a churchyard. On the left a candle burns, while on the right is a tree dies.
5	Fifth Key. A crowned woman with a heart and seven-blossomed rose stands by a furnace. She is connected with flask on the furnace. Beside the woman stands an alchemist with flaming head and mouth, and bellows. A blindfold cupid fires an arrow at the woman. On the left is a regal lion with a crown above his head, and S-shaped tail. A radiant Sun shines above the lion.
7	Seventh Key. Justice, a woman holding scales and a sword, stands behind a large circle above which is written 'Sigilum Hermalis'. In front is a circular talisman with 'Chaos' within around it. Inside the circle is a square with the four seasons written on each side, and 'Sal Philosophorum' at the bottom. Inside that is a triangle labeled 'AQUA'.
8	Eighth Key. Resurrection. In a circular graveyard with 12 arches, two men with crossbows fire at a target with a key above it. Seven arrows are imbedded in the target. Between the men is an open grave out of which a corpse is rising. Corn is sprouting from the grave, also symbolic of resurrection. Another corpse lies on the ploughed field which is being sown with grain, some is being eaten by four birds. The Angel of Resurrection holding a scepter of dominion sounds her trumpet.
9	Ninth Key. At bottom in a circle are three hearts with three serpents emerging in a clockwise direction. At the top are a man and woman with their bodies forming a cross joining 4 birds. To the South is a Peacock, to the West is a Swan, to the North is a crow, and to the East is a black Eagle.
10	Tenth Key. A downward pointing triangle surrounded by the words "I am born out of Hermogenes. Hyperion elected me. Without lamsuph I perish" in Latin. Inside the vertices is the Sun on the left with BLKShGO, the Moon on the right with DDHD or DDChD, and Mercury at the bottom with KRRK or KDDK, all in Hebrew. Within the triangle is a double circle with TOBCh in Hebrew.
11	Eleventh Key. Two lions attack each other. On the back of each rides a woman holding a heart from which springs a Sun and a Moon. Behind the left woman stands a knight with sword raised to strike her. Behind the right lion are four cubs.
12	Twelfth Key. Inside a laboratory an alchemist stands in front of a barrel furnace. Outside the window are the Sun and the Moon. The alchemist points to a triangular crucible on a bench with two roses growing out of it, and the symbol of Mercury above. On the right a lion devours a snake.

Man-sion.	H39. The Mansions of the Moon - Abenragel.	H40. The Mansions of the Moon – first degree.	H41. The Mansions of the Moon according to Abenragel – Indian Interpretation.	H42. The Mansions of the Moon according to Abenragel – Dorotheos Interpretation.
1	Alnath/Ilnath Al Sharatain	0°0' 0" Aries (Ram's head)	Good for taking medicines, pasturing livestock, making journey, except second hour	Good for buying tame animals, for journeys, especially voyages, for making arms, planting trees, cutting hair or nails, putting on new clothes. Bad for contracting marriage (holds for Moon in Aries), making partnerships, or buying slaves, who will be bad, disobedient or run away. If captured, prison will be bad and strong.
2	Albethain Al Butain	12°11' 26" Aries	Good for sowing and making journeys.	Bad for marriage, buying slaves, and for boats and prisoners similar to Alnath
3	Athoraie Al Thurayya	25°22' 52" Aries (Ram's belly)	Good for trading and revenge on enemies; indifferent for travel.	Good for buying tame animals and hunting, for all matters involving fire, and for doing good. Bad for marriage, and making partnerships, especially with those more powerful. Bad for buying cattle or flocks, for planting trees, sowing or putting on new clothes. If captured, prison will be strong and long. Water journeys will bring fear and danger.
4	Addauennam Al Dabaran	8°34' 18" Taurus (Aldebaran)	Good for sowing, for putting on new clothes, for receiving women and feminine things, for demolishing a building or starting a new one, for making a journey, except for third part of day.	Good to build a house, which will be solid, and building in general, to dig a ditch, to buy slaves, who will be loyal and honest, and to buy livestock. Also good to be with kings and lords, for receiving power or honours. Bad to contract marriage, since woman will prefer another, or to enter partnerships, especially with those more powerful. Voyages will involve big waves. If captured, the captivity will be long but, if captured for skills, will be released through goodwill.
5	Alhathaya Al Hak'ah	21°45' 44" Taurus (Orion's shoulder)	Good for contracting marriage, for putting boys to study laws, scriptures or writing, for making medicines, for making a journey.	Good for buying slaves, who will be good and loyal, for building, for travel by water, for washing head, indeed general washing, and cutting hair. Bad for partnerships. If captured, imprisonment will be long, unless captured for skills, when he will escape.
6	Alhana /Atabuen Al Han'ah	4°17' 10" Gemini	Good for kings to declare war, enrollment of armies and cavalry, for knights seeking better pay, for the successful siege of a city, for smiting enemies and evildoers. Bad for sowing, seeking a loan, or burial.	Good for partnerships and ventures, associates will agree and be honest and loyal, for hunting, for journeys by water, though delays. Bad for taking medicine and for treating wounds. New clothes put on will soon tear. If captured, release within three days or very long imprisonment.
7	Addirach Al Dhira	17°36' 36" Gemini	Good for ploughing and sowing, for putting on new clothes, for women's jewellery, for cavalry. Bad for journeys, except in last third of night.	Good for partnerships, which will be good and useful, with loyal and agreeable associates, for washing head, cutting hair and new clothes, for buying slaves and livestock, for smiting or making peace with enemies, for voyages towards destination, but delays on return. Bad for buying land, and for giving up medicine. If captured, unless he escapes in three days, he will die in prison. Likewise, if he has escaped something he fears, he will encounter it again.

Man-sion.	H39. The Mansions of the Moon - Abenragel.	H40. The Mansions of the Moon – first degree.	H41. The Mansions of the Moon according to Abenragel – Indian Interpretation.	H42. The Mansions of the Moon according to Abenragel – Dorotheos Interpretation.
8	Aluayra Al Nathra	0°0' 0" Cancer	Good for taking medicine, for cutting new clothes, for women's jewellery and putting it on. Rain will bring benefit not damage. Bad for travel, except for last third of night.	Good for voyages, swift on outward and return journeys. Marriages contracted will be harmonious for a while, then discordant. A slave bought will deceitful, accuse his master, and run away. A partnership started will involve fraud on either side. If captured, long imprisonment.
9	Attraaif Al Tarf	12°11' 26" Cancer	Bad for sowing, journeys, entrusting anything to anyone, or seeking to harm anyone.	Good for voyages, outward and return, for reinforcing doors and making locks, for making beds and putting up bed-curtains, for transplanting wheat. Bad for partnerships, which will involve fraud on either side. Bad for cutting hair, or new clothes. Putting on new clothes may lead to drowning in them. If captured, long imprisonment.
10	Algebhe Al Jabhah	25°22' 52" Cancer	Good for contracting marriage, for sugar and what is made with it. Bad for journeys and entrusting anything, for putting on new clothes or for women's jewellery.	Good for buildings, which will last, and for partnerships, benefiting all parties. If captured, at the command of a leader or because of great deed, and long, hard imprisonment.
11	Azobrach Al Zubrah	8°34' 18" Leo	Good for sowing and planting, for besieging. Indifferent for trade and journeys. Bad for freeing captives.	Good for buildings and foundations, which will last, and for partnerships, from which associates will gain. Good for cutting hair. Bad for new clothes. If captured, at the command of a leader, and long imprisonment
12	Azarfa Al Sarfah	21°45' 44" Leo	Good for starting all building, for arranging lands, sowing and planting, for marriage, for putting on new clothes, for women's jewellery, for making a journey in the first third of day.	Good for buying slaves and livestock, once the Moon is out of Leo, since the Lion is a great devourer. (If he eats a lot it leads to stomach pains, power, boldness and obstinacy.) What is lent will not be returned, or only with great effort and delay. Voyages will be long, hard and dangerous, but not fatal.
13	Aloce Al Awwa	4°17' 10" Virgo	Good to plough, sow, make a journey, marry, free captives.	Good to buy a slave, who will be good, loyal and honest, to start building, to give oneself to pleasures and jokes, to come before a king or famous man, to take medicines, to cut new clothes, to wash or cut hair. Not bad to marry a corrupted woman, and, if marrying a virgin, the marriage will last a while. A voyage undertaken will involve delay in return. If captured, he will be injured in prison, but captivity will end well.
14	Azimech Al Simak	17°36' 36" Virgo	Good for marrying a woman who is not a virgin, for medicines, sowing and planting. Bad for journeys or entrusting something to someone.	Good to start a voyage and a partnership, which will be profitable and harmonious, to buy a slave, who will be good, honest and respectful. Marriage with a virgin will not last long, and it is not bad to marry a corrupted woman. If captured, he will soon escape or be released.

15	Algarf Al Ghafr	0°0' 0" Libra	Good to dig wells and ditches, to cure illnesses to do with wind, but not others. Bad for journeys.	Good for moving house, for adapting or preparing a house, its owner and site. Good to seek to do a good deed, to buy and sell, but selling slaves not livestock, because Libra is a human sign. Bad for both land and sea journeys. Marriage will not last in harmony, or only for a while. Partnerships entered will lead to fraud and discord. Money lent will not be returned. Bad for cutting hair.
16	Azebone Al Jubana	12°11' 26" Libra	Bad for journeys, trade, medicines, sowing, women's jewellery, for cutting or putting on new clothes.	A slave bought will be good, loyal and honest. Bad for marriage, which will only last in harmony for a while, for partnerships, which will lead to dishonesty and mutual suspicion. If captured, he will soon be out of prison, if God wills.
17	Alidil Iklil al Jabhah	25°22' 52" Libra	Good to buy flocks livestock, to change their pasture, to put on new jewellery and besiege towns.	Good for starting building, which will be solid and durable, for settling a dispute between two people, to foster love, and love begun will be absolutely solid and last for ever. Good for all medicine. Voyages started will bring anxiety and sorrows, but he will survive. Partnerships started will bring discord, and he who marries, will find his wife impure. Bad for selling slaves or cutting hair.
18	Alcalb Al Kalb	8°34' 18" Scorpio	Good for building, for arranging lands and buying them, for receiving honours and power. If it begins to rain, it will be wholesome, useful and good. Eastwards journeys are favoured.	Building undertaken will be solid. Good for planting and taking medicines. If a man gets married and the Mars is with the Moon here, he will find her not to be a virgin. If he enters a ship he will come out again. Bad for selling slaves, new clothes, cutting hair. Partnerships will result in discord.
19	Yenla Al Shaula	21°45' 44" Scorpio	Good for besieging towns and encampments, for disputing against enemies, for making a journey, for sowing and for planting trees. Bad for entrusting something to somebody.	If a man gets married, he will find her not to be a virgin. Bad for voyages, which will end in shipwreck, for partnerships, which will be discordant, for selling slaves, and very bad for a captive.
20	Alimain Al Na'am	4°17' 10" Sagittarius	Good for buying animals. Rain will be good and do no harm. Indifferent for journeys.	Good for buying small animals. Bad for partnerships and captivity.
21	Albeda Al Baldah	17°36' 36" Sagittarius	Good for starting any building, for sowing, for buying lands or livestock, for buying and making women's jewellery and clothes. Indifferent for journeys.	A woman who is divorced or widowed will not marry again. Indifferent for slaves bought, since they will think much of themselves and will not humble themselves to their masters.

22	Sahaddadebe Al Sa'dal Dhabih	0°0' 0" Capricorn	Good for medicine and journeys, except for last third of day. Good for putting on new clothes.	Good for entering a partnership, which will bring profit and usefulness, and for entering a ship, though there will be great anxieties from a strong desire to return and the like. A man who becomes engaged will break the engagement before the wedding and die within six months, or the couple will be in conflict and live badly, with the wife mistreating the husband. Bad for buying slaves, who will do ill to their master, or run away, or be irksome or bad. If captured, he will soon gain freedom.
23	Zadebolal Al Sa'dal Bula	12°11' 26" Capricorn	Good for medicine, for putting on new jewellery and clothes, for a journey in the middle third of day. Bad to entrust something to someone.	Good for partnerships. Bad for marriage, since wife will mistreat husband and they will not be together much, for entering a ship, if a short voyage is wanted, for buying slaves. If captured, he will soon regain liberty.
24	Zaadescod Al Sa'dal Su'ud	25°22' 52" Capricorn	Good for medicine, sending out armies and soldiers. Indifferent for journeys. Bad for merchandise, jewellery, putting on new clothes, marrying.	A slave bought will be strong, loyal and good. Bad for partnerships, which will end in great harm and conflict, and for entering a ship. Marriage will only last a while. If captured, he will soon be free.
25	Sadalabbia Al Sa'dal Ahbiyah	8°34' 18" Aquarius	Good for besieging towns and encampments, for going into a quarrel, for pursuing enemies and doing them harm, for sending messengers. Favours journeys southwards. Bad for marriage, for sowing, for merchandise, for buying livestock.	Good for buying slaves, who will be strong, loyal and good, for building, which will be solid and durable, and for voyages, though there will be delays. Marriage will only last for a while. Bad for partnerships, which will end badly and harmfully, and a slave will escape.
26	Farg almocaden Al Fargh al Mukdim	21°45' 44" Aquarius	Good for making a journey in the first third of the day, but the rest is good for neither journeys nor any other beginning.	Good for building, which will be solid and durable, for buying a slave, who will be loyal and good, for entering a ship, though there will be delays. Bad for partnerships. Marriage will not last. If captured, he will be in prison for a long time.
27	Alfarg amahar Al Fargh al Thani	4°17' 10" Pisces	Good for sowing, and useful for trading. Good for marriage. Indifferent for journeys, except for middle third of night when very bad. Bad for entrusting something to someone, or lending anything.	If starting a partnership, it will begin well but end in harm and conflict. Entering a ship will bring damage, dangers and travails. A slave bought will be bad. If captured, he will not leave prison.
28	Bathnealoth Al Batn al Hut	17°36' 36" Pisces	Good for trade, sowing and medicines. Good for marriage. Indifferent for journeys, except for middle third of night when bad. Bad for entrusting something to someone, or lending anything.	A partnership started will begin well but end badly. A slave bought will be bad, irascible and very proud. If captured, he will not leave prison.

Planetary Spirits

		M40. The Familiar Shapes of the Planetary Spirits.
☾	13	They will for the most part appear in great and full body, soft and phlegmatique, of colour like a black obscure cloud, having a swelling countenance, with eyes red and full of water, a bald head, and teeth like a wilde boar. Their motion is as it were an exceeding great tempest of the sea. For their signe, there will appear an exceeding great rain about the Circle.
☿	12	The Spirits of Mercury will appear for the most part in a body of a middle stature, cold, liquid and moist, fair, and with an affable speech; in a humane shape and form, like unto a Knight armed; of colour clear and bright. The motion of them is as it were silver coloured clouds. For their signe, they cause and bring horror and fear unto him that calls them.
♀	14	They do appear with a fair body, of middle stature, with an amiable and pleasant countenance, of colour white or green, the upper part golden. The motion of them is as it were a most clear Star. For their signe, there will seem to be maids playing without the Circle, which will provoke and allure him that calleth them to play.
☼	30	The Spirits of the Sun do for the most part appear in a large, full and great body sanguine and gross, in a gold colour, with the tincture of blood. Their motion is as the Lightning of Heaven; their signe is to move the person to sweat that calls them.
♂	27	They appear in a tall body, cholerick, a filthy countenance, of colour brown, swarthy or red, having horns like Harts horns, and Griphins claws, bellowing like wilde Bulls. Their Motion is like fire burning; their signe Thunder and Lightning about the Circle.
♃	21	The Spirits of Jupiter do appear with a body sanguine and cholerick, of a middle stature, with a horrible fearful motion; but with a milde countenance, a gentle speech, and of the colour of Iron. The motion of them is flashings of Lightening and Thunder; their signe is, there will appear men about the circle, who shall seem to be devoured of Lions.
♄	32	They appear for the most part with a tall, lean, and slender body, with an angry countenance, having four faces; one in the hinder part on the head, one on the former part of the head, and on each side nosed or beaked: there likewise appeareth a face on each knee, or a black shining colour: their motion is the moving of the winde, with a kinde of earthquake: their signe is white earth, whiter then any Snow.

		M41. The Visible Appearance of the Planetary Spirits.
☾	13	A King like an Archer riding upon a Doe, A little Boy, A Woman-hunter with a bow and arrows, A Cow, A little Doe, A Goose, a Garment green or silver-coloured, An Arrow, A Creature having many feet.
☿	12	A King riding upon a Bear, A fair Youth, A Woman holding a distaffe, A dog, A she-bear, A magpie, A Garment of sundry changeable colours, A Rod, A little staffe.
♀	14	A King with a Scepter riding upon a Camel, A Maid clothed and dressed beautifully, A naked maid, A Shee-goat, A Camel, A Dove, A white or green Garment, Flowers, The herb Savine.
☼	30	A King having a Scepter riding on a Lion, A King crowned, A Queen with a Scepter, A Bird, A Lion, A Cock, A yellow or golden Garment, A Scepter, Caudatus.
♂	27	A King armed riding upon a Wolf, A Man armed, A Woman holding a buckler on her thigh, A Hee-goat, A Horse, A Stag, A red Garment, Wool, A Cheeslip.
♃	21	A King with a Sword drawn riding on a Stag, A Man wearing a Mitre in long raiment, A Maid with a Laurel-Crown adorned with Flowers, A Bull, A Stag, A Peacock, An azure Garment, a Sword, A Box-tree.
♄	32	A King having a beard riding on a Dragon, An Old man with a beard, An Old woman leaning on a staff, A Hog, A Dragon, An Owl, A black Garment [without wearer], A [reaping] Hook or Sickle, A Juniper tree.

[2] Golden Dawn format Grades rather than A.'.A.'.

[3] Enochian for 'I reign over you'. Soon after on 1 June 1905 Crowley adopted the name 'Baphomet' as his X° of the MMM.

[4] Crowley used 'Lucifer' in the same sense that Blavatsky used it when she named her Theosophical magazine after the Light Bringer. I also used it in that sense when I produced the counter-culture magazine Lucifer in Sydney in the 1960s. Crowley's motto could therefore be translated as 'the Anointed Light bringer' but is more likely to have also been adopted because of Crowley's lifelong anti-Christian sentiments. Probably out of embarrassment, Crowley at one point told Gerald Yorke that his name for this Grade was 'Parzival' (a magical name later adopted by C S Jones) which has Christian Grail overtones.

[2] This column is only shown for the sake of illustration. In fact there will only be two dates in the year (the Equinoxes) when the Planetary hours are exactly an hour long. During Winter the hours of the day will be shorter and the hours of night longer. The reverse is true in Summer. You need to calculate the exact length of the hour using your local sunrise and sunset times on the day of the working itself.

THE COMMENTARY

Table A. Angels – Biblical, Apocryphal and Gnostic

Angels have become a very popular New Age commodity, but originally they were simply considered as the messengers of God, from the Greek word angelos or messenger. The word probably derives ultimately from the Sanskrit angiras, a divine spirit, or from Persian angaros, a messenger or courier. Even ordinary kings had such messengers. The Hebrew equivalent is malakh or melek. In early Christian usage the terms angel and daimon (or demon) were interchangeable, as in the writings of the Apostles Paul and John.

Contrary to popular opinion, named angels are rare in the Old Testament, the only ones being Michael and Gabriel, who were probably inherited from Babylonian mythology during the time of the captivity. These archangels are associated with fire and water respectively. Raphael appears later in the apocryphal Book of Tobit. The last angel that makes up the well known four angels of the Elements or quarters of the compass is Uriel, and he appears in Enoch I and 2 Esdras. Uriel is often associated with fire or the sun, despite his Golden Dawn attribution to Earth. The most fruitful books of the Bible for the description of Angels are Genesis, Isaiah and Ezekiel. In the New Testament, Thrones, Dominions, Principalities and Powers are briefly mentioned by St Paul in his Epistle to the Colossians, and these are later seized upon by Dionysius and made into angel categories. Angelology reached its peak in terms of numbers of angels under Christianity in the 11th–13th centuries. Beyond the Bible, the various books of Enoch have many more angelical names and descriptions, which incidentally is why Dee associated the language of the angels with Enoch.

Perhaps the most famous angels of the past 400 years were the angels that Dr John Dee spoke to through the agency of his skryer Edward Kelley. In fact they have been so influential that they have here been given their own section (see Table D). Essentially angels were part of the cosmology of the three Middle Eastern monotheistic religions, Judaism, Christianity and Islam. Most angels have come from the Hebraic tradition, filtered through Christian thought.

From a Christian point of view, angels divide into fallen and unfallen. Those who 'fell' from heaven became demons, so you should also look to the section on the Magic of the Grimoires (Table M) for more angels, some of the fallen kind, John Dee's angels (Table D) and the section on the Kabbalah (Table K). At one point the term 'Intelligence', meaning a carrier of news or information (think 'Intelligence Agency'), was interchangeable with 'angel'. In fact in the Hebraic tradition God is referred to as the 'Lord of Hosts', the heavenly Hosts being the angels.

One of the oldest stories of the interaction between angels and mankind is that of the Grigori, a story investigated in Andrew Collins' From the Ashes of Angels.

Angels of Enoch

Column A1-A4: Aramaic Names of the Watchers or Grigori.

These Columns list the Nephilim or 'Watchers' who rebelled against God by mating with the daughters of men and producing a race of troublesome giants. They are also called the Grigori, although there is some confusion between these terms. The unfallen Nephilim are said to reside in the 5th Heaven, the fallen ones in the 3rd Heaven (or in hell, depending upon which authority you consult). They are listed in Enoch I, 6 and 69. In this list of 21 angels, Turel is repeated twice, and so is Azazel, so the list effectively shows only 19. Column A4 shows what useful, and especially what warlike arts, they are supposed to have taught mankind.

As the lists of names do not quite agree, I have included the three main sources: Column A1 is from the book of Enoch from Qumran, Column A2 is from Enoch I, 6 and Column A3 is from Enoch I, 69:1-3.

Column A5-A7: Earliest Names of the Archangels

One of the earliest mentions of the 7 Archangels is in Enoch I, 20. See Column K29 in the Kabbalah Table for a comparative listing of the names of the 7 Archangels from various sources, but this present list is probably one of the earliest. Columns A5-A6 are drawn from Enoch I, 20. Column A7 is from Enoch I, 40.

Column A8-A9: Aramaic Names of the Fallen Angels or 'Satans'

Another listing of the fallen angels, this time from Enoch I, 69:4-15. It is interesting that the term 'Satan' is in the plural, suggesting that originally the term was a status (fallen angel) rather than a specific personage. It is also interesting that the Beni Elohim (or Sons of God) are spoken of as having bodies.

Column A10-A11: The Rulers of the Earth

This list from Enoch 3, shows the angelic Rulers of Earth with their responsibility for a type of weather or part of the heavens. These Rulers are drawn from Enoch 3, XIV, 4-5 and XVII, 4-7.

Column A12-A13: The Sarim or Angel Princes

These are the Angel-Princes who are responsible for the Heavens and Earth. As they are in charge of various Orders of Angels, like the Seraphim, Cherubim, Powers, and Thrones, in a sense they equate with the Archangels. In fact traditional Archangels, like Gabriel, Metatron, Sandalphon, Michael, Uriel and Raphael are listed amongst their number. They do not appear to be in hierarchical order, so the numbering column is for convenience only. Column A12 lists their names, and Column A13 their functions and attributes.

Commentary

Column A14: The 64 Angel Wardens of the 7 Celestial Halls

The Halls or Hekhaloth equate with the 7 Heavens which in turn equate with the 7 Planetary Spheres, but each at a different level. This Column lists the Wardens of each Hall. See the Kabbalah section (Table K) for more details of the Hekhaloth.

Column A15-A18: The Archangels of the Four Quarters.

These are the standard four Archangels of the 4 Quarters and the 4 Elements. See also Column K29 for a comparative listing of other Archangels.

Gnostic Angels

Column A19-A22: The 30 Gnostic Aeons

The Gnostics favoured an emanational view of creation just as did the Kabbalists. Accordingly it is important to identify the order of emanation or generation. The generation numbers show that the primary group of Aeons is the Ogdoad (an 8-fold group) although there is some difference of opinion as to the exact order of generation within the Ogdoad. This is followed by the Decad (10-fold grouping) and Dodecad (12-fold grouping). The Decad can be compared with the 10 Sephiroth and the Dodecad with the 12 Zodiacal signs.

The Shem ha-Mephorash Angels

Shem ha-Mephorash (שם ה-מפרש) literally refers to the name of God of 72 letters contained in Exodus 14:19-21. The Shem ha-Mephorash angels are a very important set of angels. Their names are generated from three verses in the Bible, specifically Exodus 14:19-21. Each verse has exactly 72 Hebrew letters. The procedure for generating the names of the 72 angels is to write the three verses, one on top of the other on three lines. The trick however is to write the top line from right to left (the normal Hebrew writing direction), the second line from left to right, and the third line from right to left. This order is called boustrophedon, which literally means 'ploughed like a field', first one way then another. Then you read each group of three Hebrew letters vertically, so that you derive 72 three-letter root words (these roots are listed in Table A24). To each of these Hebrew roots you add a suffix, either אל -AL or יה -IH. The resultant 72 five-letter names are the names of the 72 Shem ha-Mephorash angels.

The expression Shem ha-Mephorash is also used to refer to the simple combinations of the four letters of the Name IHVH, and Franz Bardon passes it off as this, although he definitely knew the more complete meaning, explained above.

Then, because written Hebrew does not have vowels (except in a very restricted sense) these names need to be rounded out with vowels to pronounce them, or to write them in English. It is this rounding-out process which is responsible for much of the apparent differences in the Shem ha-Mephorash Angel names from one authority to another. In Hebrew the names are cut and dried, but the spelling in English varies considerably. Basically, this is because Hebrew letters like Vav can be transliterated as 'V' (consonant), 'U' (vowel) or even 'O'. Yod corresponds with the English 'I' (vowel), 'Y' (vowel or consonant) and 'J' (consonant), hence words containing either of these letters are open to many transliterations. All Shem ha-Mephorash angel names contain some of these letters.

There are many English spelling versions of the 72 Shem ha-Mephorash angels. The only way to get a 'correct' version is to go back to the original Hebrew which is what I have done here, and having added one of the two possible suffixes, you end up with a correctly spelled angel name in Hebrew. From this you can with certainty derive the numerical value. But then to put them into English is either a matter of taste or tradition.

This leads to issues of the correct pronunciation of these names. One way is to go back to the traditional Hebrew rules and associate a particular vowel sound with one of the consonants. There is a precise formula described by Abraham Abulafia in Chayey ha-Olam ha-Bah for adding vowels to the Hebrew, but it produces some rather strange sounding angel names, with spellings that include difficult groups of letters like 'aaa' or 'aae'. It is in fact probably this formula that Mathers applied to the pronunciation of Enochian, which distorted the pronunciation of that language for almost a century.[1]

I have however applied common sense to the spellings, which make for more readable angel names. Each Hebrew word is only 5 letters long, so transliteration should not be too complex. Agrippa's spelling is logical, with the possible replacements of his Germanic 'jah' endings with 'iah'. Also I prefer to use 'Y' rather than 'I' or 'J' where Yod is the first letter of a name. How anyone can, for example, seriously propose an English spelling such as 'Ngnaneauel' for the 63rd angel Anueil, I do not know. The final test of course is to see if these pronunciations work in practice - but that is material for another book in itself.

Note that Blaise de Vigenère, Lenain, Mathers and Robert Ambelain all give a series of 72 sigils associated with these angels. My experience is that these sigils are in fact demonic and not angelic, and so should be used with caution.

Column A23: Ambelain's Table of the 72 Shem ha-Mephorash Angels

Robert Ambelain in La Kabbale Pratique lists the 72 Shem ha-Mephorash angels in a novel way, and divides them into 9 groups. These groupings are according to the hierarchy of Dionysius the Areopagite. Ambelain refers to his diagram as the Tree of Life in Yetzirah. This arrangement appears to be unique to Ambelain, so don't take the lateral correspondences with the Sephiroth 2 to 9 too seriously, although Ambelain appears to map these angels precisely on to those Sephiroth. In fact the most interesting division in this arrangement is the ordering of these angels under the 9 different orders of angels: Seraphim, Cherubim, Thrones, Powers, Dominations, Virtues, Principalities, Archangels and Angels. It is a view, but only one man's view. I have retained Ambelain's spelling of the angel names for this Column, but have rectified the spelling in the following columns.

[1] Since the publication of Dr Donald Laycock's Complete Enochian Dictionary we now have a much clearer idea of the correct pronunciation of Enochian.

Column A24: The 72 Shem ha-Mephorash Angels, their Hebrew Root, Name, Degrees and Nature

This column gives the 3-letter Hebrew root of each angel, with a rectified English spelling that can be easily verified against it. The Hebrew root is taken vertically from the three Exodus verses. To this must be added either אל -AL (-el or -iel) or יה -IH (-yah or -iah) to make the full angel name.

This Table also shows the degrees of the Zodiac which correspond to each of these angels. If you divide the 360° of the Zodiac by 72 you get a rulership of 5° for each angel. There has been a controversy as to where these degrees start, either at 0° Aries (conventional tropical Zodiac, as suggested by most French authorities) or 0° Leo (Sidereal Zodiac as supported by the Golden Dawn). I have simply listed the degrees from 0° to 360°, so they can be commenced at either point. If you subscribe to the 0° Leo starting point then simply add 120° to the degrees listed, to move the commencement point from 0° Aries to 0° Leo. If the answer comes to more than 360°, then subtract 360° from the answer.

Mathers wanted to tie the Shem ha-Mephorash angels to the Decans, so that he could match them up with both the Enochian system and the Tarot. He therefore started the angels at Leo, as this coincides with the beginning of the Egyptian Decanal year. I am not convinced that these angels are necessarily attributable to the Decans anyway, and prefer to just consider them in terms of the compass degrees, which gives them a suitable facing direction for invocation.

The last Column has a description of their particular virtues, although this is a relatively modern attribution, and maybe of minor value, but is put here for the sake of completeness.

Robert Ambelain attributes a secondary angel to each of these Shem ha-Mephorash angels, for example Chontare with Vehuiah. These are a mixture of Greek and Roman names attributed to the Decans, and are not very reliable (leaving aside the question of relevant Decanal starting point) and therefore have not been listed here. He also gives an associated planet, the time of the day, days of the year, season and godname, all of which I have also omitted from these tables, as they appear to be fairly recent additions to the basic angel list, however the full list may be seen in his Practical Kabbalah.

Column A25: The 72 Shem ha-Mephorash Angels with their corresponding Invocatory Psalm

This column supplies the appropriate invocatory Psalm in both Latin and English, to use in a practical context. Note that the Psalm numbers are from the KJV Bible which differs slightly from the Hebrew version of the Bible, the Tanakh. For further details of Psalm numbering see Column J17, and for the corresponding demons of the Goetia see Table M15.

Astrological Angels

Column A26-A27: Angels Ruling the Astrological Houses

These are the angels of the fixed Houses of Heaven. Note that the Zodiac scale on the left is just a convenient way of marking the 12 Houses, which are usually simply labelled 1 to 12. There is no direct connection between the two.

Column A28-A29: The Lesser Assistant Angels in the Zodiacal Signs

These are the Lesser Assistant angels ruling the 12 Zodiacal signs.

Column A30-A33: Angel Lords of the Elemental Triplicities in the Signs

The Triplicities of the Zodiac are formed by dividing up the 12 Zodiacal Signs into four groups according to their ruling Element. The angels who rule the three Zodiacal Signs that make up each Triplicity are:

Michael - Fiery Triplicity
Raphael - Air Triplicity
Gabriel - Water Triplicity
Uriel - Earth Triplicity

These are then divided into Night and Day Triplicities.

Column A34-A39: Angels of the 36 Decans

Each of the 12 Zodiacal signs is divided into three Decans. The first of these in each sign is the Ascendant Decan, the second is the Succedent Decan (the one that follows it) and the third is called the Cadent Decan. For further information on the Decans themselves see Columns H46-H63.

Column A40 Angels of the Zodiacal Signs

These are drawn from Francis Barrett's The Magus. The overall angel of the Zodiac is Masleh (probably derived from mazloth the Hebrew word for Zodiac).

Other Angels

Column A41: Yezidi Angels

The supreme angel of the Yezidi is the Peacock Angel, Melek Ta'us. Even as recently as 20 years ago, you could still hear the cry of captive peacocks in villages inhabited by the Druse and the Yezidi, although they are unhappy to talk with strangers about this bird and the strange and beautiful angel it symbolises. In the modern world, people of this faith still honour the name of their angel in more subtle ways, such as in the naming of a company, or use in its logo. You can even see such companies listed on modern Middle Eastern exchanges incorporating the angel's name into their corporate identity. The Yezidi see no dichotomy, and do not believe, as do Christians, that there is a spiritual adversary opposing God. The Peacock Angel's supporting Archangels appear in this table. This Yezidi hymn rather beautifully sums it up.

> Oh my Lord, you are the angel of men and jinns,
> Oh my Lord, you are the angel of the Throne and the Seat,
> Oh my Lord, you are the angel of the Bull and the Fish,
> Oh my Lord, you are the angel of the world and what is holy.

- from Qewlê Tawûsî Melek, 'The Hymn of Melek Ta'us'

Column A42-A43: The 7 Amesha Spentas

The 7 Amesha Spentas or Amenta Spentas of the Persians are benign immortals which may be the forerunners of the Archangels. They are the messengers of the Zoroastrian Ahura Mazda. There are some interesting parallels also with the Hindu caste system of India, as in the case of Khshathra Vairya which parallels the Hindu warrior caste.

Column A44: Archangels and Angels of the Days from the Key of Solomon
Simple angelic correspondences from the Key of Solomon primarily used in the creation of talismans.

Table B. Buddhist Meditation

Buddhism was founded in India by Gautama Buddha in the fifth century BC and has subsequently spread into China, Sri Lanka, Burma, Thailand, Vietnam and Cambodia. Although much of this material is not part of mainstream Western magical practice, it is useful to see parallel systems of magic and mysticism correlated with Western theory and practice.

Column B1-B2: The Noble Eightfold Buddhist Path

These stages on the Path are appropriately attributed to the Sephiroth, not as Crowley did (probably for typographical convenience) to the Paths.

Column B3-B4: Buddhist Courts of Hell

Buddhist Courts of Hell, with their direction in respect of Mount Meru and the President of each Court.

These hells were originally Indian, but adopted by Chinese Buddhists. The lowest is numbered as 1, and corresponds to Malkuth. The forecourt to these hells is the 'Hall of Oblivion' or Meng po, where the entrant forgets the events of his recently concluded life. The 10th hell is where his next incarnation is decided upon. These hells are supposed to be situated 20,000 yoganas (180,000 miles) below the Great Sea at the foot of Mount Meru in the Himalayas. Each hell is said to measure 5,000-8,000 feet on each side. The cardinal points do not fit comfortably on the Tree, because of varying attributions, but are included here simply for reference.

Column B5-B6: The Ten Fetters of Buddhism

These are the 10 fetters that bind you to the cycle of rebirth and stand in the way of Enlightenment.

Column B7: The Four Noble Truths of Buddhism

Column B8: The Forty Buddhist Meditations

The 40 classical Buddhist meditations as attributed to the Tree of Life by Crowley.

Column B9: Twelve (Chinese) Buddhist Teachers

These are listed with both their Chinese name, and their more familiar form.

Column B10-11: Buddhist Animals and Symbols

The animals, basically borrowed from Hinduism, and the four symbols.

Column B12-B14: Forms of the Buddhas

The forms include the eight Buddhas (peaceful and terrifying) and the Dakini consorts of Tantric Buddhism.

Table C. Christianity

It may seem strange to include a Christian section amongst these tables, but many of the practices and practitioners of magic in Europe, for the last two millennium, were of course Christian. Many of the saints and Doctors of the Church (listed in Column C18) have contributed extensively to the literature of demonology and angelology and even magic.

Virtues and Visions

Column C1: Western Virtues

Crowley lists Pyrrho-Zoroastrianism in row 1 of his column 50 (which he called Transcendental Morality). In the same column he also lists the parts of Eliphas Levi's injunction 'To know, dare, will and to keep silence' four verbs which he associated with the four Elements (in Latin Noscere, Audere, Velle, Tacere), but these are not really virtues but injunctions.

Column C2: Western Mysticism – Visions

The 10 types of vision are here listed under their appropriate Sephiroth.

Column C3-C4: The 7 Deadly Sins

The 7 Deadly Sins which are not Biblical, but have been around as a list since the time St Gregory, are listed with their usual order of their seriousness from Pride (the most serious) to Lust (the least serious). These 7 can more sensibly be mapped on to the Sephiroth rather than the planets. A few additional sins like Hypocrisy (a very Jovial sin) and Dishonesty (a sin against truth) might have been included in Chesed and Hod respectively.

Apostles

Column C5-C8: The Twelve Apostles - Greek

Column C6 gives the emblem or instrument of martyrdom usually associated with each Apostle, which is useful if trying to identify a particular figure in an emblem. Column X7 gives the Greek version of their names and its corresponding numeration. The Apostles would have appeared by name in Greek in the gospels.

Column C9-C13: The Twelve Apostles - Hebrew

Although the Apostles would have had Aramaic/Hebrew names originally, the details of their lives were recorded in Greek. There are several versions of their names in Hebrew with correspondingly different numerations. Column C9 shows Agrippa's orthography, while Column C10 shows Dr Rudd's orthography from Harley MS 6482. The different numerations show the dangers of non-Hebraic writers trying to reverse engineer Hebrew/Aramaic spelling. The same thing happens with Crowley and Rudd's attempts to reverse engineer the Hebrew names of the Goetic demons, especially as some of these names probably came from Greek, not Hebrew originally.

Theology

Column C14: Christian Hell – the levels of Dante's Inferno

As a lot of literature about demons talks about hell, it seems appropriate to tabulate its environs according to its most popular recorder, Dante Alighieri (1265-1321). The levels are shown in descending order from the comparative comfort of good pagans, unbaptised souls, ancient philosophers, poets, and Old Testament Patriarchs to the deepest damnation of traitors.

Column C15: Christian Theology

Christ, plus the other two persons of the Trinity, attributed to various Sephiroth. The Trinity appears vertically on the Middle Pillar as God the Father (Kether), God the Son (Tiphareth) and God the Holy Ghost/Spirit (in Yesod), closest to man in Malkuth. The Christian Kabbalists, following Reuchlin, would have attributed the Trinity to the three Supernal Sephiroth: Father (Kether), Son (Chokmah) and Holy Ghost (Binah), but I think a 'descent into matter' scenario works better. The feminine principle (in the form of the Virgin Mary, and some would add Mary Magdalene) appears in Binah. The missing element from this theology is Chokmah (Wisdom) which in the Gnostic Christian view would be associated with Sophia (Wisdom).

Column C16: The 7 Early Churches of Asia Minor

It is interesting to see that early Christianity spread northwards from Jerusalem through Turkey and into the Greek world initially. The early churches were all located in this region, which is why it is strange that the Roman church, rather than the Byzantine church, triumphed in the end. The 7 churches are defined in Revelations 1:11:

> "What thou seest, write in a book, and send it unto the seven churches which are in Asia [Minor]; unto Ephesus, and unto Smyrna, and unto Pergamos, and unto Thyatira, and unto Sardis, and unto Philadelphia, and unto Laodicea."

Missed out from this core list were other churches or assemblies of Christians present at Jerusalem, Rome, Galatia, Corinth, and Antioch.

Doctors of the Church

Column C17: The Doctors of the Catholic Church

These are the Catholic theologians who have had perhaps most input into shaping or misshaping Christian theology over the years. There are now thirty-three Doctors of the Church, of whom eight were from the Eastern church (Byzantium) and twenty-four from the Western church (Rome). They include two Carmelites, two Jesuits, three Dominicans, three Franciscans, a Redemptorist, and five Benedictine monks. The eight marked in italics are considered the greatest Doctors of the Church, four from the Eastern, and four from the Western church. Thomas Aquinas was also very important in his pronouncements about demons and other spiritual creatures, and St Albertus Magnus has more than a passing interest for those interested in magic.

Saints

Column C18: A Selection of Saints

If you consider prayers to a saint a form of invocation, then this table has a place in this book. There are over 10,000 named saints and beati from history, the Roman martyrology and Orthodox sources, but no definitive 'head count'. Only the better known or more interesting saints, like St. Albertus Magnus, have been included.

According to some writers the origin of beatification and canonisation in the Catholic Church can be traced back to the ancient pagan procedure apotheosis, although in his classic work on the subject, Benedict XIV[2] refutes this view. Apotheosis literally means 'to make a god', and the ancient Romans as well as the Chinese often promoted their heroes to the status of a god. Often the decree embodying this was based on the statement of a single person that, for example, while the body of the new 'god' was being cremated, an eagle (in the case of the emperors), or a peacock (Juno's sacred bird, in the case of their consorts), was seen to carry the spirit of the departed heavenward.[3] Apotheosis was awarded to many members of the imperial family, with little regard to their virtues or remarkable achievements. The process of canonisation of a saint has some parallels, but required much more evidence, especially of attested miracles.

Table D. Dr John Dee's Angels

> "To someone living in the latter part of the sixteenth century, the possibility that one could have a conversation with an angel or demon was pretty much taken for granted. That John Dee was able to communicate with an otherworldly being through the use of simple ritual (prayer) and a shewstone was not a matter for debate; it was only a question of whether he was communicating with angels or demons. Modern scholars, even those promoting the notion of Renaissance Hermeticism, have found the angelic operations of sixteenth-century England's foremost natural philosopher hard to swallow. "
> - Frank Klaassen

Dr John Dee (1527-1608) was mathematician and astrologer to Queen Elizabeth I. His interests were very wide ranging, from the geometry of Euclid through optics and astrology to the reform of the calendar, alchemy and the improvement of navigational equipment to espionage. But his greatest love was magic, particularly angel magic. During the 1580s and 1590s, he and his skryer Edward Kelley derived and recorded several systems of magic, which are now categorised under the general description of Enochian magic.

Enochian magic is considered by modern commentators to be one of the most powerful systems of magic. However there is little difference between it and other grimoire magic of the same period, except that it is perhaps better documented. Generated by Dr John Dee and Edward Kelley's skrying, it passed through the hands of a succession of angel-magicians of the 17th and 18th century. It was re-discovered in the late 19th century by Mathers and elaborated considerably before becoming part of the practice of the Golden Dawn. Mathers however, although aware of some of the work done on it by the likes of Dr Thomas Rudd in the 17th century, used just a small part of the system. It is only now that the history of this system and its use by angel magicians of the 17th to 19th century is coming to light with the publication of important manuscripts of that period.[4] These Tables list the names of just some of the most important angels in the system, categorising them according to their sources amongst Dee's manuscripts. Details of the letters of the Enochian angels will be found in Columns L35-L38.

Liber Scientiae Auxilii et Victoriae Terrestris

Column D1-D10: The Angels of the 91 Parts of the Earth

These Columns show Dee's attribution of the 91 countries (of the then known world) to their ruling angel and Aether.

Commentary

The Roman numbers in the second header row reflect the column numbers in Dee's original manuscript, Sloane MS 3191 in the British Library. Two of the original manuscript columns (IV and X) are missing from this Table. Dee's column IV contains the 91 sigil characters which are the key to the Clavicula Tabularum Enochi (see Column D17).

Dee's column X is abbreviated in Column J10 and J13 of the present Volume, where it can be easily compared with Column J8-J9, which is the original arrangement of the Tribes as recorded in the Bible.[5] Robert Turner has something quite interesting to say about Dee's column X, which adds another layer of complexity, and another reason for not simply transcribing Dee's column here:

> "The zones of the world assigned to the Twelve Dispersed Tribes of Israel do not (as certain commentators have indicated) represent the usual points of the compass: North, South, East, West, North N-W, East N-E, etc. The key to Dee's intended directions can be clearly found in the second diagram he appends to his manuscript... The diagram is representative of the order of the Tribes at their dispersal (and indeed in 1585) drawn within the walls of the Holy City. To interpret Dee's intentions it is necessary to imagine oneself viewing a particular wall of the city from the outside. Then following the directive with reference to the relevant diagram the meaning becomes obvious. E.g. 'On the East side, to the right-hand = NAPHTALI (Dee: Oriens-dexter = Nephthalim); on the West side, to the left-hand = ISSACHAR (Dee: Occidens-sinister = Isacaraah); to the North = MANASSEH (Dee: Aquilonaris = Manasse) etc.' Therefore in each instance the direction in which one is facing (i.e. towards a particular wall of the city) would be geographically opposite the Cardinal point named in this column (X)."[6]

The second and third column (Planets and Zodiacal Signs) are from Agrippa and do not appear in Dee's manuscript, although Dee would have been well aware of them. The country names are ancient, and are essentially derived from Ptolemy via Agrippa. Dee did not add in the lands of the New World (America) as might have been expected of someone so keen on navigation, discovery and Empire. Where the Planet and Zodiacal sign are missing it has not been possible to match Dee's countries exactly with Agrippa's list. Column D8 is essentially the total of each group of three Servant numbers in Column D7.

This Table is most important as it ties together Agrippa (Column D2-D4), Dee's Tabularum Bonorum (Column D5), Dee's 30 Aethyrs and their Calls from LIL to TEX (Column D6), the Kings ruling these (Column D9) and the 12 Tribes of Israel (Column D10) which Dee considered very important for their indications of the 12 directions (springing from the 4 points of the compass) and the shape of the New Jerusalem.

Column D11: Zodiac Mapped on to the Geography of the Ancient World.

This column shows other views on the geographic distribution of the 12 Signs of the Zodiac. Manilius in his Astronomica proposed a Zodiacal rulership of the countries of the then known world (90 BC). This was later adopted by Agrippa in his list of the Zodiacal rulership of 91 countries. Dee went a step further and devised/discovered their angelic rulership (see Columns D6-D9). Amongst Kabbalistic sources, Sheshem Chanokol states:

> "Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Sun, Venus, Mercury and the Moon...in these seven Heavens are the Spirits of the seventy nations, ten nations under each Planet, and the twelve [Zodiacal] constellations give abundance unto them."

The 70 nations were later changed to 72 to match with the angels of the Shem ha-Mephorash and the divisions of the Zodiac, by the addition of two more Prince-Angels, Michael (angel of Israel) and Gabriel (angel of all nations).

De Heptarchia Mystica

Column D12: John Dee's 49 Bonorum Angelorum

These Columns list Dee's 49 good angels from his grimoire De Heptarchia Mystica, as well as the Kings and Princes from the same seven-fold book. The best translation of De Heptarchia Mystica is 'Of the Mysteries of the Sevenfold Kingdom' of the Watchtowers. Although most commentators have looked to Latin for its meaning, 'heptarchy' was in fact an accepted English word by the twelfth century, when it came to refer to the seven separate kingdoms that made up Anglo-Saxon England in the 9th century. The names are taken from Dee's manuscript circular table of the 49 Good Angels.

Column D13-D15: The Heptarchical Kings and Princes

In this table the initial letter 'B' has been removed leaving perhaps the real names. The system of De Heptarchia is keyed especially into the 7 Planets and the 7 days of the week.

Sigillum Dei Aemeth

Column D16: John Dee's Sigillum Dei Aemeth

These are the names used in the construction of Dee's key Sigil Sigillum Dei Aemeth, shown in Figure 4. This sigil is also found in Liber Juratus, which was probably Dee and Kelley's source, and later in Athanasius Kircher. The names of the 4 Great Elemental Kings have been omitted as they appear in Table D22.

Clavicula Tabularum Enochi

Column D17: The Clavicula Tabularum Enochi

This is the version of the Four Great Elemental Tables that was rectified by the angel Raphael in April 20, 1587. The numbering down the side columns enables you to allocate a number between 1 and 624 to every letter. This is the key to one of Dee's substitution ciphers.

Column D18: The Tablet of Union

This Table is found at the centre of the Four Great Elemental Tables. Note that for consistency, the order of the names has been changed to match the standard order of the Elements. In Dee's original table order, which should be retained is:

bitom

Column D19-D21: Directions and Colours of the Watchtowers

The colours attributed to Dee's four Watchtowers or Elemental squares. Note that the Golden Dawn 'rectified' the colours.

Column D22: The Kings and Seniors of the Tabularum Enochi

Column D23: Angels of the Tabularum Enochi

These are divided by Element, Quarter and Function.

Table E. Emblems and Alchemy

The art of alchemy and the art of emblems have been inextricably linked. Emblems presented an idea way for alchemists to conceal their ideas from all but the most perceptive. Emblems were of course part of the symbolical mindset of the Renaissance, and any cultured man or woman would have been aware of many of the hidden jests and classical references embedded in emblems. Nowadays these are no longer part of our education and so emblems are looked upon as mere curios rather than as a very rich symbolic language. Magic and alchemy use symbols, and so emblems and their meaning are an important part of their study.

The Tarot is a case in point. As it was made up of a handful of broken emblem sets, it would not have been a mystery to any cultured man of its period. It is only now when these meanings are lost, when we no longer know, for example, that there was a female Pope, that it becomes a 'mystery'. Books like Andreas Alciati's Book of Emblems, published in 1531 or Junius' Emblemata would have been read by many, and made the study of contemporary alchemical works a lot easier. To study alchemy effectively it is necessary to re-absorb the culture of emblems, so that at least basic interpretation becomes possible. This section is brief because there are others, like Adam McLean or Gary Nottingham, who are much better fitted to interpret this imagery. The practitioners of alchemy and magic often overlapped, and so the vocabulary of one may well help with the language of the other.

Alchemy

Column E1-E2: Alchemical Elements on the Tree of Life

These two possible allocations were derived by Mathers from the Aesch Mezareph as translated by W Wynn Westcott from the Latin of Knorr von Rosenroth. Note that these do not mesh in any way with the standard Planetary attributions of metals to the Sephiroth.

Column E3: Chemical Elements (Golden Dawn)

A simple listing probably originally drawn up by the chemist Julian Baker.

Column E4: Periodic Table for Alchemical Metals

Note that on the Periodic Table the alchemic metals are located very near each other. Most suggestively, Mercury (Hg) which was a metal most significant in alchemy, is right next to Gold (Au). Gold is in the same column as Silver (Ag) and Copper (Cu). Antimony (Sb), one of the possible starting points in the alchemic process, is adjacent to Tin (Sn) which is in turn adjacent to Lead (Pb). Although metals are grouped together they occupy most of the centre of the table, so that such close proximity of the significant alchemic metals is quite suggestive. The number in brackets indicate the Row & Column on the Periodic Table.

Commentary

The symbol is the modern chemical symbol usually derived from the Latin name of the element. The row number gives the number of electron shells in the atom. Metals in the same column therefore share similar physical characteristics.

Column E5: Alchemical Processes

These are the twelve basic processes of alchemy according to the modern alchemist Lapidus. As you can see from the next column, there is not very much agreement with Ripley.

Column E6: Ripley's Twelve Gates.

This is another attribution of the twelve basic alchemical processes, with George Ripley's description. These fit only approximately on to the Zodiacal signs.

Emblems

The remaining columns in this Table are concerned with the iconography and imagery of alchemy, one of its richest aspects.

Column E7-E8: Splendor Solis Emblems

This manuscript by Salomon Trismosin (of which there are several versions) is perhaps the most gorgeously illustrated and symbolically explicit of all alchemic manuscripts. Each illustration is set in a frame, with images often painted outside that so the description is divided into two parts. In the case of the planetary images, an explicit portrayal of typical planetary activities confirms which planet is concerned.
Emblems 1 to 11 are allegorical.
Emblems 12 to 18 are Planetary.
Emblems 19 to 22 are strangely domestic, as if to affirm that alchemy is part of the natural process of things.

Column E9: Book of Lambspring Emblems

Fifteen typical emblems which might as easily be part of an emblem book as a book specifically on alchemy.

Column E10: The Twelve Keys of Basil Valentinus Emblems

Valentinus was famous for his championing of antimony in the alchemical process.

Column E11: Atlanta Fugiens Emblems

This sequence of 50 Emblems takes in famous Hermetic sayings, Classical Greek mythology, country scenes and a whole host of other things, meant to be obscure even at the time it was engraved.

Table F. Feng Shui, Chinese Taoism and Taoist Magic

There were three main religions in pre-Revolutionary China, Taoism, Buddhism and Confucianism. The second of these was an import from India, which did not take root till 500 years after it was founded and the third is more a system of ethics and social behaviour than a true religion. Taoism however has its roots deep in China's culture. One of the traditional practices based on Taoist cosmology is feng shui, a practice that is concerned with the disposition and ordering of ch'i in our living spaces to the best advantage of the occupants. It has been recently rather trivialised in the West, but still has deep roots in Chinese culture, particularly in Taiwan, Hong Kong and Singapore.

In this table I have used Wade-Giles transliterations rather than pinyin, as the former is still more frequently found in serious traditional feng shui books in English.

Taoism and Trigrams

Column F1-F3: Taoism and the Trigrams of the Former Heaven Sequence

The relationship of the Taoist system and the trigrams of the I Ching (see also Table Y for the relationship of the trigrams to each other and their union in the hexagrams).

Although Crowley put the Tao on the zero row as Ain Soph, it would have been much more appropriate to have the undifferentiated wu chi as Ain Soph. The Tao more correctly aligns with Kether. Crowley also puts Shang Ti, the supreme Taoist divinity in his Taoist Cosmology column, but Shang Ti is much more appropriate as a Taoist god (Column P32) rather than as cosmology.

Furthermore Crowley's attribution of the trigrams to the Tree of Life does severe damage to Chinese metaphysics, and has therefore not been utilised here. There are several ways to arrange the trigrams, but the simplest and most direct method has been used, which is to associate the trigrams with the Sephiroth via the Elements and their associated Planets, so that for example:

Li = Fire = 'Fire Star' = Mars = Geburah, or K'an = Water = 'Water Star' = Mercury = Hod

This procedure can then be extended to the Elements and Planets upon the Paths, but not to the Zodiacal Signs which have a different system of attributions dependant instead upon the 12 Chinese Earthly Branches.

In Columns F1-F2 the Trigrams Ch'ien and K'un pair as the opposites of Heaven and Earth, and therefore fit on Kether and Malkuth respectively. However these two also pair with pure Yang and Yin, laterally across Chokmah and Binah. Tui is not water in the normal sense, but means lake or swamp, and therefore is part of the important pair Mountain-Lake, which in one sense are reflected in the pairing of the Sun and the Moon. Hence the allocation of Tui has to be more subtly done than Crowley's simple association of it with water.

Commentary

Column F4-F5: The Five Chinese Planets

This is a much more thorough going analysis of Taoist cosmology, and it fits the Tree of Life very comfortably, by using the Element of each of the 5 Chinese planets (called hsing or stars). Using these ascriptions, plus the natural places of the Sun and Moon at Sephiroth 6 and 9 respectively, it is then easy to map the trigrams on to the Tree of Life rather than using the contorted logic that Crowley employed.

Five Chinese Elements

Column F6-F10: Attributions of the Five Chinese Elements

These are key tables for basic feng shui being the attributions of colour, season and directions to the 5 Elements. Column F10 lists the traditional association of the Elements with the reigns of five of the classical Emperors. For example, the reign of Huang-Ti, the Yellow Emperor is obviously ruled by yellow Earth.

Column F11-F14: Feng shui and the Five Chinese Elements

Column F11 lists the five points which need traditionally to be considered for a feng shui reading. This list presupposes a traditional Chinese courtyard house. The most important point for growth (or sheng ch'i) is the main door through which comes the most influential ch'i. The stove and its positioning is most important, especially if it burns with real fire. The courtyard in the middle is like the middle of the lo shu, devoted to Earth. The street gate, if it is a compound hose is another important point. Also the positioning of the pond at the front is a very important influence. These incidentally are the main points where offerings would be made if the occupants were Taoist. The five shen in F12 relate the previous column. Lastly the lo shu (Column F13) and Ho t'u numbers (Column F14) are those used to represent the 5 Elements, and to do feng shui calculations such as 'flying the stars'.

Columns F15-F19: Traditional Attributions of the Five Chinese Elements

Tones, tastes, odours and so on can be used to diagnose the presence or excess of one or more of the Five Chinese Elements. These are also very relevant in Traditional Chinese Medicine.

Heavenly Stems

Column F20-25: The 10 Heavenly Stems

The 10 Heavenly Stems and 12 Earthly Branches are indispensable to understanding Chinese metaphysics, cosmology and feng shui. These are amongst some of the most ancient Chinese cosmological terms, and are found inscribed on very ancient oracle bones. Columns F20-F21 show the 10 Heavenly Stems, while Column F22 shows their yin/yang qualities, and Column F23 their Element. You can see that the 10 Heavenly Stems are actually just the yin and yang qualities of the 5 Elements. Column F24-F25 are a rather specialised use of the Heavenly Stems.

Earthly Branches

Column F26-F34: The 12 Earthly Branches

Columns F26-F27 list the 12 Animal signs of popular Chinese astrology. These are not a zodiac as is popularly thought, but are listed against the Western zodiac for convenience. Columns F28-F29 list the 12 Earthly Branches which are associated with the Animal Signs. Columns F30-F31 show the yin/yang and Element qualities of each of the 12 Earthly Branches. Finally Columns F32-F34 illustrate some of the relationships which exist between the 12 Earthly Branches and the Elements.

Flying Stars

Column F35-F38: The Nine Flying Stars

The nine stars of the Northern Ladle or Big Dipper constellation are very important to Taoist cosmology, and are the key to many feng shui formula. The Nine Flying Stars or fei hsing are made up of the 7 stars from the constellation plus two 'Assistant' stars. Columns F35-F37 show them allocated to the Sephiroth with regard to their titles and natures. For example Wu ch'u or Military career is attributed to Geburah/Mars for obvious reasons. Column F38 then shows them in the traditional Chinese order, this time not correlated with the Sephiroth. Note that in the two Assistant stars are sometimes listed together as one star (called Fu Pi) an arrangement used by the Chinese to facilitate an exact correspondence between the 9 stars and the 8 trigrams. The Pole Star (or the Dark Emperor who resides there, and about whom the other Stars revolve) would naturally fit in Kether.

Column F39-F45: The Nine Flying Stars, Names, Directions and Elements

Apart from their position in the Heavens the Nine Flying Stars are also used in Flying Star feng shui where their respective Elements, lo shu numbers, directions and corresponding trigrams are used to draw up a map of the subtle energies present in any building at any point in time.[7] Their secret and talisman names are used in a specialised branch of Taoist magic.

Immortals and Spirits

Column F46-48: Eight Taoist Immortals

The Eight Immortals have not as far as I know ever been correlated with the Sephiroth. The reasons for the attributions are based on their descriptions and attributes as follows:

[7] See Stephen Skinner, Flying Star Feng Shui, Tuttle, Boston, 2003.

Chesed: Han Hsiang-tzu because of his statesman like behaviour.
Geburah: Lu Tung-pin because of his magic sword and warlike behaviour.
Tiphareth: Ts'ao Kuo-chiu because he understood that 'the heart is in the sky, the sky is in the Way.'
Netzach: Chung-Li Ch'uan because he was said to have transmuted copper (Venus) into silver (the Moon).
Hod: Lan Ts'ai-ho because she was a trickster and possibly hermaphrodite. Also Li T'ieh-Kuai should be attributed to Hod, because of his magic gourd and knowledge of medicines.
Yesod: Ho Hsien-Ku because of her virginity and her association with mother-of-pearl.
Malkuth: Chang-Kuo Lao because of his skill at necromancy (bringing back souls from the other side implies Underworld connections, and a function as psychopomp) and because of his fertility enhancement and matrimonial skills. These of course give him some claim on Yesod as well.

Column F49-F52: The 12 Shen and Ting-Chia spirits

These 12 are simply allocated in order, rather than having a particular claim on a particular Zodiacal Sign. The first 6 are ting shen or spirits of the ting cycle, and the second 6 are chia shen. Chia is the first of the 10 Heavenly Stems while ting is the 4th Heavenly Stem. Here the ting Heavenly Stems combines with the first six Earthly Branches, and then the chia Heavenly Stems combines with the last six Earthly Branches. These spirits are important in Taoist magic.

The 60-Year Cycle

Column F53: Chinese Animal and Element 60-Year Cycle

The combination of the 12 Animal or Earthly Branches with the yin and yang versions of the 5 Elements (the 10 Heavenly Stems) creates a cycle of 60 which is used to mark and determine the quality of each year. If the calendar used is lunar, the starting point of each new year fluctuates between mid-January and mid-February. However for feng shui calculations, the solar calendar is used, and the starting point of each year is always 4th/5th February.

Column F54: Start of the Chinese Lunar New Year

This column gives the actual dates of the start of the Chinese Lunar Year through to 2020. The Solar Year starts on the 4th/5th of February regardless.

Column F55: Chinese Animal and Element Year Vitality, Destiny and Luck Cycles

These cycles are based on a Tibetan version of T'ang dynasty Chinese Element divination. More details on how to use them will be found in my book.[8]

Table G. Geomancy

Geomancy is one of the four main Western systems of divination. In the 14th century it came a close second to astrology in terms of popularity, but then fell out of use till its revival at the end of the 19th century. I have traced the development of geomancy from North Africa through Greece and Spain to Europe, and then to the Americas, as well as south into Equatorial Africa and then across the Atlantic with the slave trade.[9] The tables confirm this with the equivalents of the names of the 16 geomantic figures shown in a range of languages over this spectrum starting out from its Arabic roots.

I would like to emphasise, from a position of detailed knowledge of both systems, that geomancy is not in any way related to, or utilised like, feng shui (see Table F). This confusion arose because a certain Victorian missionary, the Reverend Yates, used the word 'geomancy' (the Western meaning of which he did not understand) in the late 19th century to mis-translate the Chinese characters 風水. As a result, many New Age writers have ever since been futilely trying to connect these vastly different practices, which have about as much in common as geology and gin rummy.

Although the geomantic figures can be related to the Paths on the Tree of Life, and are so attributed by the Golden Dawn, the fit is not comfortable. For example there are four figures which relate to the Moon alone, Via, Populus, Caput Draconis and Cauda Draconis. Consequently the Columns in this Table are simply arranged using the order of the geomantic figures, which is repeated on every page of Table G for ease of reference. All of Table G is sorted according to Geomancy Order rather than either Path or ZEP order (which is used in most of the tables in this book).

Column G1: Geomantic Binary Figures

This Column shows the actual figures of geomancy which are made up of four 'layers', each layer containing either a single 'point' or two points. There are therefore 2^4 or 16 such possible combinations.

Column G2: Traditional Meaning

These are the meanings which have become standardised by Golden Dawn use.

Column G3: Geomantic Elements

There are several differing Elemental attributions, but I here use those of John Heydon's Theomagia, which were used by the Golden Dawn, which are the most commonly used.

[9] In Stephen Skinner, Terrestrial Astrology: Divination by Geomancy, RKP, London, 1980, due to be reprinted in 2007.

Commentary

Column G4: Geomantic Attributions of the Zodiac

The 16 figures of geomancy do not map conveniently on to the 12 Zodiacal signs, and there are at least five variant arrangements, however I have shown the four most traditional here.

Column G5-G23: Geomantic Figure Names in Various Languages

These columns show the names and (slightly different) meanings of the 16 geomantic figures in various languages and areas of the Arab world (where they originated), and in Africa and Europe, including Latin, Arabic, Greek, Hebrew, Provençale French various African and Malagasy dialects.

Column G24: Islamic Patriarchs

This column further confirms geomancy's Arab roots by showing the attribution of the Islamic patriarchs to each geomantic figure. Note that Noah and Muhammad are attributed the Major and Minor Fortunes, but Jesus is associated with Amissio or 'loss', a further confirmation of the Islamic origins of geomancy.

Column G25-G27: Dr Rudd's Geomantic Intelligences

These are listed by Dr Rudd in Harley manuscript 6482 as 'Geomantic Intelligences'. Crowley uses the same description, although he does not make a clear tabular link between them and specific geomantic figures. Here they are arranged in Geomantic Order. The same Geomantic Intelligences are also shown in Francis Barrett's The Magus, where they are listed as purely Zodiacal angels (see Table A40) without reference to geomancy.

Column G28: Dr Rudd's Enochian Letters

The attributions by Dr Thomas Rudd of John Dee's Enochian letters to the 16 figures of geomancy in the same Harley manuscript are significant. This column is very important because it enabled MacGregor Mathers to link John Dee's Enochian system with geomancy, and thence to astrology, and from there with Hebrew and finally the other Western esoteric tradition attributions like the Tarot, enabling him to build up his 'Concourse of the Forces'.

Column G29: Planetary Spirits

These are the traditional Planetary Spirits (see also Table M38) but here they are associated with the Geomantic figures rather than the planets.

Column G30: Astrological Correspondences

This Column listing corresponding planets in Zodiacal signs is an important Column for working with geomancy.

Table H. The Heavens and Astrology

Astrology is an integral part of magic, and it is only in recent times that it has been looked on solely as a means of determining individual fortune and character. Astrology (and indeed astronomy as well) is all about dividing up the sky so that the position and import of various heavenly bodies can be measured. The most obvious divisions are those of the path of the Sun (the 12 divisions of the Zodiac) and the path of the Moon (the 28 Mansions of the Moon). Both divisions are found in almost every culture in the world, but the Mansions of the Moon are now rather neglected in modern Western astrology and astronomy. They were and are however very important in magic.

There are finer divisions of the night sky, of which the most obvious is the division of the Zodiac into 36 Decans. The earliest record of the Decans has been found inside coffin lids dating from the Tenth Egyptian Dynasty which means around 2100 B.C. Decans are also mentioned in the Babylonian Enuma Anu Enil, which dates approximately four centuries later. The root of the word 'Decanate' is Greek in origin and means 'ten days apart.'

An even finer division of the Decans is the 72 Quinances (each extending over 5 degrees). These divisions have been of specific interest to magicians in the past, and are often associated with the 72 angels of the Shem ha-Mephorash or the demons of the Goetia, as there are 72 each of these.

Lastly there is the fixed grid of the 12 Houses which depends upon the position of the horizon rather than the layout of the stars for its measurement. The Houses determine the 'action' of each Planet in the various departments of life.

Once the dome of the sky has been divided up, then comes the analysis which depends upon which of these divisions the 'wanderers' or Planets have fallen into, and their mutual relation one to another: for it is the Planets that are the key.

The Planets

Column H1: The Ancient Greek Names of the Planets

The Planets are the most important part of astrology, as it is these 'Wandering Stars', set against the background of the Fixed Stars, which are the main players in astrology. This Table shows the original Greek names of the Planets.

Column H2: The Sanskrit and Hindi Names of the Planets

Column H3-H5: Aspects between Planets

This is a simple table of the effect of angular aspects between different planets. It is helpful to realise the number of degrees involved in these aspects are quite significant numbers in themselves. These do not relate directly to the Tree of Life or the Sephiroth and have just been laid out on the standard table for convenience. Their interpretation depends upon which two planets make the actual aspect.

Column H6-H9: Planetary Dignities (the Relationship of Planets to Zodiac)

This Column show the Essential Dignity of a planet, according to which of the 12 Zodiacal signs it falls into. This effect ranges from Rulership and Exaltation to Detriment and Fall.

A planet is strengthened (dignified) if it falls within the sign that it rules. If a planet falls in the sign opposite that which it rules, it is said to be weakened (in its detriment).

A planet is also strengthened when it is in its sign of Exaltation. For example, the Moon in Cancer is considered "strong" (well-dignified), while in Taurus the Moon is said to be in its Exaltation. In traditional horary astrology, Exaltation denotes a level of dignity somewhat exaggerated compared to rulership.

Seventeenth century astrologer William Lilly compared rulership (e.g. Moon in Cancer) to a king on his throne, with considerable dignity. Exaltation was considered to give the planet (or what it signified in a horary chart) dignity, with the metaphor of an honoured guest - who is the centre of attention but with limited ability to actually act.

A planet in the sign opposite to its position of Exaltation, is said to be in its Fall (e.g. Moon in Scorpio), and thus weakened, more so than when it is in its Detriment.

The relatively recently discovered planets beyond Saturn like Pluto, Neptune and Uranus are not recognised by Indian Astrology, nor do they have any importance in the tabulation of angels, demons and spirits, and so I will not attempt to include them in this Column.

For those who are interested in the trans-Saturnian Planets (those beyond Saturn in the solar system) the following are their rulerships. The usually assigned rulers are the positive rulers:

Uranus – Aquarius
Neptune – Pisces
Pluto – Aries

But there is also a negative rulership, of which Pluto's rulership is the only one commonly agreed upon:

Uranus – Capricorn
Neptune – Sagittarius
Pluto – Scorpio (or Aries)

Many modern, psychologically-oriented astrologers contend that Uranus is the ruler or co-ruler of Aquarius instead of Saturn, Neptune is the ruler or co-ruler of Pisces instead of Jupiter, and that Pluto is the ruler or co-ruler of Scorpio instead of Mars.

The Zodiac

Column H10-H12: The Dates of the Zodiac

These Columns show the dates upon which the Sun enters each sign. Three dates are listed for each sign. The first date is the usual date that you will see in popular astrology columns across the world, and it was determined by Ptolemy according to the Tropical Zodiac. The dates fluctuate from year to year by as much as two days. The second column shows the dates as calculated by Vedic astrology according to the Sidereal Zodiac.

Because of the precession of the Zodiac over the centuries, the actual stars making up a sign will have moved on slightly from the position they were in when measured by Ptolemy. Accordingly (although not used by astrologers) the third column shows the date the Sun actually enters each Zodiacal constellation in the sky (as measured in 1977, although little has changed since then). There is an argument for using the third column for the timing of magical work.

Column H13: The Signs of the Zodiac

The basic list of Zodiacal signs.

Column H14-H15: Original Greek Names of the Zodiac

The Greek origin of the Zodiacal names as we know them, together with their Greek numeration. The later is provided because the numbers of the Planets (in the Babylonian tradition at least) were very significant, and so the Greek numeration of the Zodiacal names might also prove of use.

Column H24: Zodiac - Sanskrit Names

Elemental Qualities of the Zodiac

Column H25-H26: Triplicities and Quadruplicities

The Triplicities and Quadruplicities are something that every good astrologer should know. The Cardinal Zodiac sign represents the birth of the Element, the Kerubic sign its maturity, and its Mutable sign represents its subsequent cyclical decline. The Triplicities are simply the signs grouped according to the four Elements.

Column H27-H28: Sub-Elements, Image of the Sign

These are combinations of the Elements, taken two at a time, with an image encapsulating the nature of each sign.

Column H29: Elements Ruling

Crowley lists out ruling Elements for each of the Sephiroth, but this is rather oversimplified, and relies upon the three Pillars of the Tree. From this you get nonsensical attributions of Air to Yesod, when it is very plainly a Water sphere. I have included the 4 Elemental Roots on the Tree.

Column H30: Elemental Qualities

The Qualities of the Elements themselves are standard. The Planetary qualities have been taken direct from Ptolemy, and so do not quite agree with modern practice, especially in the case of Mercury.

Column H31: Elements and the 4 Humours

The 4 Humours were very important in the Middle Ages as the bridge between astrology and medicine.

Houses of Heaven

Column H32-H36: The Houses of Heaven and their Meanings

The Houses are not part of the night sky but are a geometric division. The 12 Houses divide the sky into 12 sectors counting from the Eastern horizon, and include not just the 180 degrees of the sky, but the full 360 degrees. The House structure provides the astrologer with categories or aspects of life, which are interpreted in terms of the presence of the planets falling in that House. Houses without a Planet present have no effect. In this Column the 12 Zodiacal signs have been used as a convenient parallel, but are not the same as the 12 Houses. The names of the 12 Houses are not standardised like the signs, and so they are often just referred to by number. Manilius in his Astronomica lists the aspects of life governed by the Houses, and he poetically refers to them as 'Temples'.

Mansions of the Moon

The Mansions of the Moon divide the course of the Moon in the sky into 28 segments. The Mansions of the Moon were particularly important in Arab astrology, and in the Mediaeval world, and therefore in magic, but have fallen out of common use in astrology today.

Column H37-H38: Mansions of the Moon - Hindu Nakshatras

Although the 28 Mansions of the Moon seem to form part of every culture, their method of calculation differs somewhat from one culture to another. The Indian tradition is different from the Arab Mansions, and measures the movement of the Moon by two possible methods.

The most common measures the movement of the Moon around the Zodiac, and this yields a cycle of approximately 27 days and 7 ¾ hours. Based on this, the Zodiac was divided into 27 Nakshatras (of 13° 20′). The 7¾ hour shortfall in a sidereal lunar cycle is made up by a short intercalary Nakshatra which makes the '28th' Nakshatra.

The Nakshatra in which the moon lies at the time of sunrise of any day is defined as the Nakshatra ruling that day

There are various types of approximation designed to synchronize the two periods of the Sun and Moon, the Solar Year and the Lunar Month, but none of them very elegant. The history of the calendar is in fact the history of the attempts by various astronomers, astrologers, priests and mathematicians to perform the ultimate magic of synchronising the Solar and Lunar periods. In these tables I have simply delineated the most commonly accepted limits of the Nakshatras.

Column H39-H42: The Mansions of the Moon according to Abenragel

The coincidence of the twenty-eight letters of the Arabic alphabet and the 28 days of the cycle of the Moon, together with the symbolic significance of the crescent Moon in Islam, gives the Mansions of the Moon a particular significance in Arabic astrology.

It is through Islamic culture that Hellenistic astrology (including the Gnostic and Hermetic Corpus), Indian astrology, and the decimal number system were transmitted to Europe during the late Middle Ages. In fact Arab culture preserved much of the culture of Greece and Rome as well that might otherwise have been obliterated for ever by the over-zealous Christian heresy hunters.

During the great efflorescence of Islamic translation and science, roughly from the ninth to the thirteenth centuries AD, much of this material was translated from Arabic into Latin in Spain. Amongst the alchemy texts and the classics of Greek philosophy, there were many writers in Arabic on astrology. Many of these with their Latinised names and dates will be found in Table U.

The most frequently cited authors include Messahalla, Albumasar, Al-Kindi (Alkindus), Alfraganus, Haly Abenragel, and Alberuni, to give them all their Latinised names. See Column U3 for their full Arabic names and dates.

Almost all of these writers include some treatment of the lunar Mansions. These treatments of the Mansions often derive ultimately from the Hellenistic system of Dorotheus Sidonius (first century AD), with some additional influence from the Indian Nakshatras.

Also from Spain, during this period of cultural interchange came the most famous source of much of the magical lore that was to sweep across Europe. The Ghâyat al-Hakîm fi'l-sihr, or The Goal of the Wise, was known in Europe by the name of its supposed author, Picatrix. It is one of the largest and most comprehensive of the grimoires, or handbooks of magic. Sadly, although there are Latin, French, German and Arabic editions, there is no complete edition in English.[11] The author is sometimes (possibly erroneously) identified as the Andalusian mathematician al-Majriti (c940-1007 AD). The Latin translation, which dates from 1256 and the court of Alphonso the Wise king of Castille, has exerted a considerable influence on Western magic.

Column H39 summarises the list of the Mansions of the Moon given by Haly Abenragel circa 1000 AD, in the Latin translation of the book by Abenragel called Libri de Judiciis Astrorum...per Antonium Stupam, published in Basel in 1551. Recommended times derived from these Mansions vary from the most important actions to the most trivial, from marriage to when to put on new clothes, rather like Chinese Almanacs of the current period. Certain activities are favoured and others cautioned against depending on the Mansion currently occupied by the Moon. Of course for this to work, the Moon must also be free from making any bad aspects with other planets. In Europe these restrictions were adopted more for magical operations and the making of talismans rather than for day to day events like the cutting of hair or the wearing of new shoes.

Column H43-H44: The Mansions of the Moon and their Virtues - Agrippa

This lists the virtues of each of the Mansions of the Moon according to Agrippa.

Column H45-H46: Images of the Mansions of the Moon and their Magical Uses

The magical uses of the Mansions of the Moon and the seals and procedures used to achieve these.

[11] There was a partial edition translated by Hashem Atallah containing only Books I and II published by Ouroboros Press in 2002.

Column H47-H53: The Mansions of the Moon - Chinese Hsiu

The Chinese also have a system of 28 Mansions of the Moon, but the difference is that these are of widely different sizes, ranging from half a degree in extent (Tsui - the Beak) to 30.25 degrees in extent (Ching - the Well). These divisions are very ancient and appear on the penultimate ring of most feng shui compasses or lo p'ans. Column H52 shows the extent of each hsiu in days taken by the moon to traverse it. Column H53 shows the starting point of each hsiu based on a 360 degree circle.

Decans or 'Faces'

The Decans are a traditional division of each of the 12 Zodiac signs into 3 parts, making a total of 36 Decans, each 10 degrees in extent.[12] Agrippa and some of the older authorities refer to them as 'Faces' although there is a slight technical difference between the two terms. Each Zodiacal sign is divided into:

Ascendant Decan	from 0-10 degrees
Succedent Decan	from 11-20 degrees
Cadent Decan	from 21-30 degrees

There has been a lot of controversy as to whether the Decans begin in 0° Aries or 0° Leo, particularly with regard to the attribution of the Goetic demons. If you go back to the Egyptian origin of the Decans, you will discover that the Decans commence precisely on the heliacal rising of Sirius, in other words the date on which Sirius is first observable rising over the horizon at dawn. [13] This is close to 0° degrees of Leo.

The date of the heliacal rising of Sirius changes very slowly from period to period. It is even different at different latitudes. Except in Egypt (where the atmosphere is very dry and clear) this date can even differ according to different atmospheric conditions.

To determine the current starting point of the Decan divisions we should probably take the date from the heliacal rising of Sirius in Egypt in 2005. In 2005 the exact heliacal rising of Sirius in Egypt was 4th August 2005 at 05:03 am.[14] The Decans therefore currently commence from 12° of Leo. The tables for 2005 therefore should show the 1st Decan as 12° Leo to 22° Leo, and the second from 22° Leo to 2° Virgo. This confirms the correctness of the Golden [12] Where the Decans are correlated with the days of the year, 36 Decans make up 360 days, and a 37th represents the remaining 5.25 days of the year. This difficulty also arises in Chinese feng shui where a lo p'an ring is sometimes divided into 360 degrees, but more often into 365.25 'Chinese degrees' each of which correlates exactly with a day of the year. Very precise feng shui compasses will even show the extra quarter degree.

[14] For a demonstration of the effect of the curvature of the Earth on heliacal rising, note that in the same year Sirius was not visible in London (51 degrees latitude) till 25th August 2005.

Dawn usage of 0° Leo, as that would have been approximately the case 100 years ago.

For the sake of consistency with the Golden Dawn, I have shown the Decans as if they began at the 0° Leo point, but if doing precise practical work remember to move the Decans forward by 12° degrees, along with their corresponding dates. As the ancient Egyptians moved the position of the Decans to follow the actual rising of Sirius, so there is no point in using the March date of 0° Aries, except for historical purposes.

Having established that, this still does not answer the question concerning the starting point of the cycle of the 72 Goetic demons. If these demons are not tied to the Decans, and they may instead start their cycle at 0° Aries (see Columns M15-M19), especially as Decans are not mentioned in that grimoire, but divisions, particularly by planet and Zodiacal sign, are often mentioned.

Column H54-H55: The 36 Decans with Planetary Rulers

The Planets expressed as rulers of each of the 36 Decans. The astrological interpretation of the Decans is based upon a system of Planetary rulership, of which there are two in common use. The traditional method ascribed Mars to the first Decan of Aries and then carries forward a fixed series throughout the 36 Decans, coming full cycle with Mars ruling the third Decan of Pisces. The sequence is Mars, Sun, Venus, Mercury, Moon, Saturn, and then Jupiter.

The other method shown in Column H55 employs the Ruler of the Sign as specifically the Ruler of the First Decan, with the Second and Third Decans associated with the Rulers of the other two Signs in the same Elemental triplicity. Thus the First Decan of Aries is ruled by Mars; the Second Decan, by the Sun; and the Third Decan, by Jupiter.

Column H56-H58: Magical Images of the Decans

There are several sets of magical images corresponding to the Decans. The first set is drawn from the Picatrix.

Column H59: Magical Images of the 36 Faces of the Zodiac

The second set is drawn from Agrippa Book II, Chapter XXVII. Here 'Face' is equivalent to Decan.

Column H60-H68: Egyptian Names of the Decans

Column H63-H68: Egyptian Gods of the Decans

Two sets of gods of the Decans are given. They form an interesting mixture of mostly rather obscure plus a few mainstream Egyptian gods. The most interesting row is that of Leo in the first set which contains Typhon, Nephthe and Perseus (who may here have a Mithraic connotation).

Fixed Stars and Constellations

The fixed stars cycle overhead each night (and also during the day but then we can't see them because there are obscured by the light of the sun). Although they appear to move, it is in fact the Earth's rotation that causes this appearance. The fixed stars retain the same relative position to each other, and therefore can act as reference points for all other heavenly bodies. They act, if you like, as a backdrop to the movements of the sun, moon and planets.

Column H72: The 48 Ptolemaic Constellations

The constellations are figurative groupings of the fixed stars. There are 88 modern Western constellations (as defined by the IAU) which cover every part of the sky, and enable all of the sky, or celestial sphere, to be mapped. These 88 are based on the 48 classical Northern Hemisphere constellations of the Greek astronomer Claudius Ptolemy, which only cover certain key areas of the sky. Amongst the 48 classical Ptolemaic constellations I have italicised the 12 which make up the Zodiac. One large Ptolemaic constellation, Argo Navis, does not appear anymore on modern sky maps, as it was broken down into several smaller ones.

Column H73-H76: The 15 Fixed Behenian stars

From these 48 classical constellations, magicians singled out 15 particularly significant stars. These are not popular with modern astrology, but once were of great significance to Mediaeval magicians. They still have an importance to magic in that they are involved in generating certain types of talisman. Just to give one example of the assigned qualities which show agreement over a number of cultures:[15]

> "Algol is a white variable star that brightens and dims, making it very conspicuous in the northern heavens. The Arabs call it the Blinking Demon. The Hebrews named it Satan's Head and Lilith, after the demon lover of Adam. The Chinese called it the Piled-up Corpses [Star]. It was everywhere regarded as violent, dangerous, and highly unlucky."

The Behenian fixed stars are a selection of just fifteen specific stars considered especially useful for magical applications. Their name derives from the Arabic bahman, or 'root,' as each was considered a source or root of the astrological power for one or more planets. Each is also connected with a gemstone and plant that would be used in rituals meant to draw down the star's influence (for example into a talisman). When a Planet was within six degrees of a Behenian star, this influence was thought to be particularly strong.

Table I. Islam

Although much of the cultural heritage of Western Europe derives from Greece and Rome, it is not acknowledged as often as it should be that it was Islam that preserved and passed on to Europe much of its Greek heritage in the form of philosophy and geometry, that would otherwise have been lost. Much more magic theory and practice derive from Greece, that land of supremely logical thinkers, than has ever been realised. Much of this magic from Greece reached the Latin West via Islamic sources. It is not for nothing that the Thousand and One Nights is one of the greatest storehouses of magical lore. The Burton translation (which fascinated Crowley) contains a lot of detailed magical and sexual lore that graces the pages of the original, although the bowdlerised versions read to children, have not got much of the real magic left.

Islam defines 'jinn' as a separate supernatural and invisible race of beings, below angels in status, but with more powers than humans. Most often they were defined as being made from fire, and usually look like humans or animals. If they appear in human form then they are gross, or will have some animal quality, like a paw or a tail. They are said to dwell in desolate places or in caverns or trees, and may possess small animals like black dogs and black cats. There are good and bad jinn, but all are long lived and all will supposedly be judged on Judgment Day. Incidentally 'genii' is not a Westernised version of 'jinn' but is a totally different word, and instead derives from the Greek word 'genius'.

Column I1-I6: Kings of the Jinn

There is an elaborate hierarchy of jinns, divided up by the 4 Elements. The Water jinn, called marids, thought by some to be the most powerful, are intimately involved in the stories of brass vessels being cast into the sea or retrieved by fishermen. King Solomon is said to have sealed up a number of demons or evil spirits in a brass vessel and flung it into the sea. This vessel was subsequently retrieved by some fishermen who opened to, hoping to find treasure, thereby freeing the demons again.

The Fire jinns, supposedly the most arrogant, are called ifreets. They were reputedly created before Adam, and have always been jealous of mankind because although they were the firstborn they were (under certain conditions0 made subject to man. Most important are the kings of the jinn listed here with their 'nicknames'.

Hells and Heavens

Column I7-I10: The Traditional Islamic Hells.

In Islam hell is an-nar or 'the fire'. As in Christianity, it is supposed to be the abode of sinners, and has seven layers. The disposition and contents of Islamic Hells vary from sect to sect. It is interesting that in the particular arrangement listed in these Columns, sinful Muslims occupy the lowest hell, whilst the worst punishments are reserved for Christians. With his tongue in his cheek, Crowley would have relished the association of 'Hypocrites' and Christians as the occupants of hawijah, which would have agreed with his view of Victorian Christianity, particularly the 'fire and brimstone' Plymouth Brethren variety of his childhood days.

Column I11-I12: The Traditional Islamic Heavens.

It has been said that Islam accepts that members of other monotheistic religions have a greater claim on Paradise than polytheistic believers, and the Quran (2:62) states:

> "Indeed, those who have believed [in this Prophet] and those who became Jews and Christians and the Sabians who [truly] believe in God and the Day of Judgment and do good deeds, they shall have their reward with their Lord and they shall neither have fear [for the future] nor any remorse [for the past]."

The Gabars were probably Zoroastrians, or fire worshippers. The Sabians, who came from an area near Petra, are particularly interesting as they were reputed to have long preserved ancient pagan and magical practices up to at least the 10th century AD.

The Ikhwan al-Safa (or Brethren of Purity) relied upon the Sabians for much of their astral and magical knowledge. Seyyed Hossein Nasr in An Introduction to Islamic Cosmological Doctrine: Conceptions of Nature and Methods Used for its Study by the Ikhwan al-safa, al-Biruni, and Ibn Sina (1978) gives an excellent account of this and of the Islamic development of Hellenistic cosmology and astrology in general.

Column I13-I17: Traditional Islamic Angelology

You can see the similar derivation of many of the angel names in both the Hebraic and Arabic traditions.

Table J. Judaism

Although often seen as at odds with Islam, in fact Judaism, Christianity and Islam stand shoulder to shoulder as the three great monotheistic religions, all of which were generated within the relatively small and barren, but extraordinarily spiritually fertile, area of desert that stretches between Egypt, Palestine, and Mecca.

Judaism is of course the fertile soil in which the Kabbalah flourished, and from which much of the early practice of magic sprang. For example, the idea of 'planetary hours', so important to the Solomonic grimoire tradition, came from Jewish roots. Judaism is also the root-stock of Christianity, and therefore it culturally influenced Christian thinking on theology, religion and magic.

Column J1-J3: The four Rivers of Eden

The four rivers of Eden figure in Kabbalistic speculation, and in the rituals of the Golden Dawn.

Column J4-J5: The Ten Plagues of Egypt

These were an extraordinary feat of magic by the leaders of the exiting Hebrew population of Egypt, particularly Aaron. His competition with the magicians of Egypt who also turned their staffs into snakes is one of the most explicit mentions of magic in the Bible.

Column J6: The Ten Commandments of Moses

Taken from the Bible, the 10 Commandments fit easily on to the 10 Sephiroth.

Column J7-J13: The Twelve Tribes of Israel

This list is complicated by the fact that the descriptions of the distribution of the twelve tribes are not consistent in the Bible. The distribution of the tribes of Israel fascinated Renaissance magicians, especially Dr John Dee. He also used their disposition as a clue to the angelic rulership of the various countries of the Earth, using the compass direction of each tribe's encampment as the key. See also Column D10 for John Dee's usage.

Column J7 is the Masonic order taken from Albert Pike's Morals And Dogma Of The Ancient And Accepted Scottish Rite of Freemasonry, and in turn used by the Golden Dawn. Column J11 is drawn from Numbers 2:3-33 [7.10]. Column J13 is John Dee's arrangement made in 1585.

Column J14-J16: The Hebrew Prophets and Judges of Israel

The major prophets of Israel have been mapped on to the 10 Sephiroth, and the lesser ones on the 12 Zodiacal signs, in accordance with Henry Cornelius Agrippa's usage.

Commentary

Column J17: The Magical Psalter

The Magical use of the Psalms has a long history, and is perhaps most familiar from their use in the grimoire The Key of Solomon.

The Psalms have been widely used in magic for many centuries. Abramelin recommends that all the Psalms of David be recited at least twice every week. Not all Psalms are of equal efficaciousness, and the 'Seven Penitential Psalms' are thought to be specially effective, these Psalms 6, 32, 38, 51, 102, 130, 143 were used frequently by Dr John Dee.

Psalms were used for magical purposes, specifically the purification of various pieces of magical equipment from ancient times through the Middle Ages, right down to relatively modern grimoire style texts like the so called Sixth and Seventh Books of Moses.

The numbering of the Psalms is a little vexing, and differs from the Catholic (which follows the Vulgate and Septuagint versions of the Bible) and Protestant (which follows the Hebrew numbering) sources. So be careful to identify your source before selecting the correct Psalm. The correlation is as follows:

Hebrew/King James Version	Septuagint/Vulgate/Catholic
1-8	1-8
9-10	9
11-113	10-112
114-115	113
116	114-115
117-146	116-145
147	146-147
148-150	148-150

The task for which a large number of Psalms are recommended is the putting on of robes or vestments. The other task for which a wide range of Psalms is recommended is the consecration of 'Earth and of the wax disks', interesting in the light of Dee's magical use of wax disks, or maybe the phrase is just referring generally to talismans.

The Planetary rows indicate the Psalm and verse of the inscription around pentacle of that particular planet as it appears in MacGregor Mathers' edition of The Key of Solomon.[16]

[16] Volume 4 of the Sourceworks of Ceremonial Magic, due out in early 2007, will have more about the practical application of the magical techniques of the Key of Solomon.

Figure 10: The Kabbalistic Earth and Heavens. The smaller circles at the top of the illustration contain the Hebrew names of the 12 Zodiacal Signs. The centre of the lower half-circles contains the word 'Aretz', or Earth, surrounded by the 7 Planets radiating out from LBNH, Levanah (the Moon) to ShBThI, Shabbathai (Saturn). The empty half-circle is the location of the sub-lunary world of spirits and demons, which is so important to magic.

Table K. Kabbalah

In a real sense this section follows directly from the previous section; as the Kabbalah is at root one of the mystical systems of Judaism. Although often thought of as the foundation of Western magic, the Kabbalah is also still part of a living mystical tradition within Judaism. Its recent and probably transient incarnation as a popular media phenomena is just one symptom of its underlying durability and strength. Most importantly just one diagram drawn from it, the Tree of Life, provides the theological structure upon which many topics in this book, from angelology to grimoire magic, have been hung.

Kabbalah or קבלה (QBLH) in Hebrew is transliterated in a number of different ways. This word can be transliterated as Kabbalah, Cabalah or Qabalah. I have consciously used 'Kabbalah' in this section to indicate the traditional Rabbi driven mystical, magical and interpretative philosophy and practice rooted in Judaism and books like the Sepher Yetzirah, the Bahir and the Zohar.

The spelling 'Cabalah' most often indicates the Christian Renaissance usage of these doctrines by writers like Reuchlin and Pico della Mirandola, often as a doctrinal support for Christianity. 'Qabalah' has been appropriated as a label to indicate the 20th century use of it as a magical classification and meditative system, as utilised by the Golden Dawn, although Mathers certainly would not have used that spelling.

The traditional texts of the Kabbalah are insistent that there are 10 Sephiroth not 11 Sephiroth. However from the end of the 13th century there arose the idea of an 11th Sephirah just below Chokmah and Binah. As a result 20th century occultists, including Crowley, have portrayed this Sephirah Daath as a kind of Abyss. In fact there is a line often drawn between the three Supernal Sephiroth and the rest of the Tree. Daath is not the Abyss, but a kind of balancing unity achieved after the outflow from God of the three Supernals, specifically a balance between Chokmah and Binah, a hesitation before emanation continued with the 7 lower Sephiroth. Because it is a sort of overflow, there is also a tendency to confuse it with the Qliphoth and the Abyss. More accurately it should be seen as a reflection or pre-figuring of the reflection of Kether into the lower Sephiroth.

The attributions of the zero row representing the Unmanifest are the three Veils of Negative Existence, Ain, Ain Soph and Ain Soph Aur, comment on which is beyond the scope of this book. The three veils are:

אין Ain - Nothingness
אין סוף Ain Soph - Limitlessness
אין סוף אור Ain Soph Aur – Limitless Light

The Tree of Life Layout, Spheres and Paths

Column K1-K4: Hebrew Names of the 10 Sephiroth and 22 Hebrew Letters

These Columns are made up of two different series. The numbers 1-10 are the Hebrew names of the 10 Sephiroth of the Tree of Life. A separate series is the numbers 11-32, which are the letters of the Hebrew alphabet attributed to the Paths of the Tree of Life. To find the Hebrew letter, look at the first Hebrew letter (the rightmost) in each case in Column K1. These Hebrew letters will be repeated by themselves in the Letters and Alphabet Column L8. The difference is that here the letter is spelled out in full, for example אלפ, Aleph is spelled out as 'ALP', rather like spelling out 'Z' as 'zee' or 'zed'.

Column K4 has a translation of the Sephiroth names in the first 10 rows, and then the item associated with each of the 22 Hebrew letters in the next 22 rows. These items are a bit like children learning the Latin alphabet by saying 'A for Apple', so not too much should be read into these 22 alphabetic rows.

Despite 20th century practice, it is going a step too far to identify a camel with the High Priestess Tarot card, just because 'camel' happens to be mnemonic for the letter Gimel. Rather like using the Latin alphabet to associate apple with Air, because of the child's alphabet learning sequence 'A is for apple'.

Column K5: The Magical Images of the Sephiroth

These images are very useful anthropomorphic characterisations of the Sephiroth, and were used by the Golden Dawn for meditation, amongst other things.

Column K6: Other Names of the Sephiroth

Collectively the Sephiroth are sometimes called 'the King's faces', an indication that they are not separate but an integral part of God. These names are taken from the Kabbalistic texts translated in MacGregor Mathers' Kabbalah Unveiled, and reveal aspects of each Sephirah rooted in traditional texts.

It is interesting that Rahamim (Compassion) is in fact a more common name in Hebrew Kabbalistic texts for the sixth Sephirah than the usual Tiphareth (Beauty). Compassion associates rather well with the identification of Christ and Tiphareth.

Column K7: Position of the Paths on the Tree of Life

There is more than one way to place the Paths (and the Hebrew letters) on the Tree of Life. Columns K7 and K9 show the location of each of the 22 Paths on two of the three main versions of the Tree of Life diagram. This will come as a surprise to those who have only ever seen the Golden Dawn model of the Tree of Life (as fixed by the Jesuit Athanasius Kircher), and assumed it was the only model. The Golden Dawn Path arrangement is shown in Figure 2.

Commentary

Column K8: Corrected Astrological Attributions of the Sepher Yetzirah

This shows the attribution of the 7 Planets adjusted to the configuration as shown in most versions of the Sepher Yetzirah.

Column K9: Lurianic Position of the Paths on the Tree of Life

One of the most respected Kabbalists is Rabbi Isaac Luria (1534-1572), nicknamed the 'Ari' who founded Lurianic Kabbalah. This column shows the Path connections which follow Isaac Luria's Tree structure (see Figure 3), and the Sepher Yetzirah attributions shown in Column K8. In fact it is likely that this Tree is the older of the two.

The most obvious visual differences are that the connecting Paths between Malkuth (10) and Hod (8) or between Malkuth (10) and Netzach (7) are not present. Instead two additional Paths connect Chokmah (2) and Geburah (5) and also connect Binah (3) and Chesed (4), which means that this arrangement still has 22 Paths. This makes the upper part of the Tree more symmetrical, and leaves Malkuth as a 'pendant' connected to the rest of the Tree by only one Path (32), reflecting the idea of the Fall. Indeed this is how a lot of early Kabbalistic texts (including the Bahir) describe Malkuth, as a pendant. Of course, as a result, the Path numbering is also completely different.

This means that the attribution of the Planets and Zodiac and Elements to the letters of the Hebrew alphabet may still be the same, but the attribution of the letters to the Paths, and the actual location of these Paths upon the Tree, is different. This difference is fundamental, and it is one of the reasons why the Tables in the present book are grouped by ZEP order (Zodiac, Element and Planet), rather than by numerical Path order, which as we have just seen, can vary.

In the Lurianic version, the Path numbers assume a delightful graphical symmetry that does not exist in the Golden Dawn version of the Tree. In fact this format groups the Elements, Planets, and Zodiac together (using the inherent grammatical structure of the Hebrew alphabet) rather than dispersing them across the Paths of the Tree, apparently at random. Under this arrangement (following the Hebrew letters) the Paths group nicely as:

The 3 Mother Letters = the horizontal Paths = the 3 Elements.[17]
The 7 Double Letters = the vertical Paths = the 7 Planets
The 12 Double Letters = the diagonal Paths = the 12 Zodiac signs

The three Mother letters are particularly suggestive representing the Elements:

א Aleph - Air
מ Mem - Water
ש Shin - Fire

[17] Air, Water and Fire, excluding Earth which is attributed to Malkuth.

The Elemental letters thus split the Tree into three Elemental layers. The use of the Hebrew letter ת Tau (which is not a Mother letter) to represent Earth is essentially a fudge. As you can see from this layout the Element Earth is the pendant Sephirah Malkuth and not one of the Paths at all. Crowley did not find that convenient, and so introduced the self-confessedly clumsy 32-bis numeration. I have retained these numbers in the second column of each table, in order to make the material in these tables backwardly compatible with the Tree of Life structure which was commonly used throughout the 20th century.

It is interesting that the ancient Hebrew interpretation was of 3 Elements, whilst the Greek view was of 4 Elements and Chinese cosmology posits 5 Elements.

Column K10: Path Orientation

The geometric orientation of each Path, as we have seen, is very significant on the Lurianic Tree as:

a) the 3 Elements are all horizontal Paths
b) the 7 Planets are all vertical Paths
c) the 12 Zodiacal signs are all diagonal Paths

This seems very appropriate as the 3 Elements are mentioned in the Sepher Yetzirah as the initial agents of Creation, and appropriately they hold the opposing Pillars of the Tree together at each plane. The fact that the 7 Planetary paths are all vertical also reflects the universal magical/mystical practice of Rising on the Planes, where each level is ruled by one of the Planets. This well-worn theme of the Planets laid out vertically recurs throughout Mesopotamian, Orphic, Kabbalistic, Merkabah, Gnostic and Renaissance cosmology. All of these traditions have diagrams which show the Planets ranging from the sphere of the Moon up to the sphere of Saturn, in that order, in concentric spheres around the Earth reaching up to God. This is reflected in the Lurianic Tree.

This structure is also much more intellectually satisfying than the apparently random scattering of Elements, Planets and Zodiacal signs on the Paths of the Golden Dawn Tree of Life.

This is not to say that something which is more intellectually satisfying is necessarily spiritually more correct. But, practice indicates that in many cases Path workings done with the Lurianic structure (in the correct order) are a lot more vivid and do not seem to suffer from the 'dead end lapses' which sometimes afflict Path workings on the Golden Dawn Tree format.

Column K11-K12: The Paths of the Lightning Flash and the Serpent

The Paths of the Golden Dawn Tree of Life are well enough known and appear elsewhere. This Column shows the Path of the Lightning Flash (Emanation) and Serpent of Wisdom (Initiatory) on the Lurianic Tree of Life.

Apart from the attribution of the Hebrew letters to the 22 Paths, there is also the question of how the Paths should be numbered. The Golden Dawn attribution of Path numbers is achieved by a simple 'down and sideways' allocation, but this is definitely just convenient, and not traditional. The real key to the numerical ordering of the Paths is the Lightning Flash and Serpent diagram (Figure 11). The illustration of the Lightning Flash and the Serpent on the Tree of Life is often given in books on the Kabbalah, but to my knowledge its real purpose has never been explained in English. It is indeed a key glyph.

First it gives the correct order of the 9 Paths of descent or Emanation, in numerical order from 11 to 19. Kabbalistic texts often speak of the Lightning Flash of creation. This is not just literary device, portraying the suddenness of Emanation, but a direct reference to this glyph which shows the correct downward numerical Path sequence.

Secondly this glyph helps to validate the Lurianic Tree, which does have a Path from Binah to Chesed. There are few glyphs in the Kabbalistic writings, and therefore those that do exist should be taken seriously. This glyph suggests very strongly that there has to be a Path between Binah and Chesed.

The coiled Serpent of Wisdom also has a very concrete purpose. On the Tree its shape is very convoluted, and not at all natural looking. Why? Because the coils cross over each Path in turn on their return to the Godhead, in a very specific order. The Serpent is truly the symbol of Wisdom and Initiation. In Genesis the serpent is not portrayed on the ground, or in a hole, as would be natural, but it is shown on the Tree. The use of this glyph is to show the correct order of the Paths of redemption, or of return to the Godhead, the Paths 20 to 32. The Serpent shows the numeric Path of return.

The correct numbering of all the Paths on the Tree is thus shown by this glyph, rather than the speculative numbering of the Golden Dawn. The Path of the Serpent is also immensely practical as it shows the order in which the Tree should be ascended - in short, the correct practical meditational order.

It is typical of the Kabbalah that such details should be clearly shown in a diagram, without a written explanation as to how it works.

The mechanics of following the Lightning Flash and the Serpent is as follows. The path of the Lightning Flash exactly falls on the first 9 Paths as it descends. Where it crosses the Abyss (on the Lurianic Tree) from Binah (3) to Chesed (4) it definitely follows a Path (number 13). The Golden Dawn Tree does not have a Path connecting these two Sephiroth. The fudge used by the Golden Dawn Tree to allow the Lightning Flash to cross the Abyss, was to use the Path between Kether and Tiphareth to replace the missing Path between Binah and Chesed. It is unthinkable that the Lightning Flash finds itself unable to cross the Abyss, dithers around, returns to Kether and then crosses the Abyss via the Path from Kether to Tiphareth. But this compromise is exactly how the Lightning Flash is explained in terms of the Golden Dawn Tree of Life.

Of course the problem does not arise with the Lurianic Tree as the Path Binah-Chesed already exists. It is also noteworthy that on the Lurianic Tree, the Lightning Flash in its descent takes in all the Elemental Paths, Aleph (Air), Mem (Water) and Shin (Fire), as listed as part of the process of Creation in the Sepher Yetzirah. Two of these Elemental Paths are missed completely by the Lightning Flash as portrayed on the Golden Dawn format Tree of Life.

Let us now look at the Path of Return. Anyone who wished to make an artistic design of a Serpent on the Tree, would certainly not have disported the coils in the traditional fashion. Therefore there must be some significance in the coils, and indeed there is. The rules for determining which Paths the Serpent crosses in its upwards journey, and in what order are simple:

a. Only consider the Paths that the Serpent crosses over. The ones it passes behind do not count.

b. If the Path that the Serpent crosses already has been traversed by the Lightning Flash, then ignore that Path.

The Serpent then clearly marks out the sequence of Path numbers for the return from Malkuth to Kether, and these are shown in Column K12. When you have so numbered the Paths a number of other obscure Kabbalistic references suddenly become clear, and Rising on the Planes becomes a lot easier.

Four Worlds

Column K13-K20: The Four Worlds of the Kabbalists

This is the key to the following Columns K21 to K54, which are grouped according to the Four Worlds, beginning with Atziluth, the highest of the Four Worlds. The Four Worlds can be seen to have an entire Tree of Life in each, or they can be seen as a division of one Tree. Both interpretations are valid. Column K20 contains the secret 'revolutions' of IHVH in each of the Four Worlds (these are not correct in Liber 777). Column K19 contains the Gematria totals of the Hebrew in Column K20, and acts as a sort of 'check digit' to its correctness. Column K18 is simply the Hebrew letters which express then numbers in Column K19, for example 72 = Ayin (70) + Beth (2). This is why בנ is spelled with an ordinary, not a final Nun ן which would not then have added to 52.

Column K21-K24: God-Names in Atziluth

For some reason Crowley lists these Godnames as being in Assiah, when clearly both traditional sources and the Golden Dawn describe them as being in Atziluth. The Gematria totals are listed in Column K24.

Column K25-K28: The Names of God of Various Length

These are the names of God (apart from the previous group of Columns) most frequently used on Kabbalistic amulets, and are, if you like, the most 'practical' Godnames. The most famous Godname of 72 letters is treated at length in Columns A23 to A25. The Name of 42 letters appears in various forms – here I have used Hebraic sources rather than the Golden Dawn or Crowley spelling. There are several names of 12, 14, and 22 letters, as you would expect.

Column K29: Comparative Table of Archangels in Briah

The second World of the Kabbalists is called Briah. This Column is a comparative list drawn from various sources, so that you can see how the ordering and constituents of this most important list of Archangels has changed over time.

Column K30-K33: Archangels in Briah

For some reason Crowley lists the Archangels also as being in Assiah, when clearly both traditional sources and the Golden Dawn put them in the World of Briah. The most contentious ascription is that of Michael and Raphael to Tiphareth and Hod. These are often switched around. The reasoning is that as Raphael is Archangel of Air he should be in Tiphareth as a point of balance. Conversely he should be in Hod because his name means 'Medicine of God'. As Michael is God's soldier I feel it is more appropriate that he falls into Tiphareth. One temptation is to resolve this by using the positions in the Lesser Banishing Ritual of the Pentagram, but this does not work as its Archangel ascriptions are not the traditional ones anyway.

Column K34: Orders of Angels in Yetzirah – Comparative Hebraic sources

This is a comparative table drawn from various sources so that you can see how the Hebraic ordering and constituents of this list has changed over time.

Column K35: Orders of Angels in Yetzirah – Comparative Christian sources

This is a comparative table drawn from various sources so that you can see how the Christian ordering and constituents of this list has changed over time.

Column K36: Orders of Angels – Standard list of Dionysius the Areopagite

This list, drawn up by Dionysius the Areopagite in The Celestial Hierarchies, has become the de facto standard amongst Christian commentators, and was the first clear attempt to categorise the different choirs of angels. This table also shows Dionysius' sources for the different types of angel making up his Nine Choirs. Guardian angels are not part of the Choirs, but have been listed under Malkuth, for completeness, as they are closer to mankind.

Column K37-K44: Orders of Angels in Yetzirah

For some reason Crowley lists these Orders (or Choirs) of Angels as also being in Assiah, when clearly both traditional sources and the Golden Dawn put them in the Yetziratic World. The standard attributions are shown in Columns K37-K41. The Choirs shown in K36 are according to the Golden Dawn, Tycho Brahe and Francis Barrett. A non-standard variant is shown in Columns K42-K44.

Column K45-K46: Angelic Descriptions in the World of Yetzirah

This is a fairly trivial Column, as it is simply a quote split over the Sephiroth, but it is put here simply for the sake of completeness.

Column K47-K50: The Angels of Assiah

The source of this Column is Maimonides, otherwise known as Rabbi Moses ben Maimon. For some reason Crowley lists these Angels as being in Briah, when clearly both traditional sources and the Golden Dawn put them in Assiah.

Column K51-K54: The Heavens of Assiah

The standard list of Hebrew names for the Zodiac, Elements, and Planets with their translation, meaning and numeration. This is a key Column and maybe should have been put at the front of the Kabbalah Table, but is instead in its place in the World of Assiah.

Revolutions of the Divine Names

Column K55-K63: Revolutions of the Divine Names

These Columns show the permutations of the Divine Name in three of the Four Worlds, and provide some useful formulae. See also Column K20 for the overall Revolution of IHVH in the Four Worlds. Note that in K59 the sixth and twelfth banners have been interchanged, correcting an error that appears in Agrippa and was repeated by Crowley.

The Seven Palaces

The Seven Palaces or hekel (plural hekhaloth) are also called Halls or Chambers. They are to be found in the Sepher Yetzirah 4:15. This chapter deals with the 7 Double letters of the Hebrew alphabet. With them are associated Seven Heavens, Earths, Seas, Rivers, Deserts, Days, Weeks, Years, Sabbaticals and Jubilees. We are only concerned with the first few of these categories in the following Tables.

One way of looking at the Seven Palaces is to see them in the Four Worlds.

World of Briah	The 7 Palaces or Halls	Columns K64-K68
World of Yetzirah	The 7 Heavens	Columns K69-K73
	angels of the 7 Heavens	Columns K74-K79
World of Assiah	The 7 Earths	Columns K80-K85
	The 7 Hells	Columns K86-K90

When they are placed on the Tree of Life it has been customary to amalgamate the first three Sephirah and the last two Sephiroth, to achieve just 7 Palaces. However, as the root of these 7 Palaces are the spheres of the 7 Planets, I believe that they should just be associated with the planetary Sephiroth, 3-9, and not be attributed to Sephiroth 1,2 or 10 at all.

Column K64-K68: The Seven Palaces

The Seven Palaces range from the holiest in Binah, to the Palace of the Moon in Yesod. Kaplan in his edition of the Sepher Yetzirah gives a slightly different order and transliteration (Column K68) of which Netzach=Nogah (Venus) is the most immediately recognisable. I have not used this order, but simply listed it for completeness.

The Seven Heavens in Seven Palaces

Column K69-K73: The Seven Heavens in Seven Palaces

The Seven Heavens are related to the Seven Earths (Columns K80-K85) and the Seven Hells (Columns K86-K90). The terms Palace and Hall (Hekhaloth) may be interchangeable. Traces of this system can be found in early Mediaeval grimoires, like de Abano's Heptameron (see Column M10 where his slightly corrupt usage of the Heavens has been corrected).

The attributions of the Heavens are drawn from the Zohar. Crowley gives the Hebrew and Latin one row out of step. Godwin[18] suggests that the Zohar is out by one line, with Araboth equated with Chesed, and Vilon equated with Malkuth, but I think this is a misreading of the passage, and that the Zohar agrees quite well with the current Column.

The Latin of the 1st Heaven Velum sive Cortina has an interesting possible double meaning, as this may literally also be read as the 'veil of the oracular cauldron' in the sense of the oracle at Delphi.

Originally the archangels of each of the seven Heavens were archangels of the 7 planetary spheres, therefore the Heavens are an extension of the 7 planetary spheres. So when attributing the Heavens to the Tree of Life they should exclusively be attributed to Binah (Saturn) through to Yesod (Moon), and not include Kether, Chokmah or Malkuth in their dominion, especially not the latter.

Commentary

Column K74-K76: Angels of the Seven Heavens in Seven Palaces

These are taken from Enoch 3. Each Angel is said to be accompanied by 496,000 myriads of ministering angels.

Column K77: Princes in the Second Heaven of Raqia

The Second Heaven, Raqia, has been picked out for a Column of its own because it shows the significant numbers associated with the Planets and their associated angels. Obviously 365,000 myriad is a direct reference to the 365 days in the year. The attribution of 72 great angels to the Constellations suggests a link with the Shem ha-Mephorash or Name of 72 characters, and indeed there is such a link shown in Dr Rudd's work.

Column K78-K79: The Hierarchy of Heaven

This Column is taken from a series of chapters in Enoch 3, XVIII-XXI and ties together a number of angels and hierarchies in the Heavens. This is listed as if it was just one continuous hierarchy from the bottom to the top, but it is obviously made up of a number of other series. It is tempting to think that it is the hierarchy spread across all Four Worlds, but it is unfortunately not that neat. The numbers down the left column are suggestive rather than definitive.

The Seven Earths in the Seven Palaces

Column K80-K85: The Seven Earths in Seven Palaces

These are related to the Seven Heavens and the Seven Hells. The Seven Earths are seen as 'stacked' one beneath the other. The Earth corresponding to Malkuth, Cheled, is our own planet, and not strictly one of the Seven Earths. Arqa in Hod also contains the Seven Hells. The other Earths are populated by men who are said not to have Adam as their ancestor, and therefore are not exactly human. This makes this sound rather like Middle Earth, suggesting a rather Tolkeinesque vision of the occupants of the other Earths. Figure 5 directly below shows the list of the Seven Earths and Seven Hells in Hebrew circumscribed by the Four Waters, which links neatly with the next section.

The Seven Hells in the Seven Palaces

Column K86-K90: The Seven Hells in Seven Palaces

The Seven Hells are related to the Seven Heavens and the Seven Earths. There are several variant orders of these Hells, and Crowley lists their translation out of order. Gehenna has been used to describe a metaphysical Hell, but its origin is the graveyard, burning ground and rubbish dump just outside Jerusalem where those who could not afford a burial were unceremoniously dumped, a literal hell indeed. The Latin is from Rabbi Joseph Castiliensis in Hocto Nucis.

The Qliphoth

Column K91-K94: Arch-Demons or Princes of the Qliphoth

Aleister Crowley's list deviates from the traditional list to include several candidates from Revelations.

Column K95-K99: Orders of the Qliphoth

Crowley allocates three Orders of the Qliphoth to the Unmanifest Ain Soph Aur. This cannot be metaphysically correct as the Qliphoth are the shells created by the unbalanced forces generated as each of the Sephiroth were created. As Ain Soph Aur is the state/potentiality before any Sephiroth were created, it follows that they cannot have Orders of the Qliphoth attributed to them. But for the sake of completeness I list these three Orders of the Qliphoth below:
Qemetial - the Crowd of gods (more appropriate as an obverse of Kether)
Belia'al – Worthlessness (in reality found much lower down on the Tree)
A'athiel – Uncertainty (a state generated by the need to attribute these Orders somewhere!)

Column K100-K105: The Kings and Dukes of Edom

Crowley in Liber 777 put both of these categories in the same column, and then used the planetary sign for the Sun to indicate Kings and the planetary sign for Venus to indicate Dukes, which seems an unnecessary complication.

The source of these Dukes and Kings is Genesis 36:31-43 where these worthies are given in a straightforward manner with geographical locations and partial genealogy, suggesting that they were originally real kings (whose lands the Israelites probably took by force of arms) and whose names were later appropriated by the Kabbalists to label something altogether different.

The Partzufim and Body of God

Column K106-K107: Ten Divisions of the Body of God

This is a piece of Kabbalistic anthropomorphism. There is nothing sinister about the Latin word sinistrum or sinister: it simply means 'left', and does not imply the evil side of the Tree as some writers have suggested.

Column K108: The Countenances

Partzuf literally means 'face' so this section is about the Kabbalistic division of the Countenance of God into different 'Faces'. The divisions of Macro- and Micro-prosopus are well delineated in MacGregor Mathers' Kabbalah Unveiled.

Column K110: The World Triads on the Tree

This division into three Worlds is not the same as the Four Worlds.

Commentary

Sepher Yetzirah

Column K111: Elements and Directions from the Sepher Yetzirah

These directions are quite important and bear upon the distinction between a two dimensional Tree of Life (as is usually shown) and a three dimensional Cube of Space (as Carlos Suares suggests). These directions however vary from one edition of the Sepher Yetzirah to another. The second column shows the directions according to Isaac Luria and from the Pardes Rimmonim.

Column K112-K114: The Four Quarters and Six Directions

An important part of the structure of the Sepher Yetzirah that has been made much of by Carlos Suares and Paul Foster Case.

Column K114-K119: The Planetary Order in the Sepher Yetzirah

These key columns show the main variant attributions of the Planets to the Hebrew letters plus MacGregor Mathers' attribution which comes from no version of the Sepher Yetzirah known to me. These Columns provide background for some of the discussion in the Introduction.

Column K120-K121: The Intelligences of the Paths of the Sepher Yetzirah

This Column is drawn from a list called 'The Thirty-two Paths of Wisdom' added as a 17th century appendix to an edition of the Sepher Yetzirah. These names are designated as shekel, 'Intelligences'. The word 'intelligence' meant in the 17th century a spiritual creature (even an angel) rather than a measure of IQ. These names are supposed to describe the Sephiroth and Paths on the Tree, but hypothetically they may have been, at one time, a set of qualifying phrases or powers attached to a now missing list of angels. It is then possible to imagine that the angel or spirit attached to the phrase 'Intelligence of Conciliation' for example might have been an angel which could have been invoked to bring about reconciliation. Alternatively the Intelligence may have been the guardian of its particular Path. However this is just an hypothesis and depends upon finding the matching list of 32 angels or Intelligences for it to be proven.

This Column has however more value than has previously been recognised. The attributions to the Paths follow Golden Dawn protocols, but I believe that there is a different, more correct attribution, which can be derived by using the Path numbers on the Lurianic Tree of Life as shown in Figure 11 and in Columns K11-K12.

Table L. Letters Alphabets & Numeric Values

An important part of magical knowledge is the scripts in which many magical formulae are written: these can be the letters of a real language like Greek or Hebrew, or solely magical alphabets used for no other purpose. Writing divides into alphabetic and ideographic scripts. Alphabetic scripts (like Latin, Greek or Coptic) have a limited number of characters (typically around 25 characters) which have a specific sound. Words are formed from combinations of these characters or letters. Ideographic scripts (like ancient Egyptian or Chinese) have a huge number of characters (typically measured in the thousands) with each for a word or part of a word. In this Table we will be looking at only one ideographic language, Egyptian in Column L1, and isolating a few phonetic characters - but on the whole the writing of ancient Egyptian cannot be directly compared with an alphabetic language.

The alphabet in its various guises sprang essentially from Early Phoenician, which has in turn spawned Hebrew, Greek, Arabic, Persian, Coptic, Cyrillic, (extended to 36 letters) and of course the Latin alphabet used by English. Apart from the fact that much of the roots of magic are to be found in these languages, we are interested in them because of Isopsephy.

Isopsephy is the Greek name given to the practice of equating numeric values with individual letters, and therefore being able to total them to give a numeric value for any word written in the languages which sprang from Early Phoenician. This practice was very common in Greek, and so the names of gods and other spiritual creatures written in that language will often have a significant numerical value, from which legitimate deductions about that entity can be made. A selection of significant isopsephy is to be found in Table X.

More famously, this practice is common in Hebrew where the Kabbalistic practice of Gematria has been used to associate many words with a common numeric value. Some might say that this technique has been stretched to the limit by some modern writers who feel that any coincidence of sound or number is sufficient to draw a precise equivalence. Although such coincidences can appear very magical, I feel that we are only on safe ground where whole systems of significant numbers mesh (as with the Mithraic temple grades). When a series of key words are made up from the same multiples or differences (such as the names of the Olympic Spirits), then the use of Isopsephy in deductive reasoning is vindicated, but where just a single example is observable, then you should be very wary of coincidence and its seductive traps. Accordingly in this volume, I have provided Columns of numeric values only where they are most likely to be significant. Alphabetic scripts, particularly Hebrew and Greek, lend themselves to numerical equivalents, as indeed both these alphabets have been used as numbers, on a day to day basis.

Commentary

Egyptian Hieroglyphics

Column L1-L3: Egyptian Hieroglyphics

Ancient Egyptian is, like Chinese, a language in which specific glyphs stand for whole words. It is therefore not alphabetic, and so does not stand direct comparison with alphabetic languages. However a limited number of its symbols also have a phonetic value, so I have listed these here because of the interest in Egyptian magic.[19] It is not possible to tabulate the many hundreds of other Egyptian glyphs. The phonetic symbols shown here should not be equated with the letters on the same row in the alphabetic columns, as alphabetic languages are not directly comparable with hieroglyphic languages. Non alphabetic scripts like Egyptian, Mayan and Chinese have completely different roots and structure. Column L3 shows Hieroglyphics which do not have the phonetic value but have been identified as corresponding to specific Phoenician characters.

Phoenician

Column L4-L7 Phoenician Alphabet and Numeration

Phoenician is the root of most of the important cultural alphabets of the Middle East and Europe, including Hebrew, Greek, Latin, Coptic and obviously the English alphabet. Numeric values given for this are the same as the Hebrew values.

Hebrew

Column L8-L11: Hebrew Alphabet and Numeration

This is one of the most important tables in this book for the purposes of practical Kabbalah, especially Gematria. Too much has been written about this to require comment.

Column L12: Hebrew Masoretic Vowel Points and Pronunciation

Hebrew is written with only consonants, although a few consonants like Vav did duty as both consonants and vowels. While Hebrew was a living language, scholars knew how to pronounce the words, so vowels were not thought necessary. About the 7th century AD a system was introduced by the Massoretes in the interest of preserving what they considered was the correct pronunciation. These were marked in 'points' or dots and bars above or below the consonants. It is just as well they did, because gradually Hebrew ceased to be a spoken language, until its recent revival in the mid 20th century.[20] This Column shows the vowel 'pointings' and their pronunciation, although most Kabbalah books in English ignore these altogether. The pointings do not have a numeric value of their own.

[20] The attribution of the points to the Sephiroth comes from the Tikuney Zohar 70, 129a, b.

Greek

Column L13-L16: Greek Alphabet and Numeration

It is useful to note that the attribution of the Planets and Elements to the Greek letters is quite different to the attribution of these to the Hebrew alphabet. So although Greek and Hebrew, as alphabets, had a common ancestor in Phoenician, they have developed their own Planetary and Elemental attributions. One of the reasons for this is that as a written language Hebrew is basically consonantal, whereas Greek has a strong emphasis upon vowels. The Greeks attributed their vowels to the Planets. Therefore do not mix up these different attributions.

Column L17: Elements and Planets Corresponding to Greek Letters

Column L18: The 24 Elders or Seniors

Column L18 includes a Senior or Elder for each Greek Letter. These Elders are mentioned in the Book of Revelation, from where Dr John Dee took his term for the Seniors on his Enochian tables. Seniors is exactly the same Greek word as rendered 'Elders' in the Bible. These are the names 24 Elders mentioned as surrounding the throne of God in Revelations. The names are drawn from a Coptic Gnostic manuscript.[21] In the Gnostic context they became identified as heavenly powers that could be appealed to. They may also map onto the Zodiac signs, but are here mapped on to the more obvious key, the Greek letters which begin each of their names.

Column L19-L20: Magical Name of the Greek letters

Secret names or words of power associated with each letter.

Column L21: Gnostic Heaven and Word of Power

Important words of power associated with each of the seven Gnostic Heavens.

Column L22-L23: Greek Vowels

These Columns focus on the extension of the Greek cult of the vowel into Gnostic theology. Here we see associated Archangels and directions.

Coptic

Column L24-L27: Coptic Alphabet and Numeration

The Coptic alphabet is basically the Greek alphabet adapted to the needs of Ptolemaic Egypt, after its conquest by Alexander the Great. As such the numeration is very similar. The Copts however altered the Greek numbering system for values above 100. In some texts they simply add the letter rho (100) after another letter to indicate 'hundreds', so beta rho equals 2 x 100 = 200.

[21] From Berlin MS 11347.

In addition to the letters already in this table there are a further five letters that have no numeric value:

H	Hori
Ch, H	Haj
Sz, C	Sima/Chima
J, G	Djanda/Ganga
Tt	Dij

These therefore have no isopsephy or Kabbalistic import, and should not be arbitrarily allocated to the Sephiroth for convenience.

Arabic

Column L28-L31: The Arabic Alphabet and Numeration

Arabic has the same roots as Hebrew. Arabic is written right to left and has 28 basic letter forms. The use of 'alphabetic numerals' by the Arabs was introduced in imitation of Hebraic usage for the first 22 letters (i.e. up to 400) by the Jewish and Gnostic communities of Syria and Palestine, and then from the Greeks for the remaining six letters (500 to 1000). Although the numerical values agree for the most part across the whole Islamic world, there are some differences in the usage in the Maghreb (Islamic north Africa, including Morocco, Algeria, Tunisia and Libya), primarily in letters corresponding to English 'S' and 'D', and these are listed below.

Letter	East Arabic value	Maghreb value
Sin	60	300
Sad	90	60
Shin	300	1,000
Dhad	800	90
Dha	900	800
Ghayin	1,000	900

The usual order of the Arabic alphabet is different from Hebrew, but has here been re-ordered in order to align it with the numeric values. This numerical order was called abjad, a term which is familiar from the Kabbalah of the nine chambers, showing that it was originally probably just an ordering mnemonic. The Arabic equivalent of Gematria is called khisab al jumal ('calculating the total') or huruf al jumal (or 'totals by means of letters'). Following the Arab conquest of Egypt, Syria and Mesopotamia, numbers we often spelled out in full or written in borrowed Greek characters, showing their partial dependence on Greek isopsephy.

In Arabic, as in Hebrew, vowels are not letters, only signs added to the letter preceding them. In most cases the vowels are not written, so that the name

'Muhammad' for example, is just written 'mhmd'. The vowels are normally only indicated in special cases, like where there is doubt about the correct meaning of the word, and in reading books for school children, and have no effect on the numeration of the words.

Latin

Column L32: The Latin Alphabet Corresponding to Hebrew

This column shows the Latin or English alphabet in relation to Hebrew. Some letters in the English alphabet are relatively recent, so that 500 years ago for example U,V, and W ('double U') were the same letter, with 'u' being used inside a word (medially) as a vowel, but the other form 'v' being used at the beginning of a word or as a consonant.

Likewise I, J and Y are essentially the same letter, so that the number 4 could be written 'iiii' or more often as 'iiij'. Also 'x' is an import (from Greek) as can be seen by the limited number of words which begin in English with that letter. There is no 'x' in Hebrew. So excluding 'x' and the duplicated letters, the Latin alphabet was effectively one of 22 letters.

Unfortunately these 22 letters do not map exactly on to the 22 Hebrew letters, as the latter language has few vowels. For example, there is also no 'e' in Hebrew. Also in Hebrew there are two 't' characters, Teth (transliterated here as 'T') and Tav (shown here as 'Th'). Likewise there are two 's' letters, Samekh (shown as 'S') and Shin (shown as 'Sh'). These things prevent a one-to-one correspondence, however this column shows the Latin alphabet in Hebraic order.

Column L33-L34: Latin Alphabet

There is a lot of controversy about allocating numeric values to the Latin alphabet. Only I, V, X, L, C, D and M were ever used specifically as numbers by the Romans, unlike Greek and Hebrew where every letter was used as a number. So the number column for Latin should only show these values. However, in order to utilise numerical values for the whole alphabet, in more recent times, the numbers 1 to 9 have simply been allocated in sequence to the letters, as shown in Column L34.

Futhark

Column L35-L40: Runic Alphabet

Although there are a number of different types of runes, I have only included the German elder futhark and the Anglo-Saxon futhork [sic]. I do not believe there is a provable numeration for these letters, apart from a simple sequence counting from the beginning, despite various modern attempts to provide one, and so there is no numeration column.

Commentary

Enochian & Trithemius

Column L41-L43: Enochian Alphabet

This is the alphabet that was transmitted through the skrying of Edward Kelley for Dr John Dee in the 1580s. It purports to be the alphabet of the language spoken by the angels, but in fact is very like the alphabet to be found in Voarchadumia a book that was owned by Dee at the time of the skrying.

Column L44: Enochian Alphabet - Numeration

The key to the numeration of Enochian was first demonstrated by Dr Donald Laycock in The Complete Enochian Dictionary. The basic 1-9 numeric values were all established by him except for 7 which Robert Turner very reasonably pointed out probably corresponds with 'B', because this letter is the recurring initial letter of the angel names in Dee's De Heptarchia Mystica ('Of the Sevenfold Mystery').

An objective confirmation of the correctness of these number-letter correspondences is arrived at by placing the letters corresponding to the numbers 1 to 9 in sequential order. If you place these in a row you get:

LUD SON BPM

The phrase 'Lud Son' leaps off the page. Lud's son in the Bible was of course Enoch, after which these Enochian letters are named. Either this is a confirmation of the innate angelic intelligence behind the generation of these letters, or an indication that Kelley used the phrase as a crib mnemonic. I prefer the first explanation, but either way it confirms the validity of these numeric correspondences. The next three letters BPM yield an even more interesting key, the explanation of which will have to wait to another book, but the clue lies in the 49 Good Angels.

Enoch was son of Lud, who was son of Shem who was the son of Noah. Enoch supposedly lived 365 years, a symbolic number which is suggestive of a solar god. Enoch is also called Idris in the Koran, and Idris was reputed to be the inventor of geomancy (see Table G). It was through Dr Rudd's attribution of Enochian letters to geomantic figures, that Mathers was able to tie together all of the symbolism used by the Golden Dawn into his Concourse of the Forces.

A further interesting coincidence is that King Lud (whose name is celebrated in the famous pub of the same name near Lud's Circus in the city of London) was an old-time British god who John Dee researched at some length. It has been suggested that the 'London Stone' is now all that remains of an ancient stone circle that once stood at the top of Ludgate Hill on the same site now occupied by St Paul's Cathedral. King Lud lived in the city around 73 BC and expanded it considerably. London was for a while even known as 'Caer-Ludd' (Lud's Town). When Lud died he was buried at what was believed to be the highest point in London, now known as Ludgate. Dee was fascinated by King Lud and the supposed powers of his London Stone, and for a while was supposed to have lived nearby. Although the story of King Lud was probably invented by Geoffrey of Monmouth, this does not diminish the significance of Dee's interest.

Column L45. The Golden Dawn Cipher from Trithemius

The Golden Dawn Cipher manuscript was allegedly the source of the First Order rituals and some of the knowledge lectures of the Golden Dawn, and as such might be considered an important source of the material in the present volume. This column shows the magical script in which this very important Cipher manuscript was written.

The Cipher Manuscripts have been published several times but most completely by Darcy Kuntz.[22] These are written in a simple letter for letter cipher derived from Trithemius' Polygraphiæ, which was printed in Paris in 1561 but written half a century before. The cipher is as follows:

a b c d e f g h i j k l m n o p q r

s t u v w x y z

The Cipher manuscript contains some Hebrew, but seemingly not written by someone accustomed to writing Hebrew. Otherwise it is in English, but written backwards in imitation of Hebrew. It is therefore almost certainly written by a native born English speaker, possibly in the form of a summary or notes taken during or after a ritual.

With regard to its origin, it has been suggested that it came from German sources, specifically Fraulein Anna Sprengel. No German appears in the manuscript, and folio number 59 (which contains the reference to her, although in cipher, is in a different hand from the rest of the manuscript. It is obvious that folios 55, 57-59 and probably 60 are written by a different person, and added later. It seems to me that the Sprengel letters were added to the Cipher manuscript to help provide a link to the supposed provenance.[23]

[22] Darcy Kuntz, The Complete Golden Dawn Cipher Manuscript, Holmes Publishing, 1996. With an introduction by R A Gilbert. Limited to 200 copies.

[23] It may be a coincidence, but Gershom Scholem mentions a Frankfurt Jewish Masonic lodge founded in 1807 with a name identical to the Hebrew name of the Golden Dawn, except for the order of the words. The founders of this lodge were connected with the Rite of Strict Observance of the Baron von Hund. One of von Hund's adherents was Christian von Sprengeisen, a family name that might later have been shortened, or Anglicized, to Sprengel. Interestingly Sprengeisen died in 1809, the possible date of manufacture of the paper used in the Cipher manuscript.

Commentary

The suggestion that the Cipher manuscript was picked up from a Farringdon Road book stall is also inherently unlikely, as anyone wishing to get this manuscript into what turns out to be the right hands would not have taken the risk of leaving it for sale, because the manuscript might have been bought by someone else simply as a curio.

Although the paper dates from 1809 or maybe 1780/1790, I think it is certain (from the contents, which include post 1860 material) that it was written after 1860, and maybe as late as the early 1880s. This period has been referred to as the 'Golden Age of English Fringe Masonry' by Darcy Kuntz, and therefore it is not surprising that the Cipher manuscript, which in essence is a series of Masonic style rituals, was penned during this period. In fact the second folio is immediately concerned not with a general introduction, or theory, as you might expect, but immediately with 'where members ought to sit in the Temple'.

The first folio gives the name of the rite or Order, and it is not expressed as the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, which seems to have been a later title. The initial title is in Hebrew and is חברת "זרח אור בקר".

Interestingly this piece of Hebrew is the only one with pointing to indicate the pronunciation which is Chebrat "Zeracha Aur Beqor." The root of Chebrat is ChBR which means to join together (as in a Society). It also has a fascinating secondary meaning of 'to enchant, charm, or by incantations to collect serpents...without harm.' Aur means 'light' and Zerach means 'to dawn'. Beqir also means the dawn, but has an interesting secondary meaning of Ox with its implication of the yoke of fellowship. Gustav Meyrink in his novel The Golem writes of a seal which bears the name Chabrath Zereh Aour Boqer.

Other features in the Cipher manuscript are mentions of the Tarot cards, which are, very interestingly, already in the sequence later adopted by Mathers, rather than in Eliphas Levi's Tarot trump order of 1860. Folio 35 shows a later alteration, a cross edit arrow indicating the swap between the cards Strength and Justice (which Mathers has been credited with) whilst a little later on folio 38 this change is included without comment or alteration. Therefore it was a new change, and one just familiar to the writer of the manuscript as he was writing it.

The emphasis upon badge and insignia design, even to the point of crude designs for them, strongly suggests that the writer was certainly a Mason. The most interesting point is the inclusion of Enochian in several of the rituals without comment. This proves the writer was familiar with Dr John Dee's system. This makes it pretty certain that the writer was an English Mason with access to the British Museum, writing after 1860.

Lastly there is nothing Rosicrucian about the manuscript, and the word itself is not used, so it would seem that the original intention was completely

Masonic and Kabbalistic and not at all Rosicrucian. The drawing of the 'Jewel of the Adepts' which later became known as the Rosy Cross, only appears in folio 57, amongst the rather suspect later additions to the manuscript, and anyway the reference to it as a 'jewel', which is completely Masonic. The Rosicrucian elements of the Second Order were the product of MacGregor Mathers' scholarship. It therefore seems likely that Mathers was not the author of the Cipher manuscript, as it does not contain any overt Rosicrucian references. If Mathers had originally authored the manuscript then there would have been a Rosicrucian flavour from the beginning.

Magical Scripts

Column L46: The Theban Alphabet

This alphabet relates directly to the Latin alphabet, as distinct from the following alphabets which relate to the Hebrew alphabet.

Column L47-L50: Magical Scripts relating to Hebrew

Various classical magical alphabets were often used in the composition of sigils and talismans. Many are to be found in Agrippa. Note that as the other three scripts correlate with Hebrew, they probably came via the Arab world. Agrippa's three alphabets, known as Malachim, Celestial Writing, and Crossing the River, are all similar in terms of shape and style. All feature unusual serifs, with shape borrowings from Greek and Hebrew characters. Many of the characters are roughly similar to Hebrew, for example, in Celestial Script, the Aleph is a very simplified version of the Hebrew Aleph. The Cheth letter is roughly similar to the Hebrew Shin. Greek is also represented. The Celestial Yod is a simple triangle, similar to the Greek Delta. However, nothing more than a superficial analysis can be made between these alphabets since there is no definitive evidence of where Agrippa derived them.

The Forth Alphabet is known as Theban. Unlike Celestial, Malachim, and Crossing the River, Theban has one letter for each letter of the Latin alphabet and is similar to Trithemius' cryptographic system, although no connection has been positively established.

Table M. Magic of the Grimoires

The grimoires are the basic texts of practical magic, the books of the sorcerers, and the catalogues of spirits, angels and demons that they contain is the subject matter of this section. In assembling this Table it became apparent where a lot of individual spirit names came from. With the exception of the Goetia, this tabulation of the demons of the classical grimoires has never been done before.

First let us consider the derivation of the word 'demon.' The word comes from daimon which was characterised by Homer as a divine being, but somewhat below a theos or god. Many Christian theologians have likewise looked upon demons as simply fallen angels.

Each person was thought to be allocated a Holy Guardian Angel at birth, so daimons were often associated with an individual, as in the case of Socrates' daimon who accompanied him during his lifetime. From the 5th century BC, this function was linked with luck, and so the lucky person was called eudaimon (i.e. with a good daimon) whilst the unlucky person was referred to as kakodaimon (that is, with a bad daimon). The Neoplatonists like Porphyry and Iamblichus accepted the existence of both good and bad daimons. Early Christian theologians tended to see good daimons as angels, and bad daimons as demons, the embodiment and provocation of evil. After the Middle Ages, in Europe daimon or demon was seen universally as bad, and the original meaning lost to sight. This view was fixed with the translation of the King James version of the Bible out of Latin, in which all sorts of spiritual entities with different names were simply rendered as 'devil'.

In this section I have drawn material from grimoires in roughly chronological order, so that the earlier tables are the oldest material. There is some duplication because each grimoire is based on the ones that have gone before. I have resisted the temptation of synthesising the correspondences, and have preferred to leave them in such a way that the historical development can still be plainly seen, and readers will be encouraged to consult such source texts as have been already printed.

I had intended to add in a table for the grimoire of Armadel which was translated by Mathers from manuscript Science et Arts 88, in the Bibliotheque de l'Arsenal in Paris, and published by Francis King in 1980. However on closer inspection this manuscript is so corrupt, and collated in a completely scrambled order, as to be worse than useless. Its contents derive from older grimoires which have already been documented, and so it does not contribute anything to our knowledge to tabulate it here. In fact it is likely to have been one of the forefather manuscripts of the grimoires used by Henri Gamache to generate those very scrambled Hoodoo classics, the Sixth, Seventh and Eighth Books of Moses so popular still in Ghana and Louisiana.

Commentary

Testament of Solomon

Column M1-M6: Demons Bound by Solomon

This is one of the oldest spirit catalogues or grimoires, probably dating from the 3rd century AD. The Greek title of this oldest of grimoires calls the book:

> "The testament of [King] Solomon, Son of David, who reigned in Jerusalem, and subdued all the spirits of the air, of the earth, and under the earth; through (which) he also accomplished all the magnificent works of the Temple; what their authority [powers] are against men; and by what angels these demons are thwarted [bound]."

The demons referred to are the demons bound by King Solomon to help in the construction of his famous temple. The interesting column is M4 as it shows the exact means of constraining each demon. This demonstrates the magical principle, which seems to have been mostly lost sight of, that the magician, of himself, cannot constrain such creatures. He needs to invoke another spiritual creature (such as an angel) and use that spiritual creature to bind or constrain the demon. Once the demon is bound, then a contract or covenant can be negotiated with the demon to make it much easier for the magician next time.

Such a covenant is of the same nature, as the covenant between Yahweh and Israel, although at a much lower level, rather than the one sided soul-hocking pact of popular demonology. The list of demons is an interesting mix of well known and very obscure names. The demons naturally fall into the following groups:

1-21 Demons forced by Solomon to work on the Temple, or simply imprisoned, some named, some simply described. These include classical demons like Asmodeus who also appears in later grimoires. Of these, 6-12 are the demons of the seven stars of the constellation Pleiades, one of the 15 important magical constellations (see Column H73).

22-23 Ephippas and Abezethibou, two very powerful demons that Solomon used to transport a great pillar from the Red Sea, the latter being the demon that aided Pharaoh's magicians Jambres and Jannes against Aaron and Moses.

24-60 The demons of the 36 Decans. These are obviously from a different source, as they are mostly sickness demons, rather than the earlier ones who had more wide-ranging powers.

Liber Juratus

Column M7: The 100 Holy Names of God

Liber Juratus, Liber Sacer (the Sacred Book) or as it is better known, the Sworn Book of Honorius of Thebes dates from around 1225 AD. This table is very interesting, not so much for the names of God per se, but because in analysing the names into their language of origin, it became obvious that the majority of the god names in this grimoire are from Greek roots, rather than Latin, Egyptian or even Hebraic roots. This confirms that the Thebes spoken of in the preamble to this grimoire as the home town of the author is Thebes in Greece rather than Thebes in Egypt. The mix of names also includes Christian ones like Paraclitus and pagan common nouns like Pantheon. The Names are meant to provide a wide selection for the use of the magician to enforce his commands to the angels or spirits. The number after each Name of God indicates the order they fall in the original Latin text. The orthography is that of Gösta Hedegård's Latin edition. The name in brackets is the variant found in Daniel Driscoll's edition of the Sworn Book.

Column M8: The Angels of the Days of the Week

This Column give the names of the angels for each day of the week (and hence for each Planet) drawn from Liber Juratus.

Column M9: The Angels of the Months

This Column gives the names of the angels for each month of the year drawn from Liber Juratus. Interestingly the months quoted are Hebraic months, and hence only approximates to the Zodiacal signs.

Heptameron

Column M10: Angels of the Days of the Week

This complex Column summarises the various angels of Peter de Abano's Heptameron. Interestingly, Abano correlates the angels with the 7 Heavens (see K69-K73). The 7-fold Planetary/day structure of this grimoire is echoed later in Dr Dee's De Heptarchia Mystica, both titles incorporation 'hepta-' or 'sevenfold'. It is often said that the Heptameron could not have been written by de Abano, because he was interested in 'proper' subjects like medicine. This is said by commentators who do not understand the mediaeval mindset where magic is as serious a part of the world view as astronomy or herbal medicine.

Codex Latinus Monacensis

These tables are drawn from a nameless early 15th century grimoire (manuscript CLM 849) edited by Richard Kieckhefer.[24]

Column M11: List of Demons

An interesting list of spirits who are described as Kings and Princes, but whose names do not, as far as I can remember, occur in later grimoires.

Commentary

Column M12: Angels of the Days of the Week

An 'heptarchical' listing of Angels and their Kings for every day of the week.

Column M13-M14: Angels of the Hours of Days and Nights

A similar listing for angels designed to be evoked on particular Planetary hours.

Lemegeton

The following set of tables are drawn from perhaps the best known grimoire of all, the Lemegeton. There are many editions of this work, but the most accurate, scholarly and thorough edition is that edited by Joseph Peterson[24]. Supplementary to this is the edition of Dr Rudd's copy of the Goetia in which much of the technique for actually using it is disclosed.

The Lemegeton (or Lesser Clavicule of Solomon) is divided into five parts:

1) Goetia
2) Theurgia Goetia
3) Pauline Art (Parts 1 & 2)
4) Almadel
5) Ars Notoria

The last part may not always have been part of the Lemegeton. The following tables are drawn only from the first four books of the Lemegeton.

Goetia

Column M15: Demons of the Goetia (Lemegeton 1)

These Columns are drawn from the Goetia, the first of the books of the Lemegeton. This is a catalogue of 72 demons. In practice it needs to be considered alongside the 72 names of the Shem ha-Mephorash (for which see Column A24). These connections between angel and demon have been long standing, but they were probably first clearly documented outside of Hebrew texts as matching pairs by Blaise de Vigenère and Dr Thomas Rudd.[25]

Crowley refers to the description of these demons very misleadingly (in his Liber 777 columns 156-166) as 'Magical Images', as if they were similar to the Magical Images of the Decans. In fact they are not, for these descriptions are the evocatory appearance of the 72 demons of the Goetia. They are designed so that the karcist may recognise the specific demon upon its arrival, although many of the descriptions state clearly that the demon will change into a more suitable semi-human form if requested or ordered to do so.

The attribution of the demons to the 7 Planets is quite clear as this is implied in their titles and the metals associated with these titles.

What is not so clear is the nature of their association with the 36 Decans of the Zodiac, despite the fact that 36 divides neatly into 72. There is no mention of this in the original grimoire, and so a Decan correspondence does not appear here.

To make them fit the Decans, the 72 demons were rather clumsily repeated twice over by the Golden Dawn and most modern writers (once for the day, and once for the night). This association seems to have been imposed by the Golden Dawn, and in a different manner by other, predominantly French, commentators.

The 72 demons can be definitely attributed in sequential order to the 12 Signs of the Zodiac. When this is done, all of the Kings fall neatly in one Zodiacal Sign each. There are however only 9 Kings marked as such in the Goetia; therefore it is likely that another three demons were also Kings. Demons not marked as Kings (by any criterion should rank as one) include Astaroth. I have in M18 tentatively upgraded three demons (including Astaroth) to the rank of King.

There are also seven demons with dual ranks. This leads me to believe that there was originally probably one King for each sign, and that some confusion of rank has been introduced, so I have added a dual attribution to 3 demons, Astaroth, Phenex and Gremory (for very specific reasons), which then rounds out the one King per Sign arrangement. These three demons are marked with footnotes in Column M14, but their rank has not been changed in the Column itself. You can see how the rationale works out in Column M17, where the demons are laid out on a Planet and Zodiacal grid.

Another contentious point with regard to the demons of the Goetia is the Hebrew form or orthography for the names of their names. This is quite an important point, as the numerical value derived from their name can be of practical use in working with the demon, and in deciding its exact nature.

The names have been rendered into Hebrew by Dr Rudd (using a very simple letter for letter transfer), and by Mathers and Crowley (with more of a sense of how Hebrew is actually constructed). Mathers' transliteration is readily available. I have listed Rudd's transliteration, and also provided a Column showing a third attempt at reconstructing the orthography.

In the manuscripts of the Goetia the demons' names are written in Latin characters, and so there is no certainty (except in a few cases) that they ever had Hebrew equivalents. Some might in fact have been derived from Greek. Some may have originated in Latin. In one version of the Goetia it says at the end that:

> "These Books were first found in the Chaldee and Hebrew Tongues at Jerusalem by a Jewish Rabbi; and by him put into the Greek language and thence into Latin."

Assuming, for the moment, that this is true, it might make more sense to seek out an orthography for each demon according to whether the name had Greek, Latin or Hebrew roots. This approach may be more reasonable than forcing Greek names into a Hebrew mould or vice versa. Certainly many of the names have Latin endings like Naberius or Andrealphus. Other like Ipos (Ayperos), Halphas, or Bathym are clearly of Greek derivation. Others like Astaroth, Asmoday, Balam, and Bael are obviously of Hebraic, 'Chaldee', or Phoenician origin.

Rudd's version of the Hebrew of these names is rather too literal, replacing each English letter with an equivalent Hebrew. Crowley's version is a bit more likely, but still shows a lack of familiarity with that language. Crowley and Rudd's attempts to reverse engineer the Hebrew names of the Goetic demons are fraught with pitfalls. The numeration Column is therefore very speculative, and needs to be rectified at some later date.

Column M16: Powers and Specialities of the Demons of the Goetia

This Column lists the 72 Demons by their specialities and abilities, and should be useful in working out which demon to evoke for a particular purpose. This list was first compiled by Idries Shah in his Secret Lore of Magic many years ago, but has been here amplified considerably by returning to manuscript sources.

Column M17: Ranks of the Demons of the Goetia

Column M18: The Demons of the Goetia by Rank, Planet and Zodiacal Sign

This Column shows the individual demons of the Goetia according to their rank or Planet. The metals corresponding to each Rank are shown clearly in the Goetia. It is interesting that Earls and Counts, who correspond with Mars do not have iron as their metal. This is because traditionally such demons fear that metal, and we are all familiar with the use of the iron sword to threaten or to safely pass something beyond the circle bounds. In the past iron chains were sometimes used to form circles.

What shows up clearly are the 7 demons which have two ranks each. This is not accidental. Where this occurs, one occurrence has been enclosed in brackets and not included in the totals count at the bottom. The three demons that have been given an additional rank of King (in order to produce one King per Zodiacal Sign) have been underlined. It seems clear that at least Astaroth should have been so elevated.

The vertical correlation with Zodiacal Signs is erratic and a bit speculative. Several demons whose descriptions mention Sagittarius, do not fit into this scheme anywhere near that sign, but it is possible that these mentions of Sagittarius are just timing indications.

Column M19: Demons of the Goetia by Title, Planet and Legion Numbers

The number of legions commanded by the demon may be just that, or it may have a numerical significance relating to the nature or action of the demon.

Theurgia Goetia

Column M20: Good and Evil Aerial Spirits of the Compass from the Theurgia Goetia (Lemegeton II)

These Columns are drawn from the second of the books of the Lemegeton. They are like those in Trithemius' The Art Of Drawing Spirits Into Crystals, but shifted so that Sunday in the Heptameron is Thursday in Clavicula Salomonis, Monday in the Heptameron is Friday in Clavicula Salomonis. Apart from the slight change of Hour-Names as described below, Zamael appears as Samael.

Column M21: Emperors of the Good and Evil Aerial Spirits from the Theurgia Goetia (Lemegeton II)

These Columns are drawn from the second of the books of the Lemegeton. The emphasis here is upon compass direction. These spirits originate from Trithemius' Steganographia.

Ars Paulina

Column M22: Spirits of the Hours from Ars Paulina (Lemegeton III - 1)

This Column is drawn from the third book of the Lemegeton, and lists the spirits of the hours.

Column M23: Angels of the Degrees of Zodiac from Ars Paulina (Lemegeton III - 2)

This Column is also drawn from the third of the books of the Lemegeton. The numbers along the second header row are degrees, and are to be read in conjunction with the Zodiacal signs down the left hand edge of the Table.

Ars Almadel

Column M24: Angels of the Altitudes (Choras) from Ars Almadel (Lemegeton IV)

These Columns are drawn from the fourth of the books of the Lemegeton. I have not derived any tables from the fifth book of the Lemegeton.

Key of Solomon

Column M25: Hours of the Day and Night from Key of Solomon

Simple angel, day and hour correspondences from the Key of Solomon and Trithemius' Art Of Drawing Spirits Into Crystals.

Sacred Magic of Abramelin the Mage

Column M26: Servient Spirits from Abramelin

Mathers did the occult world a great service by discovering a French manuscript of this book, and translating it into English at the end of the nineteenth century. However a hundred years later it has been realised that the French manuscript was incomplete, particularly in the matter of the completeness of its all-important magical squares, and earlier and more complete German manuscripts have been uncovered and published in German. It remains for someone to produce a definitive edition of this most important grimoire in English. In the meantime these tables list the spirits conjured by this book according to their ruler. They have been divided into those spirits which are jointly ruled and those that are ruled by a single King.

Strangely the Greek goddess of the underworld, Koré, is silently introduced as a ruler into the fourth group. With regard to the number of spirits listed, this may be random, but is more likely to betray the existence of a structure in the source from which Abramelin drew his information. For example in the first row of Column M26 you find 111 spirits ruled by 4 Sub-Princes, this suggests that it was originally a system grouped by the 28 Mansions of the Moon, so that 4 x 28 = 112, with one spirit missing. Also the 49 spirits of Belzebud (sic) may have originally been 7 x 7 planetary spirits.

Column M27: Hierarchy of the Abramelin Demons

A summary table of Princes and Sub-Princes.

Column M28: Abramelin Magical Operations

This shows the various types of operations offered by Abramelin, divided up by the type of spirits used in each. This table also gives the chapter numbers in the Mathers' edition for ease of reference.

General Magical Objectives and Abilities

Column M29: Magical Objectives and Abilities

In contrast to the Visions (Column C2), the Magical Abilities are distributed on the Paths. Some attributions are very apt like the compounding of Love-philtres to Venus, or works of wrath to Mars. Some are less so, like the tongue-in-cheek attribution of Invisibility to Virgo.

Franz Bardon's grimoire

Column M30: Franz Bardon's Spirit Hierarchy

It is appropriate that the Column of Franz Bardon's spirits as recorded in his book The Practice of Magical Evocation falls here, as Bardon drew many of his spirit names from the German text of Abramelin, specifically his Zodiacal Spirits and his Spirits of Air. His other spirits he drew from Agrippa, the list of the fixed stars, the Shem ha-Mephoresh angels, sometimes encoding them with a simple alphabet replacement code, sometimes just copying them as they appear in the original source. 'Mars spirits' were actually spirits of the Decans, and you can easily verify this by looking for example at Skorpia (which is the spirit of the first Decan of Scorpio, or Sagitor (which is the spirit of the first Decan of Sagittarius), and neither of them are Mars spirits.

The perplexing thing is that although Bardon undoubtedly knew their origins, he mixed up their planetary attributions, so one use of this Table is to show where he really derived his spirit names from. An example of this is his use of the 12 zodiacal spirits as 'Jupiterian' spirits. Or his use of the names of the Fixed stars in an enciphered form as 'Spirits of the Sun.' I would like to think that this was the result of poor editing rather than deliberate concealment, but it is too endemic in his book to think so. Maybe he simply just wanted to protect the dabbler from any practical results, although attributing the 72 Shem ha-Mephoresh angels to Mercury seems an odd way of doing this. Nevertheless, once the spirit names are corrected and allocated to their correct planetary spheres, then his instructions in practical evocatory technique are amongst the clearest ever written in the 20th century.

Planetary Spirits & Intelligences

Column M31: Magical Squares of the Planets – Key Numbers

The magic squares of the Planets are most important as they are the means of generating various sigils. As these squares are already tabular, I have contented myself with simply listing the number of squares, sides and rows in each square, in summary form. These numbers are in themselves suggestive, the number of squares being obviously the square of the number of the corresponding Sephiroth of the Planet in question. In the column showing the sum of all the numbers in the square the most striking is 666 shown as the sum of the numbers in the square of the Sun, but the other numbers also have a numerological significance. The number 666 is famous from Revelations chapter 13:18 where St John writes:

> "Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the Beast: for it is the number of a man; and his number is Six hundred three score and six."

I am sure that Aleister Crowley would have noticed the Kabbalistic implications:

> "Here is Wisdom (Chokmah - 2). Let him that hath Understanding (Binah - 3) count the number of the Beast (2 x 3 = Tiphareth - 6): for it is the number of a man (111) ; and his number is Six hundred three score and six (6 x 111 = 666)."

Commentary

Column M32-M35: Intelligences of the Planets

These Intelligences are benevolent, as opposed to the Spirits of the Planets, who may act malevolently as well. The correct numeration of these creatures is important, and it is derived from the numbers of the Kameas. Intelligence is an old term which was often thought to be equivalent to angel, as well as implying a cogent deductive function.

The Hebrew words for the Intelligence of the Intelligences of the Moon have provoked a number of possible interpretations. The Hebrew orthography is usually shown as מלכא ב-תרשישים ועד ב-רוה שחקים but this only adds to 3221, which then has to be fudged. But with just one letter changed the correct Luna total of 3321 is reached with מלכא ב-תרשישים ועד ב-רוה שהרים. The pronunciation then becomes Malkah Be-Tarshishim ve-ad be-Ruah Sheharim. The revised word 'sheharim' means lunulas or round ornaments like little moons. The whole name now roughly translates as the 'Queen of Chrysolite and watery moon discs' which has a more relevant meaning than other suggested translations. Of course to support this reading MLKA would have to be read as MLKH, Queen.

Column M36-M39: Spirits of the Planets

These spiritual creatures may act malevolently or neutrally. The correct numeration of these creatures is important. The most famous is perhaps the Mercurial spirit called Taphthartharath, which was subject to a full Golden Dawn invocation which involved Allan Bennett, and other leading lights of that organisation, and which was written up in Crowley's Equinox.

Column M40: The Familiar Shapes of the Planetary Spirits

This is an important traditional table.

Column M41: The Visible Appearance of the Planetary Spirits

Useful in determining if the right spirit as responded.

Olympic Spirits

Column M42-M47: Olympic Spirits

The Olympic Spirits come from the Arbatel [26], although their origin considerably predates that book. They are primarily Planetary Spirits. These are quite important spirits and were a much stronger part of the German magical tradition than the English magical tradition. The clue to their nature is in the word 'Olympic' meaning from Olympus (nothing to do with games). They are in fact Greek planetary spirits. Several writers have attempted to put their names into Hebrew with little success, as cursory inspection will show that they are in fact Greek names. I have accordingly restored their Greek names. Their numeration is as follows:

[26] Published in Agrippa, Fourth Book of Occult Philosphy, Ibis Press, Berwick, 2005, page 145-153.

Hagith =	31 =	1 x 31
Bethor =	186 =	6 x 31
Och =	130 =	10 x 31
Araithron =	341 =	11 x 31
Phaleg =	558 =	18 x 31
Ophiel =	620 =	20 x 31
Phul =	930 =	30 x 31

Immediately a pattern becomes obvious, confirming the accuracy of the orthography. All the names are based on 31 or 'AL' in Greek, and are therefore a carefully constructed formula, not just random mediaeval names, as most people previously assumed. They form a key to Crowley's Liber AL vel Legis, a key that I do not believe has been published by anyone else to date. This key does in fact unlock Liber AL in a rather shocking way, but I intend to postpone the explanation of this material to a later date. Suffice it to say, that the Greek names of the Olympic Spirits are a significant key to Liber AL vel Legis, although one which Crowley was perhaps not aware of.

Furthermore, the multiples of 31 are in themselves significant. Apart from the factors 10, 20, and 30, all the remaining factors form a significant Middle Pillar formula:

1 + 6 +11 = 18, can be interpreted as Kether + Tiphareth + Daath = ih (10 + 8) or Arrow (in Greek). The path so traced out is indeed the Path of the Arrow. The key numbers for these Spirits are therefore:

Hagith =	1
Bethor =	6
Och =	10
Araithron =	11
Phaleg =	18
Ophiel =	20
Phul =	30

Column M48-M50: Olympic Spirits - Powers & Attributes

These Columns come from the Arbatel in Agrippa's Fourth Book of Occult Philosophy.

Elementals & Four Quarters

The last category of spirits listed here are the Elementals. Contact with these sometimes happens accidentally as they are very close to the physical plane. Bardon gives excellent instruction in their use in Initiation into Hermetics.

Commentary

Column M51: Hebrew Names of the Elements

Column M52: Bodily Humours and Qualities

Column M53-M56: Traditional Kings and Rulers of the 4 Elements

Column M57-M59: Angels of the 4 Elements

Column M60: Traditional Names of the Elementals

Names to be principally found in folktales and fairytales, but nonetheless valid.

Column M61: Enochian Elemental Kings

Drawn from Dr John Dee's Tables. See also Column D18.

Column M62-M64: Demon Kings and Princes of the 4 Elements

There is some difference of opinion about the directional attribution of Amaymon/Amaimon.

Column M65-M66: Cardinal Directions and Winds of the 4 Quarters

Column M67: Rivers of Hell

Column M68: The 4 Kerubs

These were used to represent the 4 Apostles in Christian religious art of the Middle Ages.

Grimoirium Verum

Column M69. Demons of the Grimoirium Verum

This grimoire is, from the names of its demons, of French origin. The earliest edition dated 1517 is more likely to have been actually published in 1617. There are Italian editions from 1868 and 1880. The demonic hierarchy in this grimoire is somewhat confused, and so this Column is just a tentative unravelling of this hierarchy.

Table N: Natural Magic

This Table is the magic of correspondences between natural things, the magic of Albertus Magnus, della Porta and Agrippa. It is also at the root of all sympathetic magical correspondences, the correlation between naturally occurring substances, like roots, leaves and stones (semi-precious or otherwise) under the headings of the Elements, Planets and Zodiac signs. The ZEP order is very important in understanding the grouping of this Table. It is impossible in the space to justify every single attribution, and so only a few random highlights will be picked out.

Animals

Column N1: Animals - Real

The first animal listed against each of the ten Sephiroth is the attribution given by Agrippa, who is on the whole more reliable than Crowley in matters of symbolic animals. Of these only the bull for Yesod is contentious, although that may be rectified by replacing it with the cow.

Crowley, in his notes to Liber 777, attributes Draco the dragon to the Unmanifest row zero. I have instead placed the dragon amongst imaginary animals (Column N2), and as a constellation in Table H72.

The hawk, as the highest flying animal has some claim to being placed in Kether. Among Egyptian gods, the Horus hawk is the symbol of the highest manifestation of Godhead, but it fits more comfortably as a symbol of Horus in Geburah.

The crocodile is obviously Saturnian, as it is a devourer of corpses, but it is more appropriate to the Underworld or a the Path of Saturn rather than a Sephiroth.

The horse is sacred to Mars on account of its use in war. The bear is martial because of its great strength and savagery. The wolf is sacred to Mars also on account of his savage nature, and its suckling of Romulus and Remus, the founders of Rome, whose devotion to Mars is well known.

The lion is a typically solar animal and hence suitable for Tiphareth. Crowley places the spider in Tiphareth, as it is geometrically in the centre of the web of the Tree of Life, but this is an overly-intellectual association and out of tune with the nature of Tiphareth. Like the bee (in its capacity as a stinging insect) the spider is more appropriate to Scorpio. The lamb pertains to Tiphareth as the sacrificed god, Christ, Attis or Osiris, but also to Malkuth in the pastoral sense.

The sow is appropriate to Venus as it is the female opposite of the boar of Mars. The boar is martial, as shown in the legend of Adonis.

Commentary

Mercury has an hermaphrodite nature, but listing the hermaphrodite as an 'animal' of Mercury makes little sense. The jackal is the sacred animal of Anubis and so fits here. Mercury and medicine are symbolised by the double serpent Caduceus wand. The bee is associated with sweetness and honey and so might be appropriate to Venus, but the bee is also a Rosicrucian symbol for stored up wisdom, and in this capacity is appropriate to Mercury. As a stinging creature it fits with Scorpio. The ape is sacred to Thoth and hence also to Mercury. The fox fits on Hod because of its sagacity. All fish are sacred to Mercury because of the iridescent mercurial colours of their scales, but at the level of a Path rather than Hod.

The dog is the companion of the huntress Artemis, and hence fits with both the Moon and Yesod. The elephant, sacred to Ganesha, is the god who breaks down obstacles. The elephant, in the sense of holding the world on its back, is a fit symbol of Yesod (the Foundation) with the tortoise supporting it in Malkuth. The toad also fits with Yesod and the moon because of its witchcraft and lunar associations.

The four Kerubs are the four animals of the Elements: Lion for Fire, Man for Air, Bull for Earth. The Eagle-Snake-Scorpion Kerub resonates with Water.

Of the Zodiacal signs, the most obvious associations are the animals of the signs themselves, so the ram is the symbol of Aries, the crab is the symbol of Cancer and so on.

The lion is the typical animal of Sol, and via its rulership, and its image, is most appropriate to Leo. The cat and tiger likewise happily fit on Leo.

In the Chinese twelve Animal cycle, the ox is sometime replaced by the rhinoceros, so this animal fits in Taurus. It was often portrayed as if its skin was made of armour (by Durer) and so it may also be attributed to Mars.

The elephant may be appropriate to Libra because of its stability and equilibrium.

Scorpio means scorpion and so that creature, plus all stinging creatures go with that sign. The beetle is also attributed to Scorpio on account of it association with transmutation and putrefaction. All reptiles, the spider and the bee, may be placed here because of their venomous sting. The lobster and crayfish are here because they are superficially 'water scorpions'.

Capricorn is portrayed as a goat with a fish's tail, so both these animals are associated with this sign. The goat, the ass and the oyster are traditionally associated with libidinous behaviour, and so they all fit well under Capricorn.

Pisces is obviously the fish. The dolphin, an aquatic mammal also pertains to Pisces. The beetle is Kephra as it rolls up balls of dung, symbolic of the Sun rising from putrefaction, and so also Pisces.

Column N2: Animals - Imaginary and Legendary Orders of Being

As a joke Crowley attributed God to row 1, and Man and Woman to lines 2 and 3. This only really works in the context of the Garden of Eden, and would only be complete if the Serpent was also included in this table.

The Unicorn is only Jupiterean via its connection with the horse of Sagittarius, and so this is too fragile a correspondence. It is more significant as an heraldic animal or in its Romance connection. Monoceros de Astris, the 'Unicorn from the Stars,' is given as the symbolical title of a Practicus Grade which corresponds with Hod, so this is where it has been placed.

Succubi are appropriate to Venus because of their sexual proclivities, although they could also be attributed to the Moon for the same reason.

The centaur, half-horse half man, is traditionally connected with archery and hence Sagittarius. The hippogriff has some of the eagle of Jupiter about it, so it has been placed in Chesed.

Column N3: Birds

The basic list of Zodiacal birds is drawn from Agrippa[27]. The pelican is an alchemic and Rosicrucian symbol of Christ the Redeemer, feeding its children with its own blood.

The peacock might be referred to Tiphareth (or even to Mercury) on account of its plumage. The vision of the Universal Peacock is also connected with the Beatific Vision, in which the Universe is perceived as a whole in every part.

The swallow for its swiftness is associated with Mercury. The ibis is sacred to Thoth and hence to Mercury.

The hawk is solar as all-seeing like the sun. The eagle is the sacred bird of Jupiter.

The sparrow, swan and dove are particularly sacred to Venus. The Iynx or wryneck is connected with Aphrodite. Iynx used magic to make Zeus fall in love with her. Hera was furious and transformed her into the wryneck bird. This bird was also used in early Greek love-magic. The raven and carrion birds should not be attributed to Venus just because Netzach translates as Victory, but there is a case for attributing the raven to Saturn following Edgar Allen Poe. More importantly the raven was the symbol of the Mithraic grade of Corax which corresponds to Mercury.

The white stork is associated with childbirth in fairy tales and so goes with Yesod. The owl is sacred to Aries as the bird of Minerva. The dog is attributed to Gemini because of Mithraic reasons.

Commentary

Plants

Column N4: Extended Plants Planetary Correspondences

This is a fuller and less selective listing of plant associations than Column N5. It is useful in understanding early herbal medicine, where the Doctrine of Signatures held sway. It is this doctrine which influences strongly the attribution of individual plants.

Column N5: Plants

The first plant listed for each of the 12 Zodiacal signs is the attribution given by Agrippa, on the whole more reliable than Crowley in matters of symbolic plants.[28] The second plant listed amongst the zodiacal signs is quoted by Agrippa from Apuleius. The rest are more speculative, and only a few highlights will be commented upon.

Crowley attributed the lotus and rose to the Unmanifest on very shaky grounds. The rose fits in Tiphareth because of the Rosicrucian symbolism. The lotus Crowley puts in Water and Cancer, but its Buddhist symbolism of enlightenment (with its roots still in the earth) makes it a Middle Pillar plant. I have placed it in Tiphareth for this reason. The grape also goes here for its Bacchic qualities.

The peach belongs to Netzach and Venus because of it is Chinese for the female organ.

The mistletoe fits in Yesod and the Moon for its druidic associations. For the same reason the oak is attributed to Tiphareth. The oak is also Jupiterian.

The vine goes into Malkuth, for no matter how high it climbs it is still rooted in earth.

Column N6: Vegetable and Synthetic Drugs

LSD is attributed to Sephiroth on the Middle Pillar for its ability to induce a rising on the planes trip, and finally to Kether because of its ability to induce complete ego loss. LSD is capable of giving visions of the direct path, the flight up the Middle Path passing through Yesod and Tiphareth to Daath and the complete ego loss of Kether.

I feel that Crowley attributes hashish far too high up the tree, and a 'widening of mental horizons' philosophic drug like ether is more appropriate here.

Coffee as an intellectual stimulant and fits easily in Hod rather than Tiphareth. Cocaine, methedrine and caffeine also fit in Hod in their most intellectual and incisive modes.

[28] Agrippa, Three Books of Occult Philosophy, Llewllyn, St Paul, 1993, page 296-7.

Anhalonium Lewinii is too rich and visual a drug to fit anywhere but Yesod or Netzach.

Cannabis is appropriate to the lunar dreams of Yesod, and in a sense also belongs to Malkuth for its affect upon the sensual appetites.

Column N7: The 16 Traditional Magical Plants of Albertus Magnus.

These are listed because they form a list of the fundamental herbs of the period, with their name in four languages as understood in the late Middle Ages. The magical effect of each herb is very condensed and omits the precise procedure and preparation, but is listed as an indication only.

Precious Stones and Metals

Column N8: Precious and Semi-Precious Stones

The first stone listed for each of the 12 Zodiacal signs is the attribution given by Agrippa, on the whole more reliable than Crowley in matters of symbolic stones.

Crowley's attribution in his notes attributes the Star Sapphire and the Black Diamond to row zero but this seems altogether too bold. In the Zodiacal section the first two stones are traditional the Zodiacal gems. The first named is found in ancient Hebrew, Roman or Arabic lists. Stones with rather far-fetched connections, such as jacinth to Sagittarius, have been omitted.

Column N9: Metals and Minerals

Crowley allocates Carbon to the zero row, in the sense that carbon might be the basis of all life. Kether is a possible position on the Tree for this element, both in its guise as a diamond, and as pitch black coal.

Aurum Potabile is the drinkable gold of the alchemists which is supposed to be a universal medicine, hence its attribution to Kether.

Strangely Crowley attributes lead to Luna, but a much more convincing attribution is lead to its own planet Saturn or to Earth. Silver is obviously more appropriate for the sphere of the Moon. See also the alchemy Columns E1-E4.

Column N10: The Stones of the High Priest's Breastplate

This device was studded with 12 precious stones, representing the 12 tribes of Israel. Its prime function was to protect the High Priest from the sometimes deadly energies of the Ark of the Covenant. It is interesting that a covenant between god and the Hebraic people was so central to their faith that it was preserved in such splendour.

The first three stones formed the top row (counting left to right), stones 4-6 formed the second row, and so on. Some authorities suggest that the emerald and the carbuncle should be reversed. The details of the Breastplate's construction are clearly set out in Exodus xxviii. 13-30 and xxxix. 8-21.

On a much smaller scale is the Breastplate used by 17th century magicians such as Dr Thomas Rudd to protect themselves against the 72 demons of the Goetia. The modern and pale reflection of both of these is the parchment lamen worn on the chest and sometimes held before the eyes to provide similar protection during evocation. The stones of the High Priests Breastplate are therefore of more than historical interest to the practicing magician. There are many ways of listing them, and many interpretations of what the stones are in modern nomenclature. The attribution to the Tribes is one of several different attributions. Even the Bible has different orderings and is not internally consistent.

Perfumes & Incenses

Column N11: Perfumes and Incenses

The heady suffumigations of ceremonial magic should be chosen with care, and matched with the type of force being invoked or evoked. Unfortunately modern man no longer has a nose for the subtle distinction between these incenses and perfumes, or a sensitivity to exactly what magical environment will be created by the burning of a particular resin. Such an appreciation is important to magic. A reading of J K Huysmans A Rebours (Against Nature) or Patrick Suskind's Perfume may do something to rectify this lack of appreciation.

Despite Crowley's attribution of tobacco to Geburah, I do not feel that tobacco is a perfume in any sense, but should instead be listed under drugs. Cinnamon has the biting quality of Geburah and Dragon's Blood its colour. Nor is menstrual blood, attributed to the Moon by Crowley, a perfume in the same sense as the other perfumes in this Column. Wormwood (Gemini) is not a perfume either, but a herb.

In the list of 12 zodiac signs, the first perfume listed is the most important attribution, being drawn from Agrippa and Liber Juratus. The second part of this Column are planetary incenses suggested by David Conway.

Column N12-N14: Zodiacal Perfumes of the Decans

The Decans are divided into Ascendant, Succedent and Cadent Decans. For more information on the Decans, see Table H54-H71. Some of these perfumes are not immediately identifiable.

Column N15: Planetary Perfume Compounds

These are the traditional mediaeval recipes for the most important seven planetary incenses. Although there are many proprietary brands of planetary incense, few actually include all the ingredients as prescribed, and will substitute other things, often just simple church incense, so it is good to either compound it yourself or buy from a reliable supplier such as Peacock Angel.[29]

Traditionally an animal's blood was introduced to bind the incense. This also then acted as a sort of sacrifice - something no longer acceptable today. Remember that Jewish practice, as documented in the Bible, involved extensive sacrifice of animals in the temple, and so it was only natural that this procedure found a place in magic.

Strangely these passages remain un-excised, whilst orthodox practice no longer countenances such sacrifices. I would not like to encourage cruelty or the senseless killing of innocent animals, and suggest some other binder in the form of a liquid resin is used. I suggest strongly that you do not use your own blood for this purpose, as has been suggested by various writers, because of the practical implications of sacrificing yourself to the entity being invoked.

Column N16: Complete Perfumes from Liber Juratus

This duplicates some of the material in Column N11, but it is included to demonstrate the range of perfumes, antiquity and consistency of these recipes. This example is drawn from Liber Juratus, a grimoire of the early 13th century, and the spelling has deliberately not been modernised, so you get the full impact of reading an early grimoire.

Column N17: Perfumes of the Sub-Elements.

These are the perfumes of the combinations of one of the five Elements with another as listed by Crowley. The Element listed in the column on the left is the base Element, and the Element listed across the top is the sub or tincture Element. It is suggestive to select one Element and read its full column and its full line. The gall of the rukh is a fictional perfume suggested by Crowley, designed to suggest the ultimate in Air, derived from the huge bird in the story of Sinbad the Sailor from the 1001 Arabian Nights.

Column N18: Fumigations from the Mystical Hymns of Orpheus.

This Table lists the perfumes that were regularly used for ancient Greek Orphic rites as listed in Thomas Taylor's translation of the Mystical Hymns of Orpheus. Very useful if invoking the Greek gods.

Column N19: Incense from the Greek Magical Papyri.

This Column, taken from PGM XIII lines 17-22, contains very traditional incenses.

Column N20: Perfumes and their Associated Plants.

This column is a key to interpreting traditional perfumery names, which are here shown with their botanical source. This is often useful in tracking them down.

Table O. Orders, Grades and Officers

This table shows the various grade structures used by a selection of occult, Masonic and magical groups, from early Mithraic grades in use two millennium ago to the most modern magical fraternity of the 21st century. Freemasonry predominates, because of the close connection between Freemasons and founders of magical fraternities like the Golden Dawn. From this Table you can see how the vividly inflated titles of Freemasonry have rubbed off on the occult tradition.

Mithraic

Column O1-O5: Mithraic Initiation Grades and their Greek Numeration

As far as I know, nobody has noticed the regularity of the numeration of the Grade names in the Mithraic initiations. In listing these, I have corrected a few of Walter Moeller's numerations.[31] I have used Leo rather than Leontica, and Sotern rather than Pater. The results are extraordinary and will repay further research.

The key is the number 129, which might well be a secret numeration of Mithra. It is certainly the key to Mithraic planetary initiation grades. The arithmetic difference between the numerations of many of the Grades, well beyond the level of coincidence, comes out again and again to this figure, for example:

Mercury - Jupiter = Corax - Leo = 129
Mars - Venus = Miles - Nymphus = 129
Sol - Venus = Heliodromus - Nymphus = 129
Saturn - Moon = Pater/Sotern - Perses = 129
Earth - Saturn = Mystes - Pater/Sotern = 129

This is not just fantasy, as it can be clearly seen from the fact that these otherwise disparate and unconnected words were used specifically on account of their Greek numeration. It also explains why such strange Grade names were used, as they do not appear to make up a logical set.

It is such patterns as this, where Gematria can be used to validate ancient terminology, that are a much more valid and wide-ranging use of Gematria than the modern penchant for idly equating two words together which just happen to have the same numeration. For numerations to be usable they need to be either well attested in ancient authorities, or be part of a pattern as they are here.

Another example validating the Mithraic numeration of 129 is as follows. The constellation of the Bull (Taurus) corresponds to the Greek letter digamma. This letter is obsolete, or hidden if you like. If you add Mithra to the Bull (129 + 6) you get doxa or 'glory and honour' very important concepts in the context of Mithraism, which mainly appealed to, and was spread by, the Roman legions. Another clue to the real identity of Mithra is that grade 'Perses' is not just any 'soldier'. He is specifically the son of Perseus, the hero. This is the name given to the constellation in the sky just above Taurus the Bull. You may remember that the key story about Mithras is that he slayed the bull, so here in the sky is the constellation of Perseus 'kneeling on' the Bull, whilst together their numeration equates with the soldierly qualities of 'glory and honour'.

[31] Etudes Preliminaires aux Religions Orientales dans L'Empire Romain, Tome 38, 1973.

For another example of the serious use of Gematria to reconstruct ancient mysteries, look at Columns M42-M47 on the Olympic Spirits, which have now been proven (using this technique) to be a definite and coherent series of spirits of Greek origin, not just some arbitrary invention of some 16th century writer.

The supporting Mithraic images of dog, snake, lion and the two torchbearers obviously fit into the Zodiac as they are very clearly associated with constellations closer to the horizon, but adjacent to the familiar twelve. This imagery does not rely upon written sources, but can be readily seen in Mithraeums throughout Europe.

Honey formed an integral part of the rites, as did the contrast between Fire (Leo) and Water (Nymphus). The Miles (Mars - soldier degree) emphasises the coming forth into light. The Moon (Perses) is also contrasted with the Sun (Heliodromus). The 'Persian dagger' used to symbolise Perses is the curved sword (or harpe) that Perseus used to decapitate the Gorgon.

Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn

Column O6-O8: Grades of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn

The Golden Dawn grades divide into three separate Orders, a pattern that Crowley followed in the A.'.A.'. The First Order was all that was outlined in the Golden Dawn Cipher manuscript, and these relied upon the Kabbalah. Mathers was responsible for writing the Second Order rituals, and these had a significant Rosicrucian content. The Third Order was made up of 'Secret Chiefs'.

Column O9-O12: Passwords of the Grades of the Golden Dawn

The passwords are no longer valid, in the sense that they are changed regularly by working lodges, but it is useful to see what they were and how they were obviously selected on the basis of their numeration, rather than for their literal sense.

Column O13-O17: Pre-Golden Dawn Grades

Less known, are the alternate titles of the Golden Dawn initiation Grades, e.g. 'Monoceros de Astris' and so on. These alternate titles were taken from old Masonic/Rosicrucian 'brotherhood names', pass-words of a sort, intended to change periodically.[32] The Golden Dawn used some of them for permanent grade titles.

These grades listed in Kenneth Mackenzie's Royal Masonic Cyclopaedia show where the Golden Dawn got its grade structure. The numbers associated with each grade are significant, and 777 equates with Adeptus Exemptus. Column O16 lists the lovely poetic Latin names of the grades. Hodos Chameliontos (a slightly different spelling from that used by Mackenzie), or the Path of the Chamelion was an image used by W B Yeats to great effect in his poetry. The 'Consulates' shown in Column O17 were probably a piece of fantasy, but may also indicate the addresses of other adepti in communication with the founders of the Golden Dawn. It is interesting that the lower grades were all in Germany or Austria.

In Column J1 to J3, Hiddekel, Phrath, Pison and Gihon are the four rivers of the Garden of Eden, which were associated with Golden Dawn grades. For example Phrath was associated with the grade of Philosophus.

Column O18-O20: Golden Dawn Temple Officers

These are the titles of various officers in a working temple of the Golden Dawn. Female equivalents of the officer's titles were obviously important in the Golden Dawn. The corresponding Egyptian godform is that which would be visualised and then assumed by the officer concerned.

Masonic Grades

Note that Columns O23 to O27 are numbered in Grade order. No attempt has been made to correlate them with the spheres of the Tree of Life.

Column O21: Officers in a Masonic Lodge.

The standard list.

Column O22-O27: Masonic Grades of various Rites

These are the grade structures of the more important Masonic bodies with an interest in the esoteric work of the lodge. They are also amongst those organisations that Crowley claimed to have subsumed in his OTO, although their respective governing bodies might well not agree.

Column O22: Masonic Grades – Relaxed Observance

This degree was originated by Baron von Cavin and Dr August von Starck in Vienna in 1767. This particular strand of Freemasonry had a Templar flavour, and concerned itself with magic, alchemy and the Kabbalah.

Commentary

Column O23: Masonic Grades – Rite of Philalethes

'Philalethes' is Greek for 'Lovers of Truth'. This Rite was founded in Paris in 1773, and is allied with the principles of Martinism, and its members specialised in the study of occult science. The principle members included Prince Friedrich Ludwig of Hesse-Darmstadt, and Court de Gebelin, who was responsible for foisting the theory that the Tarot sprang from Egyptian roots onto an unsuspecting world. Cagliostro may also have been connected with the sponsoring society, under his alias of St Germain.

Column O24: Masonic Grades – Philosophic Scottish Rite

This Rite was established in Paris in 1776 being founded on Dom Pernety's 'Rite of the Hermetic Sublime Masters of the Luminous Ring' which was heavily concerned with alchemy. Initiates were assumed to be Master Masons already.

Column O25: Masonic Grades – Scottish or Ancient & Accepted Rite

In 1761 it is said that the 'Council of Emperors of the East and West' granted a patent to spread the Rite of Perfection in America. The Ancient & Accepted Rite descends from this, and although one of the most popular rites, and by some considered 'standard Freemasonry', it in fact only dates from about 1802.

Column O26: Masonic Grades - Antient & Primitive Rite

This rite (with is antique spelling) was established at Montauban in 1815.

Column O27: Masonic Grades – Rite of Memphis and Mizraim

'Mizraim' or 'Misraim' is the Hebrew word for Egypt. This Freemasonic Rite derives from Count Alessandro Cagliostro (1743-1795) an Italian and self-styled Rosicrucian, who intrigued the courts of Europe with his tales. He was born Giuseppe Balsamo of a poor Palermo family, but initiation into the Knights of Malta and then into Freemasonry allowed him to move up in society. Despite being accused of theft and fraud, and being imprisoned by the Inquisition, he managed to found or at least transmit one of the most famous Rites, which subsequently had links with various magical fraternities. Some of its elaborate grades and titles were also adopted by these fraternities, hence their relevance here. The Rite was especially celebrated at the equinoxes. In 1862 the Rite of Memphis was admitted as a subordinate Masonic system of the Grand Orient Lodge of France. Note the division into four Orders, particularly the Mystical (III) and Kabbalistic (IV) Order.

Aleister Crowley

Column O28: Grades and Magical Mottos personally adopted by Crowley

This is not a grade list as such but a biographical list of the dates on which Crowley reached, or claimed to have reached, various grades, with the motto he adopted.

Column O29-O30: Grades of the OTO

Column O29 is the grade structure of the OTO as given in the 'Synopsis of Degrees' attached to the OTO manifesto of 1917. As you can see the OTO was designed to embrace and include grades and teachings from Masonry, Rosicrucianism, the Templars and Illuminism. This early formulation was subsequently modified by Crowley, who added a O° which he entitled 'Minerval', a title which was previously the second degree title. Column O30 shows the expanded 21st century grade structure, although there are a number of more recently developed grades and titles not shown on this abbreviated version.

The Ordo Templi Orientis was founded by a wealthy paper chemist, Carl Kellner (1851-1905). Kellner was a student of the occult and believed that he had discovered a 'Key' to the symbolism of Freemasonry and to the Mysteries of Nature. Along with Theodore Reuss (1855-1923), he decided to call his order the OTO. In 1902, Reuss, with the occult writer Franz Hartmann and Henry Klein, purchased the rights to perform the Scottish, Memphis and Mizraim rites of Freemasonry (see Columns O24 and O27), the authority for which was confirmed in 1904 and again in 1905. These rites, along with the Swedenborgian Masonic Rite, formed the core of the newly established Order. When Kellner died in 1905, Reuss assumed full control, becoming the first Outer Head of the Order.

The OTO became famous through its association with Aleister Crowley. Reuss met Aleister Crowley and in 1910 admitted him to the three degrees of the OTO. Only two years later, Crowley was placed in charge of the OTO for Great Britain and Ireland, and was advanced to the X°. The appointment included the operation of the ordinary Masonic degrees of the OTO, and an inner division which was called the Mysteria Mystica Maxima. Within a year Crowley had written the Manifesto of the M.'.M.'.M.'. which described a basic ten-degree system, which was still principally Masonic, with Kellner's three degree of Academia Masonica forming the VII°, VIII° and IX° of the OTO.

After Crowley's death, the baton passed to Karl Germer, who with the assistance of Gerald Yorke, moved the activities of the OTO to America.

Under Germer, OTO activity diminished to little more than an association in name alone, and Germer died in 1962 without naming a successor. It was not until 1969 that anyone stepped into the void and Grady McMurtry invoked an old authorization from Crowley to form a 'camp' and assumed the title of Caliph. He began performing OTO initiations the following year. The OTO was not incorporated under the laws of the State of California till 1979. When Grady McMurtry died in 1985, his position passed by election to William Breeze who, together with Bill Heidrick, has breathed life into the organisation, and increased its membership and level of activity considerably.

Commentary

Column O31-O32: Grades of the A.'. A.'.

The grades of Crowley's order, the A.'.A.'., as shown in Magick in Theory and Practice in 1929. Note the two grades between the three sub-Orders, following the Golden Dawn structure. 'Babe of the Abyss' corresponded to Daath as a link grade and 'Dominus Liminus' corresponding to the Veil Paroketh, also as a link grade.

Column O33: Practices and Attainments for each Grade

Crowley's list of attainments required of each grade.

Column O34: Magical 'Weapons' and Temple Equipment

This table is an attribution of the various pieces of magical equipment to the Tree of Life. This Column differs from Crowley in a few important respects, notably the return to the grimoire attributes for the four Elements, specifically Wand = Air and Sword = Fire. The correctness of this revision is reflected in Crowley's own attribution of Sword = Mars which equals Fire, and Wand = Mercury which equals Air. There is no dispute about Cup = Water or about Coins = Earth.

Planetary equipment attributions are in line with the planetary natures, but Crowley's zodiacal attributions are forced and artificial. The reason for this is obvious: magical equipment is used to invoke the planets, but the Zodiacal signs are not usually invoked. The astrological attributions have only been shown to support the positioning of the magical Formulae in the next column. Crowley attributes the Bow and Arrow to Path 13 and Path 25, because of the image of the arrow passing up the Middle Pillar fired from the bow Qesheth (the rainbow), and not because of any intrinsic correspondence to these Paths. The Furnace is an unlikely (sexual) attribution to Path 18, and it has been replaced by magical equipment more in tune with Cancer. The Wand is only appropriate to Virgo in the phallic sense of semen retained.

Column O35: Magical Formulae

The formula were originally god names, but by dint of using Gematric analysis, have been applied as mnemonics for organising ritual. Some of these like Abraxas are ancient Gnostic formulae, some are Hebraic like AHIM, and others are Crowley's version of traditional formulae like Abrahadabra, which differs by one letter from the conventional spelling. You may regard such changes as restoration of the original word, corruption of the original word, or an extension of the original meaning. Much of this material will be found in Crowley's Magick in Theory & Practice. Each (especially Chapters II to VII) and each formula has been supplied with its numerical value as an aid to understanding why they occur where they do.

Table P. Pagan Pantheons

The nature of the gods changes over time, so trying to categorise them is a risky business. In every culture certain archetypes or styles of god or goddess will be found repeated again and again. The nature and attributes of the gods are not arbitrary. This is either because man creates the gods the same way, no matter what his race or culture, or alternatively the gods really exist, and they are just given different names in different cultures. It does not really matter if the gods exist or not, as 'the universe behaves as if they do'.

Accordingly it is important for us to categorise them and see the many parallels that exist between one culture's gods and the next. For those readers who are hardened monotheists, I suggest they view the various gods as different facets of the same divinity. For those readers who are comfortable with a polytheistic outlook on life, I suggest that there is but one Creator God: the universe is too well made to have been constructed by a committee.

In analysing the gods, the clearest associations are those with the 7 Planets. If this identification can be made, then this also allows us to place them within the 10 Sephiroth. The 4 Elements are also useful in placing water or fire gods, although the gods of earth have a competing allegiance in Malkuth, and so sometimes appear in both places. In some cases, where a god has changed in quality over time, or has widely varying functions, they appear in more than one row.

One category which is not well provided for on the Tree of Life is the Underworld. In Classical times this was not seen as hell, and it is not appropriate to equate it with the Qliphoth. As a compromise, gods like Hades have in the past been attributed to Saturn or Earth on the 32nd path. This might be partially justified in terms of where the soul goes after death when it leaves Earth or Malkuth, but it is still a compromise. The god Hades (as distinct from his domain) for example was seen as 'that other Zeus' and as powerful in the Underworld as was Zeus was in the land of the living, so placing him on the 32nd path does not really do him any justice.

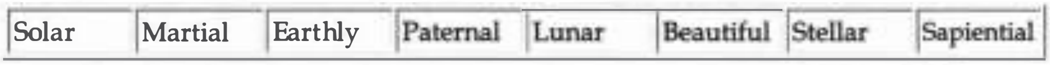
Gods were referred to as chthonian if they were connected to the lower worlds, and the obvious Greek chthonian gods were Persephone, Demeter, Hekate, Pluton and Hades. To facilitate categorisation of these gods of an Underworld that has no exact correspondence in the Kabbalah, I have added an Underworld 'UW' row, but only in the Pagan Pantheons Table P, to accommodate these gods of the Underworld.

In the Middle Ages, Ovid and Virgil were widely read, and formed the main source for classical myths in western Europe. During the Renaissance a large number of Greek and Hermetic texts again became available, but detailed knowledge of the Egyptian gods had to wait for the interpretation of hieroglyphics by Champollion (1790-1832). Having said that, there was a certain amount of information about the Egyptian gods available from Greek sources, like Herodotus, some of which was thought to be myth but is only now proving to be in many cases literally correct. I await with interest, confirmation that the descriptions that Herodotus gave of the elaborate chambers and passages under the pyramids of Cheops (Khufu) are in fact true.

Why is it instructive to compare the gods of different pantheons, looking for common qualities and comparing their myths? Crowley [33] had some interesting comments:

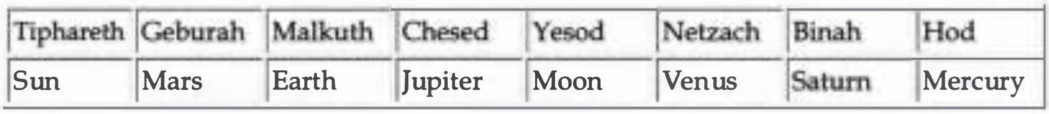
> "Priests, to propitiate their local fetish, would flatter him with the title of creator; [but] philosophers, with a wider outlook, would draw identities between many gods in order to obtain a unity. Time and the gregarious nature of man have raised gods as ideas grew more universal; sectarianism [on the other hand] has drawn false distinctions between identical gods for polemical purposes."

His key distinction was between priests and philosophers. It is certainly one of the jobs of a priest to build up the god he serves. It is likewise the job of a philosopher to see parallels and connections on a universe wide scale. Using the Kabbalistic Tree of Life it is possible to analyse these various themes. There have been other attempts to categorise the multiplicity of gods. One of the most recent is by Anthony Roberti (Callisto Radiant) who divides the gods and goddesses into:



Solar	Martial	Earthly	Paternal	Lunar	Beautiful	Stellar	Sapiential

This division is of course directly based on the planetary Sephiroth, as follows:



Tiphareth	Geburah	Malkuth	Chesed	Yesod	Netzach	Binah	Hod
Sun	Mars	Earth	Jupiter	Moon	Venus	Saturn	Mercury

I prefer to use the original Binah rather than Daath for Saturn.[34] Roberti then categorises these gods as either masculine or feminine, thereby opening up twice as many categories. Some Sephiroth, such as Netzach, still however have only one sex gods. He further divides the gods and goddesses up by quality, occupation, or reputation. At this point his theory runs into trouble, and some of the resulting categorisations demonstrate the difficulty of dealing with the gods, and the danger of using modern psychological theory to divide them up. It is important, but not sufficient, to just play with the archetypes. The real key is to understand the myths, and to know which aspect of the universe that a particular god most fully reveals if invoked.

[34] And I have silently corrected his website Hod-Netzach reversal, and preferred to use 'Paternal' to 'Parental' as a category.

Of all the tables, these are perhaps the most controversial, particularly in pantheons of which still little is known. For the gods of Greece and Rome there is much known, and much still practised.[35] Our knowledge of Celtic gods and goddesses is sadly sparse, and the Scandinavian gods have a level of real violence which is alien to many of us brought up in softer cultures. For Egypt there are masses of (predominantly funeral) texts, but their gods were never part of the mainstream European/Anglo-Saxon culture. For those of African descent, the gods of that continent might be much closer, either in their original guise or in the guise of the Voodoo loa. The African tables could have been much larger, but I have just picked out a few key gods and goddesses.

Finally you might ask why it is important to know the gods and their attributes. One of the early members of the Golden Dawn, J W Brodie-Innes, a lawyer, put it rather well when he said 'Whether the Gods...really exist is comparatively unimportant; the point is that the universe behaves as though they do.'

Middle Eastern Gods

Column P1-P4: Sumerian, Akkadian, Assyrian, Mesopotamian & Babylonian Gods

Most people have only a hazy notion of the history and mythology of the area between and around the Tigris and Euphrates rivers, modern day Iraq. To put it in a simplified form the ancient name of Mesopotamia (given by Alexander the Great and subsequently used by the Romans) encompasses Assyria in the north and Sumer in the marshy south of the region. Babylonia was named after Babylon and located as a city state near modern day Baghdad. The gods of this region with minor name changes have been shared by all those living in that region. The Mesopotamian pantheon is rather tangled because it stretches over such a long time period, and varies according to which part of 'the land between the rivers' was in the ascendancy at the time. About 50 of the 1000+ gods of this region were considered main gods, especially the seven planetary gods which are listed separately in Column P3.

The names listed against the Zodiac are in fact just the names of these constellations as rendered by Wallis Budge.

In Column P3-P4 there are a selection of Babylonian gods representing the planets, with their corresponding numbers. The numeric column is interesting as it indicates derivable numerical relationships between the gods and planets, for example Mars (8) + Mercury (12) = Sun (20). Other combinations and ratios suggest themselves. The sum total of all the planets is 99.[36]

[35] The Roman gods were not far away when the present author witnessed by moonlight a full dress invocation in one of the still standing temples of ancient Pompeii, which could have been a direct successor to the Mysteries once held there, and which had none of the self-consciousness of so many modern magical ceremonies.

Column P5: Persian Gods

The source of much of the Dualistic religion in the Middle East.

Column P6: Phoenician and Canaanite Gods

This Column is important, especially for those interested in the pagan roots of Judaism.

Column P7: Pre-Islamic Arabian Peninsular & Nabatean Gods

This Column is important, especially for those interested in the pagan roots of Islam.

Column P8: Syrian Gods

Egyptian Gods

Column P9: Egyptian Gods

As Egyptian gods evolved over a long period of time, and were sometimes merged with each other, their qualities and hence their attributions changed. For this reason, sometimes the same god will appear in several places in the Column.

Crowley placed Harpocrates, Amoun, and Nuith on the zero row. Amoun is so listed in his form as the 'Concealed One.' However as they are gods of this universe with shrines and devotees, they are here attributed to Kether.

Crowley added in relatively minor gods from the Book of the Law into his Egyptian tables, but I will be sticking to the main gods of the Egyptian pantheons and not including these. He also used what is now rather outdated spelling, such as Asar-un-Nefer as the perfected Osiris in Kether. Asar was just a Victorian spelling of Osiris and Nefertum was the god of the lotus. It was only in comparatively late times that Osiris was called Un-nefer.

In Egypt magic and religion were more closely entwined than in any other culture. Ritner (1993, 247) convincingly argues that Egyptian magic was the:

> "'technique' or 'mechanics' of Egyptian religion it was the 'cultic manipulation' of the dynamic, divine creative force 'by recitation, substance, and ritual'."

Mathers and his fellow Golden Dawn members like Florence Farr, and the scholar Wallis Budge had a particular fondness for the Egyptian gods precisely because of their overt magical connections.

The equivalences between Egyptian and Greek gods are very useful in placing the Egyptian gods correctly. This is not just modern speculation but was clearly made by the Greeks of the Ptolemaic period. Herodotus has clearly made the connections between Egyptian gods and Greek gods in a time when both sets of gods were still worshipped, so it is worth our while just looking at what he says. He identified Dionysus (Osiris - 6) and Demeter (Isis - 3) as the parents of Apollo (Horus - 5) and Artemis (Bast - 9). To quote him:[37] [36] See David Hulse, The Eastern Mysteries, Llewellyn, St Paul, 2004, p.11.

> "In Egyptian, Apollo is Horus, Demeter is Isis, and Artemis is Bubastis."

Column P10: Egyptian Gods as used ritually by the Golden Dawn

This table shows the practical temple use made of the Egyptian gods in the rituals of the Golden Dawn. The spelling of some of the gods in this column are in the form used by the Golden Dawn, and hence a little obsolete by modern Egyptological standards. However the spellings in this Column derive from Budge, and Coptic, and have been preserved so that they may more readily be identified in Golden Dawn rituals. The Underworld row contains Apophrassz, Szathan Toophon, and Bessz synthesised as Ommo-Szathan. These are non-standard Golden Dawn spellings used ceremonially for the 'Stations of the Evil One'.

Column P11: Egyptian Gods and the Bodily Attributes of the Perfected Man

These attributions are not hard and fast, and open to re-interpretation. I have not followed Crowley's placement of Nu (as the hair) on the zero row. Likewise Crowley's attribution of the Eye of Horus to the buttocks and anus is more in the nature of a scatological joke, and a sexual preference, rather than a serious attribution. The attributions of this column should be generally taken with a grain of salt, and are at best approximate.

Column P12: Egyptian Gods and their Attributes

These attributions include the appropriate amulet, animal, colour, function and symbols of the main gods. They are derived from David Rankine's very logically presented book on Egyptian magic.[38]

Gnostic

Column P13-P15: Gnostic Gods & Demiurges

Although many Gnostic accounts of creation and the intermediate gods tend to be fragmentary, the account given in the Nag Hammadi codex On the Origin of the World is fairly complete. This column represents an attempt to fit the theology from that source on to the 10 Sephiroth. The positions of Pistis, Sophia, Yaldabaoth (the Demiurge), and Adonaios are fairly certain, but the other sons of Yaldabaoth are not so certainly placed. Although Sophia = Wisdom = Chokmah, she has been placed in the order of her generation in Binah.

[37] Herodotus, Histories, 2:156.

[38] David Rankine, Heka, Avalonia, London, 2006.

Sabaoth is also identified with Jesus Christ, but partakes of some of his heavenly Father's qualities. He is described as riding a chariot called Cherubin (sic), attended by dragon-angels called Seraphin (sic). The same codex goes on to describe both the Greek Eros-Psyche myth and the Hebraic Adam-Eve Tree of Life story, showing that it has roots in both Hebraic and Greek cultures. Interestingly Eve is portrayed as promiscuously having children by all seven of Yaldabaoth's sons, as well as Adam.

The Gnostics were a bridge between Judaism and Hellenic culture, and the emerging mix of these two, Christianity, and so it is appropriate that this Column falls between Middle Eastern and European God tables.

European

Column P16: Greek Gods

Of all the Hellenic gods there are twelve who were recognised all over the Greek world, and these were the twelve Olympians, all parts of the family of Zeus. These are (according to Thucydides) Zeus, Hera, Poseidon, Demeter, Apollo, Artemis, Hephaestus, Athena, Ares, Aphrodite, Hermes and Dionysus. Because their histories are well known from the works of Homer and Hesiod, or later Apollodorus, it is relatively easy to place them on the Tree. Of course each god has various facets, each of which might serve to categorise him. For example Hades is obviously a god of the Underworld, but he was often referred to as the 'the other Zeus' or the 'chthonian Zeus' giving him a right to a position alongside Zeus.

Regarding the Greek god Aion and Iao, a Greek form of Jehovah:

> 'The highest god and creator of the world is called by many names. One of his names is Aion. When the vowels were rearranged, the name of the one Jewish God, Iao, was produced. While Aion, the great god that lived in Alexandria, was Greek, [he] was Iao himself to the many Jews in [Egypt]'.

Column P17-P18: The Main Greek Gods and their Numeration

Seven of the most important Greek gods listed in Greek with their numeration.

Column P19: Orphic Theology

This Column is extracted from Theologia Platonica by Marsilio Ficino, published around 1482.[39] Ficino was key in introducing Hermetic philosophy to Europe, and helping to launch the Renaissance. Orphic theology considers two categories of power in both souls and the celestial orbs, and I have separated them here into two Columns being those gods concerned with knowledge and those gods concerned with the vivifying power and governance of the Planetary orbs and their souls. This list is very useful in understanding many of the Renaissance Hermetic allusions.

Athanasius Kircher published a different order, shown on the following illustration:

Saturn - Polyhymnia
Jupiter - Euterpe
Mars - Erato
Sun - Melpomene
Venus - Terpsichore
Mercury - Calliope
Moon - Clio
Earth - Thalia

The Orphic Rhapsodies put Chronos in the place of origin of all. From Chronos is generated Aither (Ether) and Chaos, who together form an egg or shining cloud, from which springs Phanes, the winged bisexual and self-fertilizing god who is the ultimate creator of the cosmos, and who gives birth to the first generation of the gods. In the Orphic theology, Chronos, Aither and Chaos could be attributed to the Ain, Ain Soph and Ain Soph Aur of the Kabbalah. Alternatively, if we identify Kronos with Chronos, then it could hold its usual place at Binah, with Aither and Chaos falling in Daath and Phanes being attributed to Chesed, as Father of the gods.

Column P20: Greek Muse Governing Planetary Orb

The Greek Muses are part of the Ophic theology, and their lyrical associations are listed in this Column. This is how they have come down to us, as an important part of the study of the Liberal Arts in the Renaissance.

Column P21: Greek Muse - Type of Lyric

Surprisingly, amongst subjects like lyric poetry or dance are also to be found geometry and astronomy, as if they too needed a muse to inspire them.

The Nine Spheres descending from Heaven to Earth, each with its own representative of the Nine Muses from Thalia (Comedy - Earth) through the 7 Planets from Clio (Moon - Histories) to Polyhymnia (Saturn – sacred song) and Urania (Apollo enthroned) above the fixed stars. From Athanasius Kircher, Obeliscus Pamphilius, Rome, 1650.

Column P22: The Roman Gods.

The Roman gods were mainly derived from Greek gods and the indigenous and the highly developed Etruscan civilisation which existed in Italy before the rise of Rome.

The main group of twelve gods was called the Dii Consentes and includes Jupiter, Juno, Minerva, Vesta, Ceres, Diana, Venus, Mars, Mercurius, Neptunus, Volcanus, and Apollo. These are listed by the poet Ennius about the 3rd Century BC. Six were male and six were female, and their golden statues stood in the Forum.

The number 12 may have been taken from the Etruscans, who also worshipped a main pantheon of 12 gods. The Dii Consentes were not identified with Etruscan deities but rather with the Greek Olympian gods.

Roman household or family cult gods were called the Dii Familiaris. Of these, the Lar Familiaris (guardian spirit, or genius, of the family), the Lares Loci (guardian spirits of the place where the house is built), the Genius Paterfamilias (House-Father), the Dii Penates (gods of the storeroom), the Dii Manes (spirits of the ancestors) and other domestic deities were given offerings daily by the members of the family. The household cult is reflected in the state cult (which had a Lar Praestites and Penates Publici).

Other important Roman gods include Janus, Saturnus, Quirinus (adopted from the Sabines), Volturnus, Pales, Furrina, Flora, Carmenta, Pomona, Portunus, Fontanus. There is also a group of mysterious deities formed by native tutelary deities, river gods or deified heroes from Latium which are collectively called Dii Indigites (for example the hero Aeneas, Faunus, Sol Indiges, Jupiter Indiges, and Numicus). Other tutelary deities representing Rome and its river (like Roma, Tiberinus), native Latin deities (Bellus, Bellona, Liber, Libera), and abstract concept deities such as Fortuna (Fate), Concordia (Concord), Pax (Peace), Iustitia (Justice), were worshipped.

The Dii Inferi, or gods of the Underworld (or Infernus) held a special place, and include Dis/Orcus and Proserpina, who equated respectively to the Greek gods Hades/Plouton (Pluto) and Persephone.

Trade and conquest brought new cults to Rome, and these were democratically adopted and permitted to set up their temples in Rome. These foreign deities were called the Dii Novensiles, and include Bacchus/Dionysus, Sol Invictus, Elagabalus, Isis, Serapis, Cybele, Attis, Mithras and many others.

Column P23: Etruscan Gods

The religious practices of the Etruscans are to be found in the Etrusca Disciplina, which included the Libri Haruspicini, Fulgurales and Rituales. Divination seems to have been of overwhelming importance to the Etruscans. Their holy books were closely tied up to the practice of haruspices, inspecting the entails of sacrificial animals, especially the sheep's liver, for predictions. The parts of the liver corresponded with the abodes of the gods in the sky, and hence to the gods, and so summed up their pantheon. The Etruscan word for god is ais, and there were a large number of such aiser. Those with the most clearly defined functions are listed here.

Column P24 – P26: Celtic Gods

Most Celtic religion was passed on verbally and not recorded in writing. There are four main sources for Celtic religion: Romano-Celtic iconography, classical Roman descriptions, and recorded Irish and Welsh literature, the later having passed through the filter of monastic scriptoriums. Druids were virtually eliminated by the Romans in Britain and displaced by Christianity in Ireland. The [o]vates and bards however survived into the late Middle Ages in Ireland and Wales. They are the source of much of our knowledge about the Celtic gods.[39]

Even between these two areas there is not a lot of consistency. For example, the horse goddess Epona is roughly equivalent to the Welsh Rhiannon, the 'divine queen' or the Irish Macha.

Column P27: Slavic Gods

Column P28: Baltic Gods

These gods are from the area around Latvia and Lithuania and the Baltic Sea.

Column P29. Norse and Scandinavian Gods

Thor as god of lightning is attributed to Chesed Jupiter. Tiw as a warrior god fits (with Thor) on Geburah. The Valkyries belong with Mars on the battlefield, or in the Underworld, not with the Element Air, as Crowley suggests, just because they fly. Loki is the archetypal Mercurial trickster, but he also has some affinity with the Moon.

Asian Gods

Column P30: Hindu Gods

Crowley attributes AUM to his zero row, but this is not exactly a god. There is such a plethora of Hindu gods that this column could have been infinitely extended.

Column P31: Japanese Shinto Gods

The main Shinto gods are Izanagi (first god of earth who created the world) and Izanami (the first goddess of the earth). Other gods include Kagu-Zuchi

(the fire god), Amaterasu (the Sun goddess and ruler of heaven), and Tsuki-yomi (God of the moon).

As well as these Kami are local gods, often tied to a specific village. Tengu are rather simple minded but sometimes spiteful spirits inhabiting trees in mountainous areas. Oni are fierce, cruel and lecherous horned devils, often gigantic, and sometimes with three eyes, and Kappas are scaly vampiric river or pond spirits.

Column P32: Chinese Taoist Gods

This is only a small selection of the possible range of Taoist gods.

Column P33: Meditation Buddhas & Dakinis

Primarily the figures of Tantric Buddhism.

African & Voodoo Gods

These include African derived pantheons like the Voodoo pantheon with its admixture of Catholic saints and local spirits. The basic voodoo split is between Petra Loa which tend to be the older gentler gods of Africa, and the Rada Loa, rather more boisterous and recent.

ColumnP34: Dahomean Gods

Column P35: Yoruba Gods

Column P36: Santeria Gods

Column P37: Voodoo Rada & Petra Loa

A more detailed study would separate these two types of loa, one brought over from Africa, and the other generated in the Caribbean.

Column P38: Other African Gods

Because of the diversity of religion in Africa, just a small selection are included here.

Central American Gods

Column P39: Aztec Gods

Column P40: Inca Gods

Column P41: Mayan Gods

Table Q: Questing and Chivalry

Questing has long been associated with the occult, from the quest for the Grail in the Arthurian tradition through to modern day 'psychic questing' as championed by Graham Hancock. The very act of learning magic is a sort of quest.

Column Q1: The Knights of the Round Table

There are many books that have gone into creating the chivalric story of King Arthur and the Knights of the Round Table. In the simpler ones there are just 12 knights, plus Arthur, reflecting the story of the Last Supper. The Arthurian literature had its heyday in the 13th and 14th centuries, but has never lost its grip on the popular imagination since then. To place each knight on the Tree is a difficult job, especially as there were so many. Varying numbers of knights are included in different sources:

13 knights in the Didot-Perceval (c.1225)
50 knights in Robert De Boron's Merlin (c.1195)
60 knights in Jean D'Ouremeuse's Ly Myreur des Histors (c.1350)
130 knights in the English ballad, The Legend of King Arthur (16th century)
140 knights in Hartmann Von Aue's Erec and Iwein (late 12th century)
150 knights in the Vulgate Lancelot (c.1220)
250 knights in the Vulgate Merlin (c.1225)
1,600 knights in Layamon's Brut (late 12th century)

I have opted to just place the better known knights, and have used as my main source the best known image of the Round Table which hangs in Winchester Castle. This was previously thought to be a Victorian construction, but the wood has now been carbon dated to the 13th century. If the text is similarly old, then it is amongst the earliest sources. This version has 25 knights, which are perhaps the best known, so these have been used here as the basic list.

Column Q2: The Tinctures of Heraldry

This table is useful in determining the meaning of heraldic and even alchemic emblems. The planetary part is drawn from Sir John Ferne's The Glory of Generositie, 1586, and would have been the standard for heraldic symbolism during Dr John Dee's life and during the high point of alchemical engraving in the 17th century. Knowledge of heraldry, classical mythology and the symbolism of emblem books go a long way to elucidating much of the symbolism of Renaissance magic and alchemy.

Commentary

Table R. Rainbow Colour Scales of the Tree of Life

Colour is an important part of magical symbolism. These colour scales are an important part of magical practice and include everything from the simple colours of the 7 Planets to the complex colour scales devised by Moina Mathers for the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn.

Column R1-R4: The Four Colour Scales

These four scales are attributed to the Four Worlds of the Kabbalists as follows:

King Scale	Atziluth
Queen Scale	Briah
Empress Scale	Yetzirah
Emperor Scale	Assiah

In addition to the 10 Sephiroth and 22 Paths, Daath (which is sometimes incorrectly referred to as the '11th Sephirah') has the following colour attributes:

King Scale	Lavender
Queen Scale	Grey-white
Empress Scale	Pure violet
Emperor Scale	Grey flecked gold

Column R5: Mathers' Combined King & Queen Scale[40]

This is a nice compromise devised by Mathers and very suitable for practical work. The Sephirothic colours derive from the Queen scale, the Elemental colours from the Tattwas, and the Zodiacal colours from the rainbow spectrum.

Column R6-R8: Rainbow Colours of the Zodiac with Frequencies

This table is an attempt to update the magical colour scales in the light of what physics has discovered about colour in the last few centuries. The numerical frequencies are interesting, for the same reason that Aristotle was interested in frequencies, or the ratios between the lengths of different strings producing different notes. In both cases these numbers allow you to examine ratios between different notes or different colours.

Column R9-R11: Traditional Kabbalistic Colours

The correspondences shown in Column R9 come from Nineveh Shadrach & Francis Harrison's book,[41] Column R10 from Rabbi Azriel (1160-1238 CE) and Column R11 from the Kabbalistic scholar Dr. Jellinek, although the later is difficult to take seriously when he refers to a colour such as 'white-red-whitish red-reddish-white'.

Table S. Sacred Geometry

The ancient Greeks, in the person of Euclid (325-265 BC), formalised most of the geometry we know today, more than two thousand years ago. They considered the subject, because of the purity of its logic, to be sacred. But it is also such a practical subject that it forms the basis for many sciences and trades today. Sacred Geometry is geometry applied to the architecture of temples, the proportions of the human body, the nature of growth, the intervals of the musical scale, or the series of Fibonacci. It is a subject whose horizons have been expanded considerably in the last 50 years to include:

1 Noumenal – the geometry behind physical matter, the geometry used by the Great Architect of the Universe to create the universe.

2 Natural – the discovery that geometry lies behind the structure of the solar system, the pattern of sunflower seeds, the geometry used by a nautilus bivalve to build its shell, or the structure of a beehive.

3 Man made – the use of specific lengths and special ratios like phi in the building of the pyramids, megalithic stone circles, the Parthenon, the Gothic cathedrals of the Middle Ages, and the great buildings of the Renaissance.[42]

In order to pursue any of these branches of Sacred Geometry it is useful to know certain basic dimensions and ratios which are the subject of the following Columns.

Planetary Numbers

Column S1-S5: Planetary Data

Based on Pythagoras' theory of the universal application of numbers, Kepler discovered numeric relationships between the orbits and periods of the planets, hence these figures are listed here as one of the many applications of Sacred Geometry and arithmetic to the physical universe.

Platonic Solids

Column S6-S10: The Platonic Solids

The five Platonic solids were considered to be, along with the sphere, the only perfect 3-dimensional objects, and representative of the basic Elements that make up the universe. The numerology of the Platonic solids is therefore basic to understanding Greek philosophical and geometric thought.

You can relate all these figures together using the very useful formula:
Number of edges + 2 = Number of faces + Number of vertices.

Commentary

Column S11-S13: The Platonic Solids Formulae

These Columns give the formulae for calculating the surface areas and volumes of each of the Platonic solids.

Column S14: Figures, Numbers, Platonic Solids and Perfect Geometric Shapes

The standard Platonic Solids and regular geometric figures were an important Renaissance study, and part of the knowledge lectures of the Golden Dawn. Crowley places the Circle in row zero row. This is not appropriate as the circle has a definite boundary, but the Unmanifest does not. In the same column (49) he mixes geometry with geomancy. In an adjacent column (48) he mixes geometry with temple furniture like the menorah or seven-branched candlestick, and the Table of Shewbread. Let us just consider geometry by itself. For the most part the number of sides of the figure relates to the number of the Sephiroth or corresponding planet. There is a lot more that could be said about the relationship of geometry to magic and cosmology than is encapsulated in this Column.

Column S15: Points of the Hexagram and the Pentagram

These attributions are not really a part of sacred geometry, as they are more correctly ritual correspondences, but are listed here because of their geometric content. These are simply the attributions of the five Elements to the five points of the pentagram, and the seven planets to the six points of the hexagram, with the sun as the middle point. The hexagram attributions fit on the Tree of Life centred on the sun at Tiphareth, with the lowest vertex in Yesod, and the topmost vertex in Daath (symbolised by Saturn, which is 'borrowed' from Binah for that purpose).

These correspondences are necessary to determine the starting point for ritual inscription of either of these figures. Of course part of the Lesser Banishing Ritual of the Pentagram is the visualisation of the four traditional Archangels at the four quarters. According to the Golden Dawn, the directions are:

In front of me	Raphael
On the right hand	Michael
Behind me	Gabriel
On the left hand	Uriel

It is interesting in relation to the Lesser Banishing Ritual of the Pentagram to read the Ma'ase Merkaba[43] where it talks of the Shekinah:

> "the Princes of the four camps of the Shekinah are: Mikael, Gabriel, Uriel and Raphael, standing to the right, to the left, in front of, and behind the Throne of Glory respectively."

[43] British Library Additional MS 26922.

This order is exactly repeated in a number of other Kabbalistic texts.

In front of me	Uriel
On the right hand	Michael
Behind me	Raphael
On my left hand	Gabriel

David Rankine noted in his recent book[44] a traditional Jewish prayer said at night before retiring which echoes the same directions:

> "In the name of YHVH The God of Israel: At my right hand Michael. At my left Gabriel. Ahead of me Oriel [Uriel]. Behind me Raphael. Above my head the Shekinah of God!"

Mathers appears to have changed this traditional order simply to match the Enochian Elemental directions, which seems a bit unnecessary. It may be more consistent to use the order above when performing the Lesser Banishing Ritual of the Pentagram.

Metrology

Column S16: Sacred Geometry Conversion Factors

Metrology is the study of different systems of measurement, and how they relate to each other. Such studies are very important when measuring ancient structures, because if you can determine the units used then the main dimensions are likely to resolve themselves as (significant) whole numbers.

This Column shows the conversions between modern Metric and Imperial measures and Roman feet, Greek stadia, Egyptian cubits and Megalithic yards.

Table T. Tarot

The Tarot is a pack of playing cards that has been extant for about 600 years. For only 225 of those years has it been anything other than a game, and been associated with the occult. The pack of cards usually consists of 22 trump or illustrated cards, 16 court cards and 40 pip cards numbered 1 to 10 in 4 suits, a total of 78 cards. There have been variations, but this is the basic structure.

Since 1781 this card pack has been first associated with the 22 letters of the Hebrew alphabet, and then with the 22 Paths of the Tree of Life. Finally a little over 100 years ago, MacGregor Mathers wove a complete occult synthesis around the pack, and since then over a thousand books have been written about these associations. However if we go back before 1781 there is not a shred of occult mystery clinging to the cards. The cards would have simply been seen as obvious emblems (including social archetypes like Emperor and Pope) to those who played with them.

In this Table, I have listed the rich correspondences that were woven around the Tarot by Mathers. The first 28 Columns (T1-T28) show conventional 20th century Golden Dawn Tarot attributions. Incidentally, I have not adopted the swap later recommended by Crowley of the Emperor and the Star trumps (on the basis of a passage in his Book of the Law) but have preferred to retain the original Golden Dawn ordering which Crowley initially endorsed.

Columns T34 to T41 however demonstrate that the Tarot as we know it today is:

a) Made up of four broken Mediaeval emblem sets (Columns T34-T37).

b) Has its 7 Planetary Trumps misaligned with the Hebrew letters due to Mathers' ignoring the traditional Sepher Yetzirah ascriptions (Columns T38-T41).

Columns after T33 show material that is completely new, and show the real origin and attributions of the Tarot, for which both the Golden Dawn Strength-Justice swap and the Crowley Emperor-Star swap are both irrelevant.

Column T38-T41 shows how Mathers ignored the planetary correspondences clearly shown in the Sepher Yetzirah (in the earliest, and most of its variant versions) in preference to a scheme which was a later Greek-inspired revision of the original order. In Columns T38-T39 I have re-asserted the original Sepher Yetzirah Hebraic Planetary order.

Origins and Symbolism

But first we need to look at a little history. The oldest surviving reference to Tarot cards was a ban imposed upon them and on playing cards in general, in 1367. This ban and many later references simply objects to them because they encouraged gambling. In this period they were used predominantly for gambling, not for divination or philosophic speculation. The oldest surviving card fragments date from 1392 with packs made for the amusement of Charles VI of France. Later in 1450 more 'instructive' decks were created for the Italian Visconti and Sforza families. The current pack printed from the Visconti-Sforza cards is the oldest and probably the most authentic pack in current circulation.[45] These were soon followed by the conceptually very important Mantegna pack of 1465. It was however not until 1540 that Marcolino mentioned the Tarot as a divination system - before that it had been purely a game.

The Tarot has laboured for many years under a fake history which gave its purported origins as ancient Egypt. This supposed origin has been completely discredited, but was believed up until very recently. Even in the 20th century Crowley, who should have know better, called his book on the Tarot The Book of Thoth, although he well knew that the cards did not originate in Egypt, not even in spirit. There have even been modern 'reconstructed' packs whose aim is to re-Egyptianise the cards, a pointless exercise as they were never Egyptian in the first place. Anyone familiar with the iconography of ancient Egypt can easily see that there is no connection, except of course the basic human symbol-making faculty that is common to all mankind.

This false history was first proposed in 1781 by Court de Gebelin in his huge book Le Monde Primitif ('The Primitive World'). He was probably thinking of a few of the hieroglyph 'meanings' of Horapollo when he suggested that the Tarot dated back to ancient Egypt. Remember that, although French society in this period was all agog with interest in the ancient civilisation of the Nile valley, it was not till 40 years later, in 1822 that Champollion even began to understand how to actually translate hieroglyphics.[46] De Gebelin was in fact just guessing. Unfortunately his guesses were enthusiastically taken up and expanded by 'Etteilla' (whose real name was Alliette) later in that century.

In fact the Tarot cards are of purely Mediaeval, and predominantly of Christian origin, although that statement will no doubt upset a number of New Age writers. In the Middle Ages, because of the low level of general literacy, symbols were very important. For example all public house signs would be graphical signposted like the 'Elephant & Castle' or 'Rose & Crown', two popular English pub names. Anyone could give street directions to someone to find a particular place, even if they were illiterate and could not read street signs. Anyone who has travelled in a country where the Latin alphabet is not used on street signs will know the importance of these kind of directions. Not just pubs, but virtually every trade and business had an emblem. Of course pubs have retained these emblems, at least in the UK, whilst virtually every other business has moved on from emblems, to printed signs, in the present era of almost universal literacy.

[45] Two of the Trumps in this pack are speculative restorations - but they do no invalidate what follows.

[46] I am aware that a London researcher claims that hieroglyphs had been decoded hundreds of years earlier by an Arabic alchemist, Abu Bakr Ahmad Ibn Wahshiyah, but this is not directly relevant to the present discussion, as the French were not aware of that.

However whilst our ancestors were attuned to emblems, we are not. Emblems were a part of everyday life, and there was a proliferation of emblem books which helped artists identify and copy particular standard symbols. Anyone who has studied a range of emblem books will realise that in fact the Tarot is just an emblem book printed on separate cards.

If you look carefully at Mediaeval illuminated manuscripts, or old emblem books you will very soon realise that these emblems came in sets. There was a set of heraldic animals (lion, unicorn, etc) a set of symbolic plants (thistle, sunflower etc). There were sets of symbolic animals like the bee and the pelican (later taken up by the Rosicrucians). There were also sets of theological emblems used to teach Christianity and theology, and amongst these the most popular were the 7 virtues (originating with St. Gregory). This set included Temperance, Fortitude, Hope, and so on. For astronomy and astrology and indeed alchemy there were emblem sets for all the planets and the stars of the Zodiac, of which the Sun and the Moon were the most popular emblems. Amongst the emblems used to convey the concepts of Christianity were the Tower of Babel, Death, the Devil, and the Last Judgement. Then there were sets depicting the 'Estates of Man' (different strata of society) spanning the range from Pope, Emperor, Empress down to the vagabond or Fool. You might notice that in the last few sentences I have mentioned no less than half the Tarot Trumps.

These origins are clearly shown in columns T34-T37 where the four Emblem sets that contributed to the structure of the modern Tarot are shown. The emblems with Roman numbers are the present day Tarot Trumps, the ones without numbers, like 'Hope' are those emblems that were discarded. You can see at a glance that these sets have not been drawn upon equally, and that material from the same set is grouped together in the same part of the pack, helping to confirm their origin. In addition some of the missing members of these emblem sets which occur commonly, but which were not selected to form part of the current Tarot pack are also shown, without trump numbers, so you can see that indeed the Tarot is made up of parts of other whole sets.

About one third of the emblems that make up the pack are of direct Christian theological extraction, and in fact the most heavily represented set is the one which was used in the Middle Ages to teach basic Christian doctrine. Three trumps are emblems from the 7 Virtues, three are drawn from the emblems of Astrology, and at least three trumps are representatives of various social stratum. This leaves no cards that might be of pagan origin, or likely to have come from outside of Mediaeval Europe, and there are definitely no emblems from Egypt. Tarot iconography is a recognised sub-discipline in the Italian art history world, and despite the attention of many scholars, no image has been found which comes from outside European culture.

The Tarot is in fact just a specific selection of emblems taken from a number of Mediaeval emblem sets. This is further readily confirmed if one looks at some of the early Tarot packs, for example the Mantegna pack of 1465 which are listed in Columns T29-T33.[47]

In the 1465 Mantegna pack there are 5 individual complete sets each of 10 emblems taken from the following categories:

A - Astrological
B - Christian Virtues
C - Liberal Arts Curriculum
D - Greek Muses
E - Estates of Man (Strata of Society)

This shows the Mantegna pack uses 5 distinct emblem sets with 50 Trumps. What has come down to us with the modern Tarot is just 22 Trumps which are partial sets.

Let us look at the Mantegna pack and take just the third Set, the 7 Virtues of Pope Gregory. They are usually listed in this order:

1. Faith or belief in the 'right' things.
2. Hope or taking a positive future view.
3. Charity or concern for, and actively helping others.
4. Fortitude or strength in the face of adversity.
5. Justice or being fair and equitable in judgement.
6. Prudence or care of and moderation with money.
7. Temperance or moderation.

Reading down column T36 you can see that these virtues also follow in the same order in the pack. But wait a minute you say, what about Strength (Fortitude) and Justice? Of course these two trumps were swapped by Mathers to sensibly match up with their corresponding zodiacal signs. I have merely put them back to the pre-1890 order for the purpose of this demonstration of the origins of the trumps. Only subsets of each of the four emblem sets in Columns T34-T37 were taken by the creators of the modern [47] David Alan Hulse in his Western Mysteries utilises this pack to discuss A E Waite's designs for the suit of Pentacles, rather than using them as a real key to the structure of all the Tarot Trumps.

Tarot pack, as follows:

Estates of Man (Strata of Mediaeval Society)	- 8 cards
The 7 Planets and Zodiac	- 3 cards
The 7 Christian Virtues	- 3 cards
The Biblical Emblems	- 8 cards

If 8 cards had been fashioned from each emblem set, we would today have had a 32 Trump Tarot pack.

Further evidence of these different origin emblem sets can be seen if you examine the Cary-Yale/Modrone deck which has additional trumps, including the three missing theological virtues Faith, Hope, and Charity.

In the Visconti-Sforza pack (probably the earliest complete pack we have) you can see distinct similarities between the artistic style of Trumps drawn from the same emblem set. For example the designs of all the Trump cards are based on grass, except four. These four are seated on a low platform. These happen to be the most important cards from the Estates of Man emblems, and form two matching pairs.

I imagine that the revelation of the multi-emblem set origin of the Tarot (and the Christian origins of at least one of these sets) may disquiet many people who have got used to seeing the Tarot as a complete, ancient, and perfect unity. The Tarot is indeed a sublime set of symbols which appeal to us at a very visceral level, but we should not let that blind us to their true origin. The reason they appeal to us is that they are made up from existing and deeply rooted archetypal emblem sets that, although not used any longer, form a part of the cultural inheritance of Europe, and are so still very important, both magically and psychologically. As such the Tarot emblems are still very valuable as divinatory and meditative images.

It would be most enlightening to have a pack (closer to the Mantegna set) which contains full runs of each of the major emblem sets, so that a completer range of archetypes were represented. However, you say, that would ruin the one to one correspondence of the Trumps with Hebrew letters. That is not a problem, as there never was such a correspondence till 1781, and the cards' attribution to the Tree of Life is even more recent than that.

The Tarot and the Tree

You can see that the symbols of the Tarot do not form such an ancient centre piece of esoteric though as they were previously painted. Their attribution to the Paths of the Tree of Life is an even more recent affair. For example, it is only in an essay by Comte De Mellet (included in de Gebelin's book in 1781), that the happy coincidence of their numerical correspondence to the 22 letters of the Hebrew alphabet was mentioned in print. Nobody took much notice of that till 1856 when Eliphas Levi stated it more romantically. Before that date, the Tarot was not generally thought of as a part of the Kabbalah in even its Christian guise. It is only after Levi's identification that the Tarot trumps came to be placed on the Tree of Life. I have treated them in Columns T1 to T28 using the same Golden Dawn categorisation by Path, because the Tree of Life is capable of categorising anything, but not because they were originally intrinsically part of that Tree.

That Levi was a bit of a romantic is obvious to anyone who has read his books: they certainly fired my imagination when I first read them at the age of thirteen. Building on de Gebelin, he was the first writer to popularise this connection that we now all take for granted. As well as romanticising magic, it is universally acknowledged that Levi deliberately introduced various 'blinds' into his writings, or in other words, deliberate mistakes designed to trap the unworthy.

Mathers was aware of Levi's tendency, so he 'rectified' Levi's attributions when he incorporated them into the Golden Dawn knowledge lectures. Mathers modified Levi's deliberately blinded scheme, moving the zero trump the Fool from the second last position to the first position in the scheme, plus making several other eminently sensible changes. Mathers swapped the cards Strength and Justice on the very reasonable grounds that Justice should be associated with Libra, and Strength with Leo (the card shows a lion).

In 1887 Mathers drew together the various strands which created the Tarot in the form it is recognised today and set them out in Book T, of which the present Table T is a tabular summary. Every later commentator including A E Waite, Aleister Crowley, Israel Regardie, Paul Case, Stuart Kaplan, even P D Ouspensky and Salvador Dali, all rely upon Mathers' synthesis.

I would like to examine this synthesis. Mathers made the bridge between the Tarot and the Kabbalah by uniting two sets of correspondences:

a. the connection between the Hebrew letters of the Paths of the Tree and their astrological attributions, all of which can be found clearly laid out in the Sepher Yetzirah. Mathers and Westcott based a lot of the Kabbalah of the Golden Dawn on just this text, and Westcott even edited one of the first English editions.

b. the connection between the Hebrew letters and the Tarot trumps, which, as we have seen, is a fairly recent and romantic notion promoted by Levi.

The history of Mathers' integration of these two things, the attribution of the Zodiac, Planets, and Elements to the Paths, and the attribution and rectification of the Tarot attribution to the Paths has been excellently told by David Hulse.[48]

What Hulse does not quite make clear, although he is undoubtedly aware of it, is that to make if all fit, Mathers not only changed two of the attributions of the Tarot to the Astrological signs, but he also changed the attributions of the 7 Planets to seven of the Hebrew letters which he found in the Sepher Yetzirah. This later change is silent, and much less excusable.

The first use of the word Sephirah (plural Sephiroth) is in the Sepher Yetzirah, which dates from around the 3rd century AD. Obviously if this is the first mention of the Sephiroth it must also be the first mention of the Paths between them and their attributions to the 22 Hebrew letters, the Planets, Elements and the Zodiac. Therefore the Sepher Yetzirah must be considered the earliest and therefore probably the most definitive text on these attributions, as it is the first text to speak about them.

On the face of it, it should have been sufficient for Mathers to adjust the (speculative) attributions of the Tarot, whilst leaving untouched the ancient and very clear Hebrew attributions of the Sepher Yetzirah. In fact he changed the Hebrew letter and Path positions of the Planets to match the Tarot, rather than the other way around.

Because of this anomaly I have decided to add a set of Columns (T38-T41) which shows the differences between the traditional Kabbalistic and Mathers' attributions, which only applies to the 7 Planetary lines.[49] I have therefore reproduced the Tarot-Path correspondences from the Order papers of the Luculentus Astrum as Column T39, because they have preserved the Sepher Yetzirah Planetary correspondences intact. This is contrasted with Mathers' Tarot trump attributions to the Hebrew letters, and hence the Paths on the Tree.

Having said this, all Columns up to and including T28 follow Mathers' Golden Dawn attributions.

Major Arcana: Trumps

Column T1: Names and Numbers of the Tarot Trumps.

The Tarot Trumps showing the traditional Golden Dawn numbering.

Column T2. Names of the Tarot Minor Arcana.

The Minor Arcana attributes the pip cards to the 10 Sephiroth. The 4 suits, Staves, Swords, Cups, and Coins are attributed to the 4 Elements. In old packs the fourth suit is clearly made of gold coins with recognisable stampings on them. In Victorian times the fourth suit was referred to as Disks or Pentacles [49] If you wish to go in more detail into the question of Planet to Hebrew letter attribution in the Sepher Yetzirah, then consult Columns K114-K119.

(in an effort to make the pack look more magical). The first suit, even in Waite's pack, is very obviously a walking stave, but it was transmuted to 'Wands'. The four suits were originally the four things that any mediaeval traveller would have taken with him, a walking stave, a sword for protection, his own cup to drink from, and coins to pay for food and lodging. This does not invalidate the more magical interpretation, but it explains why I have used the term 'Coins' instead of 'Pentacles' or the meaningless 'Disks' in the Tables.

Note that the ascriptions of Wands to Fire and Swords to Air have been left as per the Golden Dawn attributions. Those who wish should reverse them back to their original grimoire associations:

Wands, cut at one stroke from a living tree at the stirring of the first breeze of dawn = Air.

Swords, forged in the heat of Vulcan's furnace, and used to threaten recalcitrant spirits with burning in hell = Fire.

Column T3: Titles of the Tarot Trumps

These are the titles used by the Golden Dawn.

Column T4: The Design of the Tarot Trumps

This Column follows the Golden Dawn designs of the Tarot cards, but does not take into account the design innovations made by Crowley and Lady Frieda Harris in the 'Thoth Pack'.

In the last Trump, The world, despite the fact that the central figure is a woman, Crowley strangely suggests that the scarf hides male genitals, and is shaped like the Hebrew letter Kaph. There is no question of the figure being hermaphrodite.

Minor Arcana: Court Cards

Column T5-T8: Titles of the Tarot Court Cards

Golden Dawn titles for the 16 Court Cards. There is some controversy about the personages of the four sets of court cards. The Golden Dawn usage was:

Fire	King
Air	Prince
Water	Queen
Earth	Princes

Other commentators introduced Knights and Pages, and even female Knights and Pages in the older packs. The ascription to the Elements is 19th century.

Column T9-T12: Titles and Attributions of Pip Cards

The titles or divinatory meaning of the 10 numbered or 'pip' cards for each suit (including the 4 Aces).

Commentary

Astrological Dominion

Column T13-T20: Astrological Attributions of Minor Arcana

The Astrological attributions are from MacGregor Mathers' inventive projection of the cards onto the heavens in his Concourse of the Forces.

Tarot Angels

Column T21-T28: Pairs of Angels Ruling Court Cards

The pairs of angels ruling each of the 36 pipped cards, being cards 2-10 in each of the four suits.

Tarot as Emblem Sets

Column T29-T33: Tarot of Mantegna

The complete 50 Trumps from the Mantegna Tarot, demonstrating what a pack with 5 complete sets of emblems looks like. This is in contrast to the modern Tarot trumps which are made up of partial or broken emblem sets. Let us look at just one of these sets in detail.

Column T29: Tarot of Mantegna – Astrology series

This shows the traditional 10 Sphere of the cosmos according to the Ptolemaic view. Lines 3 to 9 contain the 7 Planets in traditional order. The Prime Cause or God is ascribed to Kether. Between this and Saturn are squeezed in the eighth (Octava Spera) and ninth spheres.

Column T30: Tarot of Mantegna – Virtues series

The Virtues are a set of seven, so to make up the series of ten the artist (who incidentally probably was not Mantegna) creatively added in three 'Spirits': The Spirits of Cosmology, Chronology and Astronomy.

Column T31: Tarot of Mantegna – Liberal Arts series

The Liberal Arts were divided into the Trivium ('the three roads') and the Quadrivium ('the four roads').

The Trivium consisted of verbal and thinking skills:

- Grammar
- Rhetoric
- Logic

The Quadrivium consisted of mathematical skills:

- Arithmetic -- Number in itself
- Geometry -- Number in space
- Music, Harmonics, or Harmonic Theory -- Number in tune
- Astronomy or Cosmology -- Number in space and time

Although this looks from our perspective to be a bit dry and just a small subset of a possible curriculum, in fact it is in some ways rather better balanced than any modern university course. In the Trivium, the student is taught to write properly and compose correct sentences (Grammar), to think logically, develop an argument, and test each statement (Logic) and then to speak clearly, and deliver his thoughts in a persuasive manner (Rhetoric). Knowing the ins and outs of the latest version of Windows, or the short-lived theories of yet another economist, is no substitute for being able to think and express yourself logically.

The mediaeval Quadrivium followed the division of mathematics made by the Pythagoreans. Recently, mathematics has been defined as 'the study of patterns in space and time,' which very much resembles the ancient Pythagorean understanding of mathematics. The study of geometry is the study of the patterns behind everything, and something which has engaged the finest minds for thousands of years. In fact, with the exception of the Bible, versions of Euclid's Elements of Geometry has sold more copies than any other book up until the late twentieth century, when it was eclipsed by Tolkein, J K Rowling and other best sellers. Music is no longer considered a science, now that the physics of the spectrum of frequencies has replaced simple musical ratios. Astronomy remains in the curriculum.

Philosophy was often envisioned as a meta-study that united all branches of knowledge, nourishing the Seven Liberal Arts.

Column T32: Tarot of Mantegna – Nine Greek Muses series

The nine Muses, with the god Apollo at their head. See also P20-P21 and Figure 15.

Column T33: Tarot of Mantegna –Estates of Man series

This Column shows the strata of society as it was in the Late Middle Ages, with the Pope at the top, above the (Holy Roman) Emperor who ruled the Kings of smaller countries who in turn had Dukes or Doges ruling provinces or cities (like Milan or Venice). Below that is the gentleman, the merchant, and at the bottom the servants and beggars or fools.

Column T34-T37: Standard Tarot Analysed into its Separate Symbol series

Here the 22 modern Tarot Trumps are analysed into 4 of their emblem sets, with some of the missing emblems shown. The fact that cards drawn from the same set are mostly sequentially grouped together is further support for this.

Tarot and Sepher Yetzirah

Column T38-T41: Planetary Attributions and Tarot Trumps

Column T38-T39 shows the original planetary attributions of the Sepher Yetzirah, and the Tarot if it followed these. Column T40-T41 shows Mathers' attributions.

Table U. Uniform Timeline of Magicians, Kabbalists, Astrologers, Alchemists & Masters

These Tables list some of the most historically important practicing Magicians, Kabbalists, Astrologers & Alchemists. The list does not include some of the figures who often feature in popular histories of magic such as Comte de St Germain, Cagliostro (who were both pseudo-aristocratic adventurers) or Giles de Retz (a titled sadistic serial killer, duped by a priest) who were peripheral to the actual development and practice of magic. More attention has been given to scholar-magicians who actually experimented with magic and who passed on the working tradition. Living persons are deliberately excluded to avoid any controversy. There is some slight overlap between lists.

Column U1: Magicians

This list of magicians and sorcerers also includes philosophers like Pythagoras who at one time or another were rumoured to have exercised magical powers.

Column U2: Kabbalists

Jewish Kabbalists have been separated from their Christian colleagues who developed the Kabbalah in a rather different direction.

Column U3: Astrologers

Many of these were Arab astrologers, but when their work was translated into Latin, their names were also simplified, so both the Latin name and their actual name are shown.

Column U4: Alchemists

Column U5-U6: Masters of the Knights Templar

Accused of heresy and blasphemy, the immensely rich Knights Templar may in some sense been the predecessors of the Freemasons. They were certainly obsessed with the architecture of King Solomon's Temple (on the ruins of which they built their headquarters in Jerusalem) Significantly their fifth Master, André de Montbard was the uncle of St. Bernard of Clairvaux, who preached in favour of the Crusades, and drew up the Templar rules.

Column U7-U8: Alleged Masters of the Prieure de Sion

This column lists the Masters of the Prieure de Sion according to the 'Dossiers Secrets' probably drawn up by Henri Lobineau, promoted by Pierre Plantard, and recorded by Michael Baigent.[50] The suspicious inclusion of well known figures, like Newton and da Vinci leaves this list open to considerable doubt.

Table V. Vedic and Hindu Meditation and Magic

Tattwas

Column V1-V2: Hindu Tattwas

The Tattwas are a basic part of Hindu philosophy but they were appropriated by Western occultism over a century ago. They date back to Kapila's Sankhya system which divided the universe into the five basic Elements, the Tattwas, each with its distinctive shape and colour. The Tattwas became closely linked to yoga pranayama techniques and the system of the seven subtle body Chakras (see Columns V7-V12). Tibetan Buddhism also imported the Tattwas from India. In the late 19th century H P Blavatsky utilised esoteric Tibetan Buddhism and chakra symbolism in the structure of her Theosophical Society. MacGregor Mathers discovered the Tattwas in Rama Prasad's Nature's Finer Forces, and incorporated them into the skrying practices of the Golden Dawn, from which source they have become part of the western occult tradition.

Column V3: Hindu Tattwas - Flashing colours

These are the complementary colours to be used as background or 'charge' colours with the Tattwa symbols.

Column V4-V6: Hindu Tattwas – Sense, Sounds & Observances

These are the associations of the Tattwas, and can be used as meditational checks if a Tattwa meditation is going particularly well.

Chakras

Column V7-V17: Hindu Chakras

Chakra literally means 'wheel' but refers to the 7 whirling centres of etheric energy in the body which are affected by various yoga and Tantric practices. They have little to do with what is now commonly purveyed as New Age chakras.

Practices

Column V18: Hindu Meditation & Yoga Results

This list is not exhaustive. The results are appropriate to correlate with the Sephiroth, their Planets and the four Elements, but not with the Zodiacal signs.

Column V19-20: The Ten Traditional Yamas

In a related usage, a yama is a 'restraint' or rule for living virtuously. Ten yamas are codified in numerous scriptures, including the Varaha Upanishads, the Hatha Yoga Pradipika by Gorakshanatha, and the Tirumantiram of Tirumular. Patanjali lists five yamas in the Yoga Sutras of Patanjali.

Table W. Wheel of the Year, Seasons, Months and Hours

Timing is very important for the performance of both religious and magical rituals, so as to take advantage of the predominant seasonal or astrological influences. Consequently calculations particularly of the hour, but also of the lunar month have become important in the timing of magical rituals. Obviously it goes without saying that each of the seven days of the week are associated with one of the seven planets.

Seasonal Quarters

Column W1-W2: Seasonal Quarters of the Year

The four great northern European pagan festivals, which are now marked and honoured by modern witchcraft. Column W2 gives the Christian names for these festivals which were subsumed into the calendar of the church.

Column W3: Astronomic Quarters of the Year

The dates fluctuate each year, and may fall on the 20th, 21st or 22nd of their respective month.

Hours

Column W4: Genii of the Twelve Hours from the Nuctemeron

This list is supplied by Eliphas Levi as a translation from the Nuctemeron, said to have been written by Apollonius of Tyana. It is unlikely to have been written by Apollonius and is included here simply for the sake of completeness.

One interesting item however is the first Genii of Aries, Papus, which was the pen-name adopted by Dr Gerald Encausse when writing about the Tarot and similar subjects.

Column W5: Table of Planetary Hours

Sunset marks the start of the 12 night hours, and sunrise marks the start of the 12 day hours. This means that night hours may be longer or shorter than day hours, depending on the season. Magical hours are of elastic length, and depend upon sunset and sunrise times. If you want to be very precise about them, you can check the official time in your local newspaper, or you can check sunset yourself by using the test 'as soon as three stars become visible'.

The determination of Planetary hours is most important for any magical operation. The length of daylight hours is determined by dividing the time between dawn and sunset into 12 equal parts. Likewise the Hours of the Night are derived by dividing the time from sunset to sunrise into 12 equal parts. Obviously as the seasons change so will the length of these hours, so that in winter the Hours of the Night are longer and in summer the Hours of the Day are longer. Only on two nights of the year will all the hours be of equal length and 60 minutes in duration, and this is at the time of the Equinox (which literally means 'equal night'). So bear in mind that the column 'Uneven Hours' means precisely that. The next column which commences at 6.00 AM is there just by way of example and will only be true twice a year.

The fact that these hour calculations are precisely the same as Jewish practice (and presumably before that Babylonian practice) indicates the source of a lot of Mediaeval magic.

Months

Column W6-W8: Months of the Jewish Calendar

The current definition of the Jewish calendar is generally said to have been set down by the Sanhedrin president Hillel II in approximately 359 AD. The original details of his calendar are, however, uncertain. The Jewish calendar is both solar and lunar based. The beginning of the year, or Rosh HaShanah, falls on the new Moon of 1st Tishri, which will vary from year to year but is approximately mid September. This day is a celebration of the creation of the world and marks the start of a new calendar year. The dates in Column W8 are only approximate.

Hebrew months, which are lunar based, appear in Mediaeval grimoires alongside the names of angels of the month.

Years are counted since the creation of the world, which is assumed to have taken place in 3761 BC. In that year, Anno Mundi (AM = Anno Mundi = year of the world) numbering commenced. Therefore the year 2006 will be the Jewish year AM 5767.

Column W9-W11: Months of the Egyptian Calendar

All months were exactly 30 days long. The 5 epagomenal days left over at the end of the year were dedicated to the 5 gods: Osiris, Horus, Set, Isis and Nephthys and were declared holidays. Thus the Egyptian calendar is perhaps the simplest and most straightforward that man has devised, but it fell backwards by a day every four years. The year began at the heliacal rising of the star Sothis, and this has been taken in this table for convenience as 20th July. The heliacal rising coincided with the Nile floods and the beginning of the Egyptian agricultural year.

Column W12: Months of the Ancient Greek Lunar Civil Calendar

Ancient Greek calendars are particularly complex. They are lunar and hence can have 12 months to the year but with a 13th inserted on some years. But, the various city states of ancient Greece did not agree when this event should occur, or even which was the first month of the year. Even odd days were inserted when convenient for religious or political ends. Consequently I have just contented myself with listing their names, rather than attempting to precisely correlate their dates with the zodiac, which is an impossible task as it varied year to year and state to state, so ignore the left two columns. The principle use of this table is to be able to recognise ancient Greek month names in Greek texts. The first month of the year is indicated by '(1)'.

Column W13: Months of the Ancient Babylonian Calendar

The Babylonian year begins with the new Moon of Spring, and the year contains either 12 or sometimes 13 lunar months. The first column is the simple Sumerian ideogram, while the second column is the actual month name. If you look at the first month Nisannu you can see that it is the obvious source of the first Hebraic month of Nisan, which in turn appears in Mediaeval grimoires.

Column W14: The min-Seasons of the Chinese Solar Calendar

The beginnings of the Chinese calendar can be traced back to the 14th century BC. Legend has it that the Emperor Huang Ti invented the calendar in 2637 BC.

The Chinese calendar is based on exact astronomical observations of the sun and the phases of the moon. Chinese years are also denoted in terms of Emperor reign years, and measured in terms of the 60 Sexagenary characters, which cycle round every 60 years. These are made up of combinations of the 10 Heavenly Stems and the 12 Earthly Branches, which are listed in Table F.

There are two calendars:

a. The Solar Calendar, also called the farmers', agricultural calendar or Hsiu calendar. This is based on the cycles of the seasons, and in some ways is more accurate than the western Gregorian calendar. This has 24 ch'i/chieh periods or mini seasons. These are tabulated here (beginning with Li Ch'un). The dates barely change from year to year, and then only by a day or so (a fluctuation caused by the Western device of leap year rather than any inherent errors in the Hsia calendar). This is the calendar used for feng shui calculations.

b. The lunar calendar which determines most religious festivals, and can have either 12 or 13 months, and is why the Chinese lunar New Year celebration moves each year between January and February. This calendar is usually what people are referring to when they give the year an animal name. For the dates of the next 15 lunar years see Column F54.

Table X: X-Reference to Isopsephy

Isopsephy is the Greek equivalent of Hebrew Gematria, the addition of the numerical values of the constituent letters of a word to give a total which then in a way represents the essence of this word. It has been claimed that Greek isopsephy predates the Hebrew practice. It is certainly true that many mystical Greek and Gnostic words have actually been devised with an eye to their numerical value, and as we have seen with the Mithraic mysteries and with the Olympic spirits there is often a patterning of the numbers which does not occur nearly so frequently in Hebrew Gematria. In fact deliberate isopsephy is much more common than deliberate Gematria. It is true to say that often single Gematria equivalences are false or coincidental, but where a set of words have the same multiplier or differences then we are on much firmer grounds.

Column X1: Greek Isopsephy

This table contains a selection of only the more important Greek isopsephy equivalences. It is very useful to examine the isopsephy of the major Greek gods. Apart from these, a number of Gnostic words of power have been included here. Also abstract nouns like 'love' and 'will' are quite instructive in the light of isopsephy. For example, it is very revealing that although the last two words both add to 93, Aleister Crowley chose to base his theology on 'Will' rather than 'Love'. As further confirmation of the connection between these two words, their alternative Greek spelling also adds to the same number, 551.

For this section I am indebted to Kieren Barry's brilliant book on The Greek Qabalah which goes a long way towards adjusting the cultural balance and showing that we have to thank the Greeks as much as the Hebrews for the subtle and sometimes magical links between numbers and words.

Table Y. Yi Jing or I Ching

The I Ching is one of the oldest and most respected of the Chinese classics. It is considered both as a work of philosophy and as a stand alone divination system. It is in the later capacity that it has been seconded to Western occultism, where it stands alongside astrology, geomancy and the Tarot as one of the four main systems of divination currently practiced in the West. The 1960s saw a rapid increase in its use and appreciation in the West. Divination usually proceeds by casting three coins six times and using these casts to determine if each of the six lines of the hexagram is either yin or yang. The resulting hexagram (and any hexagram that it may transmute into) is then looked up in the I Ching, and the text there found applied oracularly to the situation being enquired about. It is only now that some of the more advanced systems of divination, based on numerical and trigram analysis are making themselves felt in the West as well.

The arrangements of the constituent trigrams on the Tree of Life are shown in Columns F1-F3. Those arrangements are completely new, and arranged in accordance with the Chinese view of the trigrams, rather than an attempt to force these symbols into an arbitrary Western mould which ignores their real meaning.

Column Y1: The 64 Hexagrams

The trigrams are then combined in pairs to form hexagrams. The resultant hexagrams (grouped by their generating trigrams) are then shown in Column Y1. The sequence used follows their arrangement on any traditional San Yuan feng shui lo p'an, and in classic Chinese editions of the I Ching.

Column Y2: King Wen's Sequence of the Hexagrams.

This revealing layout has been suggested by Denis Mair's work, and relies upon each pair of hexagrams being the reverse of its partner.

Table Z. Zones of Body, Mind and Spirit

This Table looks at how the mind, body and spirit of man have been analysed from time immemorial, from the many division of the soul of the Egyptians and Chinese through to the comparatively simple divisions of modern psychology. Esoteric anatomy runs the gamut from the purely symbolical astrological equivalents of the body, to the semi-physical etheric parts of the body as described by the Hindu chakras (see Columns V8-V12) and Chinese acupuncture meridians (Columns Z5-Z9).

Parts of the Body

Column Z1: The Human Body

The attributions for rows 1-10 are derived from Agrippa.[51]

Column Z2: The Members of the Terrestrial Man

These attributions are according to Basnage's tables of 'Rabbinical Significations of the Sephiroth', which in some ways are more logical than Agrippa's more well known attributions.

Column Z3: Sepher Yetzirah Body Attributions

These are not as critical as the astrological identification of the Hebrew letters, but nevertheless important in their own right.

Column Z4: Typical Diseases

This list predominantly follows astrological considerations.

Column Z5-Z9: Chinese Acupuncture Meridians

The main groupings of six Yin and six Yang meridians are attributed to the Moon and Sun respectively. The rest are jing meridians attributed on the basis of equating the 12 Chinese Earthly Branches with the 12 Western Zodiacal signs. The connection with the Earthly Branches is fully justified, but their association with the 12 Zodiacal signs is just a convenience, so do not try to extrapolate these correspondences any further than that.

Parts of the Soul

Column Z10-Z12: Kabbalistic Parts of the Soul

Crowley allocates the 'Parts of the Soul' to the 5 Elemental Paths as well as the Sephiroth. The correct place for these however is just on the 10 Sephiroth, as shown in this column.

---

[51] Agrippa, Three Books of Occult Philosophy, Llewellyn, St Paul, 1993, pages 288-9.

Commentary

Column Z13-Z16: Egyptian Parts of the Soul

There is no universal agreement on the attribution of the Egyptian parts of the soul, except that they are numerous, so four possible attributions have been listed. The last Column is my own attribution.

Column Z17-Z20: Hindu Parts of the Soul

The Theosophical Planes are grouped with Hindu categories as that is where they were ultimately derived from.

Column Z21-Z22: The Five Hindu Khandas

Sometimes these are referred to as Skandas.

Column Z23-Z25: The Senses, Body and Bodily Functions

These are a bit speculative, and are predominantly based on astrological considerations.

Biography

This section is a quick look at the biographies of the writers whose works have contributed most to these tables. In every case there is a direct connection between each one and the next name of this list, as the magical tradition has clearly passed from one hand to another down the centuries.

Honorius of Thebes (fl. 1225)
Author of Liber Sacer, the 'Holy Book', also know as Liber Juratus or The Sworn Book, the most influential grimoire of the early 13th century.

Peter de Abano (1250-1317)
Peter de Abano was one of the most important scholars of his day. His Heptameron was also one of the most influential grimoires, and his correlation of angels and days of the week prevails to this day.

Johannes Trithemius (1462-1516)
Trithemius was an Abbott and key exponent of both cryptography and angel magic. He obviously had a keen sense of humour, for in his most famous work, the Steganographia, he hid one dangerous subject (cryptography) under the guise of yet another dangerous subject (magic). He used De Abano's work, and was a teacher and mentor to both Agrippa and Paracelsus.

Henry Cornelius Agrippa (1486-1535)
Agrippa's Three Books of Occult Philosophy published in 1533 was the standard work of the period on magic, upon which John Dee and later commentators, right up to the present day, drew heavily.

Dr John Dee (1527-1608)
Key scholar-magician, and centre of many of the intellectual movements of his day, from introducing the geometry of Euclid to the English speaking world in a practical format, to devising the navigational methods and charts which underpinned Elizabethan England's exploration and colonisation of much of the world. He is also credited, with good reason, with being a precursor of the Rosicrucian movement. His main sources were grimoires such as the Heptameron and Liber Sacer, and Agrippa.

Tycho Brahe (1541-1601)
This famous astrologer and astronomer was a key figure whose precise observations of the planets enabled Kepler to construct his famous laws of circumsolar planetary motion. Both also cast horoscopes. Brahe was in touch with John Dee, and in 1590 Brahe[52] wrote that he was sending his latest book to the 'most noble and illustrious John Dee' for his opinion. Brahe is credited with devising the format of the Magical Calendar, the archetypal single page tabular summary of magical knowledge published in 1620, although its actual author is listed as Johan Baptista Großschedel. It is interesting that Brahe whose standards of factual observation were so high, felt that tables of magical correspondences were also worthy of his serious attention.

---

[52] In a letter to Sir Thomas Savile edited by J O Halliwell and published in 1841.

Dr Thomas Rudd (1583-1665)
Rudd was a key angel magician of the 17th century who met Dee, and was responsible for developing his angel magic. His work is in the course of being published by the Golden Hoard Press.

Christian Knorr von Rosenroth (1636 - 1689)
During his lifetime von Rosenroth was reputed to be the most profound Christian scholar of the Kabbalah, and was in touch with Leibniz, Henry More and Van Helmont. Von Rosenroth's Kabbalah Denudata, or the 'Kabbalah Revealed' which was published in Latin in 1677-84, was the most significant non-Hebrew source of Kabbalistic knowledge up to the end of the 19th century, and the source of much Golden Dawn Kabbalah. It contained a number of Kabbalistic classics by various authors, like Luria, Vital, Gikatilla, and Cordevero's Pardes Rimmonim, and was not just a partial translation of the Zohar, as many people seem to think. It even contained works like Aesch Mezareph (or Esh ha-Mezareph), which was translated into English by Westcott, and of which the Hebrew text was subsequently lost.

Helena Petrovna Blavatsky (1831-1891)
Blavatsky co-founded the Theosophical Society in 1875. As a result of this plus her monumental works, The Secret Doctrine and Isis Unveiled, she introduced a lot of Eastern esoteric and philosophical thought into the West, and was probably responsible for the concept of secret Masters that so fascinated Mathers, and for Crowley's enthusiasm for all things Eastern. Indirectly she is responsible for the Vedic and Buddhist Columns in this book.

S L MacGregor Mathers (1854 - 1918)
Mathers was the primary scholar-magician behind the creation of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn. He translated parts of the second volume of von Rosenroth's Kabbalah Denudata and published it as the Kabbalah Unveiled. This formed the basis of most Golden Dawn speculations upon the Kabbalah.

His work also included the transcription and translation of various key grimoires, such as the Key of Solomon, Goetia (part I of the Lemegeton)[53], Almadel, and the Sacred Magic of Abramelin the Mage. Many of the angels and demons in this volume are drawn from these books.

Mathers also wrote and brought together the knowledge lectures of the Golden Dawn, which were later embellished and published by Aleister Crowley as Liber 777.

Aleister Crowley (1875-1947)
He was responsible for editing and putting into print a lot of MacGregor Mathers' work including the rituals of the Golden Dawn (in Volume I of the Equinox), the Goetia and the Golden Dawn 'Book of Correspondences' as Liber 777.

Israel Regardie (1907-1985)
Like Crowley, Israel Regardie also broke his vows and published the Golden Dawn (or Stella Matutina in his case) rituals and knowledge lectures. He had a precedent for this as he was Crowley's secretary for a while in Paris and London. Regardie published the four volume set of Golden Dawn rituals and Knowledge lectures in 1937-1940, and this material forms the basis for many columns in the present Volume.

Amongst modern researchers in this field, the names that stand out for original magical scholarship are Adam McLean (for the Hermetic Sourceworks series), Donald Tyson (for his edition of Agrippa's Three Books of Occult Philosophy), and Joseph Peterson (for his editions of John Dee's works and the Lemegeton, not to mention the Twilight Grotto collection).

Bill Whitcomb, David Godwin and David Hulse, need to be mentioned for the encyclopaedic work they have done on bringing together much of the above.

[53] The standard edition is edited by Joseph Peterson. Dr Rudd's version of the Goetia is published as Volume 3 of Sourceworks of Ceremonial Magic, Golden Hoard Press, 2006.

Acknowledgments

This book could not have been written without the inspiration and generous assistance of the following friends, scholars, and master Enochian magicians: David P. Wilson (S. Jason Black), Clay Holden, Christeos Pir, David R. Jones, Robin Cousins, Josh Norton (Benjamin Rowe), James Wasserman, Judith Hawkins-Tillirson, Rick Potter, I.Z. Gilford, Poke Runyon, Christopher S. Hyatt, and Robert Powell—and to the regular members of the Monday Night Magick Class of Heru-ra-ha Lodge O.T.O., I give my most heartfelt thanks; Constance DuQuette, who co-hosts this 30-year on-going class (and is my most ruthless heckler); Jonathan Taylor; Mike Strader; Jill Belanger; Olver Althoen; Carlos Casadas; and Sandy, Arto, Cobra, Vanessa, Bret, Michael, Patricia, Coleen, Mary, Evgeniy, Jane, Alan, Danny, and scores of others who throughout the years have brought Life, Love, and Liberty into our home each week.

I would also like to thank Glacier Nitz-Mercaeant, of The Enochian's Keep in Indiana, for his beautiful gifts of my gold Enochian Ring and Lamen; and the late Cecil Eugene Burns (a.k.a. Frater White Haired Bull) who built and donated the true and faithful replica of the Holy Table that now adorns our Enochian Temple space.

My thanks also go to Brothers Michael Strader, for his rendering of the Ensigns of Creation in the angelic script, and Robert Powell for his beautiful images of the Tablet of Union and the four Elemental Tablets. They are perhaps the clearest black and white renderings of these complex figures ever published.

Finally I offer my heartfelt gratitude to Clay Holden for his encouragement and support of this project. I am also deeply indebted to him for allowing me to use his magnificent recreations of the original angelic alphabet and his images of the Forty-nine Good Angels, the Holy Table, the Sigillum Dei Aemeth, and Golden Talisman.

I also draw the reader's attention to Brother Holden's original image of John Dee's Monas Hieroglyphica that adorns the cover page of each of the five books that make up Enochian Vision Magick. This image is in itself a most profound and historic element in the entire book for it represents a solution of a geometric puzzle going back to ancient Greek mathematical texts—that is, the production of a regular heptagon in a circle using only a compass and ruler. Please pay special attention to Clay's foreword to discover more.

Finally I offer very special thanks to Jan Johnson, Brenda Knight, and Amber Guetebier of Weiser Books who patiently (and graciously) forgave several deadline breaches.

Foreword

This is the book I would have given my eyeteeth for twenty-five years ago. It is the first work to systematically lay out the whole corpus of Dee and Kelley's magickal system, and the only one to provide a useful path through the dense and multilayered labyrinth of what has come down to us as "Enochian Magick," based almost entirely on their original manuscripts.

When Lon asked me to consider writing a foreword to his book, I think he knew that I had not been deeply involved in Enochian research for a number of years, but asked me to at least consider looking at what he was writing. It took only about fifteen minutes of reading to reignite my enthusiasm for the material which at one time was an all-consuming passion, and to realize that what he was in the process of writing would become a landmark text on the subject. Now that the book is finished, I am even more deeply honored to be able to write a few words of introduction to his remarkable work.

What particularly impresses me with Lon's book is not only the sheer volume of material covered or the clarity with which it is presented, but its immense readability and the fact that he has struck an elegant balance between classical scholarship, practical magickal instruction, and anecdotal events.

One never loses the sense that there is a real person at work here, questioning, organizing, and reporting his conclusions together with his experiences along the path. The self-important tone of many so-called "Enochian Magick" texts is entirely absent, replaced by clear and well-organized content.

When I first encountered Enochian magick, the only available published materials were Regardie's Golden Dawn and Crowley's Gems from the Equinox, fascinating but largely incomprehensible to me. Next was the first of several largely incoherent books on Enochian Magick by Gerald Shueler, which elaborated on the Golden Dawn material and added much of his own invention, most of it of dubious value. In hindsight, they seem more suitable for Dungeons and Dragons than serious magickal work (though to be fair, as David Jones once pointed out to me, D&D is probably an excellent introductory discipline for magickal ritual work).

Then came Geoffrey James's The Enochian Evocation of John Dee, a completely different matter altogether. Still more of a synopsis of a system than a workable guidebook (based largely on Sloane MS. 3191, Dee's precis of the materials received between 1582 and 1587), it gathered together the bulk of Dee and Kelley's work, and gave a sense of where it all came from. Still incredibly useful many years later, when coupled with an examination of the original scrying sessions that produced the material, it still does not serve as a proper guidebook through the system. The heart is there, but the how and why are largely absent.

When looking at what the Golden Dawn and Crowley and their successors put together as "Enochian Magick," it seems clear that they were missing huge chunks of this "how and why," along with many critical pieces to understanding what they were dealing with, and their attempts to graft basically everything else in their magickal system onto it produce a cumbersome thing that Dee and Kelley would not recognize as what they pulled through.

I have likened their resulting patchwork as similar to what happens when one attempts to open a Word document or a highly formatted database file in a text editor: one can read and even extract a good bit of raw data, but the formatting and links to other programs are entirely unreadable and bear little resemblance to the original document.

Without an understanding of Dee and Kelley's early material, mostly presented in Sloane MS. 3188, what comes later on, while workable on its own, will be largely incomprehensible. And while in many ways it can be convincingly argued that the later system, centered on the four Elemental Tablets, and the Tablet of Union are independent of the earlier material, Dee's diaries demonstrate that he went back and added marginal notes to even the earliest diaries to refer to events and communications that transpire several years later, as well as referencing the earlier communications in the later entries.

Fortunately for the reader, Lon's book gives full treatment, background, and application of both the early and the later materials, and provides in spades both the how and why that are missing from so many other books that purport to be guides to the system.

For me, not until David Jones's Center for Enochian Studies, based out of Thelema Lodge OTO in Oakland, began their annotated transcriptions of the first of Dee's spirit diaries, did I get a real sense for the background story of Enochian magick. All of a sudden, it was like reading a Philip K. Dick novel, with the tables and diagrams coming to life, populated by spirits, angels, and demons of all sorts, each with his or her own personality. And notably, John Dee and Edward Kelley for the first time became real people, questioning and struggling to understand and document what was being communicated to them.

I was finally able to borrow microfilms of the spirit diaries from the always truly generous and helpful Bill Heidrick, and I spent countless days printing them out on microfilm reader printers. When I finally had a set of Sloane MS. 3188 (Quinti Libri Mysteriorum) printed out and bound in front of me, the real magick began to take place for me. It was as if one discovered that Jules Verne's Captain Nemo was a real person, and could read his own words and step back 400-plus years into the past, to share his thoughts and experiences. To this day, it is the closest thing to real time travel I have ever felt.

Dee's handwriting presented some difficulty at first, as did his use of many antiquated terms, abbreviations, and frequent recourse to Latin. To my aid came Elias Ashmole's "fair-copy" of the diaries (Sloane MS. 3677), transcribed many decades later, in a beautiful hand which was much easier to read than Dee's. It also has the benefit of being more complete in some cases than Dee's original, as the manuscript was in considerably better shape in the 1600s than it is today, and Ashmole made notes indicating where materials were missing.

Given the difficulty in reading the original texts, it occurred to me to begin transcribing the diaries into electronic texts, laid out exactly as Dee had in the original manuscripts, and this was the birth of the John Dee Publication Project. The idea, which I tested in reading circles at Thelema Lodge, was that once one could get past the difficulties of Dee's sixteenth-century italic and secretarial handwriting, the actual English was not so different from that of Shakespeare, and that the modern reader would more easily be able to approach the work. Producing small batches of texts, with my transcription facing pages of the actual manuscript, it proved a fairly simple matter for people to actually read and understand the material.

While the world has changed immensely over the past two decades, and it is now possible to download electronic copies of all of Dee and Kelley's spirit diaries off the Net, it is still valuable to have the reconstructed electronic texts. And while I have never completed the transcriptions of the Quinti Libri Mysteriorum, it both taught me many valuable computer skills that ultimately changed my life and demonstrated that the text could be reproduced as written in an easily readable form. I am pleased that it still provides many readers with a place to begin in reading the spirit diaries.

It was suggested to me early on by David Jones that rather than attempting to comprehend the whole system, I should concentrate on a particular section and work to understand the mechanism of that piece of the system. In my case, that piece of the puzzle was the Sigillum Dei Aemeth.

While Lon in this book suggests that, rather than trying to reproduce Dee and Kelley's work, one ought to use the system they transmitted, I found it of inestimable value to read through the text of Mysteriorum Liber Secundus, where the layout and working of the Sigillum is systematically laid out, and fill in each of the squares in a blank Sigillum as I went through it. By so doing, this impressive talisman became a truly living being for me, and it was possible also to rectify certain errors which exist in Dee's diagram of the Sigillum.

Case in point: at the bottom of the Sigillum Dei Aemeth, both in Dee's original illustration at the end of Mysteriorum Liber Secundus and in virtually every version published since, one finds the character "y" with a "14" under it. The text however clearly gives this number as "15." Replacing this number, and applying the method of backwards and forwards rotation around the outer circle, one utilizes the remaining unused squares, and two additional names are produced, neither of which is mentioned in the text. This exercise is left to the reader.

It further demonstrated that Dr. Dee, in fact, lies in certain places in the record, indicating that there is material hidden even there that he did not want to be visible to an unthinking reader.

One of my favorite quotes from the beginning of Mysteriorum Liber Secundus is Dee's interchange with the archangel Michael:

> Mi. [...] Thow shalt sweare by the Living God, the strength of his Mercy, and his Medicinall vertue, powred into man's soule never to disclose these Mysteries
> D. Yf no man, by no means, shall perceyve any thing hereof, by me, I wold think that I shold not do well.
> Mi. Nothing is cut from the churche of God. We in his Saincts are blessed for ever.
> We separate the, from fyled and wycked persons: We move the to God.
> D. I vow, as you require: God be my help, and Gwyde, now and ever, amen.
> MIC. This is a Mystery, skarse worthy for us, ourselves, to know, muche lesse to Reveale. Art thow, then, so Contented?
> D. I am: God be my strength.

Keeping this in mind, one may begin to understand why Dee occasionally misdirects the reader in his diaries. As with Aleister Crowley's works several hundred years later, if one is paying attention to what one is reading, the erroneous data should just about jump out from the page, and provide a pointer to the actual information.

Investigating such parts of the magickal furniture can provide further unknown or undocumented information, such as the following:

If one adds and subtracts the numbers at the top and bottom of the letters around the outer ring of the Sigillum (having corrected the "y/15"), one arrives at a total number of 440. Adding the "1" in the concentric circles that is given at the end of the instructions on the outer ring (accompanied by the statement "Omnia unum est"), the total comes to 441, the gematric value of the Hebrew "Aemeth," or Truth. Without the correction of the "y/15" square, the total remains 440, the gematric value for "Meth," or Dead. Thus, the Sigillum may be considered as a Golem, and the published version an inactive and unworkable "dead" talisman.

There is also an additional Table to be generated from the instructions given for the characters around the outer ring, as they are described in the text:

> D. Note: All the Cumpanies of these 40, stode, five togither, and five togither, and so in eight Cumpanyes; each, of five

Thus one can lay out the characters in eight rows of five, and in so doing, can produce symmetrical character sigils similar to the ones found on the Elemental Tablets for the angels of the outer ring.

In attempting to find a simple way to generate a regular heptagram in a circle for the purposes of reproducing the Sigillum on paper, I further discovered an interesting connection between the spirit diaries and Dee's earlier Monas Hieroglyphica.

While one cannot in fact produce a regular heptagon in a circle using only a compass and ruler (a geometric puzzle going back to ancient Greek mathematical texts), one can approximate it. There are several classical solutions, each of them rather close, but also involving complex methodology. Laying out the Monas Hieroglyphica in its 4 x 9 grid, as given in Dee's book, using a compass from the mid-point to trace a circle, and rotating the Monas so its "horns" touch on the circle from the top of the grid, one finishes with a very close approximation of a heptagon, in fact, as close or closer than any known classical solution.

Finally, it is perhaps fitting to suggest that one can read and consider Dee and Kelley's spirit diaries in a number of different ways, some of them mutually exclusive, but all of them perhaps of interest and value.

First, they can be considered as authentic records of spirit communication. Over the years I have worked closely with practicing Enochian magicians, including at least one incredibly talented scryer, who can both see and hear through the crystal ball, a very rare combination. Most scryers can do one or the other, but not both. In Edward Kelley, Dee found a rare man, however difficult he may have been to work with, and clearly knew it. Dee could only rarely see or hear anything himself, but with his amazing mathematical and classically trained mind, was perhaps the only man in the world capable of understanding and organizing the instructions that were presented to him. He was also skeptic enough to question and reject transmitted material that appeared to come from lying spirits, as Kelley periodically pulled through "illuding divils" that specialized in disinformation. The internal consistency of the bulk of the spirit diaries, as well as the coherent interrelationship of its many parts, speaks convincingly to its being a genuine record of actual events over a period of years.

Second, one can consider the material as an exercise in cryptographic method, intended as a means of communicating secret information back from the continent to Dee's colleagues and superiors in Elizabeth's court. Clearly, as one reads through Liber Mysteriorum Quartus, and to a certain extent Secundus, one can see similarities to the methodology of Trithemius's Steganographia, a work with which Dee was quite familiar, and which has now been demonstrated to be entirely a cryptographic treatise.

The arrays of "dignified" and "undignified" spirits can be seen as referring to encryption methods involving "nulls," and Dee and Kelley's discussion of "transposition of letters" in Quinti Libri Mysteriorum Appendix is at the very least suggestive again of the same. Then there are the tables in Liber Loagaeth, at the end of which (Sloane MS. 3189) Dee has appended eight tables from "Aldaraia Sive Soyga," the mathematical methods of which have been demonstrated by Jim Reeds. They appear even on the surface to be cryptographic tables, though no one to date has made a systematic study of their content, nor provided any translation or decryption or methodology. They remain the most hermetically sealed of all Dee and Kelley's documents.

In a similar way, one may usefully compare this "cryptography" theme with the Kabbalistic method of transposition of letters along with numeric values as a strictly spiritual exercise (e.g., the "Sepher Yetzirah"), and arrive at the conclusion that the Enochian system might be considered "sacred cryptography" in the same sense as the classical Kabbalistic method, unrelated to the mundane world of secret transmission of political secrets.

Lastly, and perhaps most amusingly, I have entertained the idea that Dee was the author of the first science fiction novel over a period of years, and indeed the first to give thought to the idea of "cyberspace," an interdimensional world where communication takes place through a portal, giving thought to the twentieth-century works of H. P. Lovecraft, Philip K. Dick, and William O. Gibson.

In this view, while Edward Kelley is still a historic personage (he appears in Dee's private diaries as well as being clearly documented both in England and in Prague, usually in conjunction purely as an alchemist), the "Edward Talbot" and "Edward Kelley" presented in the Spirit Diaries, his frequent turns from devout scryer to blaspheming conjurer and back again, along with all the mischievous and light-hearted spirits who are trotted on and off the stage, can be seen as an immense work of fiction. Whether written purely for Dee's amusement or as a secret means of documenting a different sort of spiritual transmission remains hidden today.

Of course, as anyone who has spent any time actually working with the system(s) presented in the Spirit Diaries can attest, when you put them to work as if true, stuff happens. Once invoked (or evoked), the spirits do in fact seem to appear and go to work, whether one believes in them or not.

Which leads to the one piece of advice I would give to anyone starting out in working Enochian Magick: Be very clear of what you ask for, as you are certain to get as much of it as you can handle, and once started, it is much more difficult to get it to stop.

In closing, I would like to quote a passage from W. Wynn Westcott's translation of the "Chaldean Oracles" (quoting Proclus), which I have always found incredibly useful to keep in mind when working Enochian Magick, or indeed, any ritual work:

> As the Oracle therefore saith: God is never so turned away from man, and never so much sendeth him new paths, as when he maketh ascent to divine speculations or works in a confused or disordered manner, and as it adds, with unhallowed lips, or unwashed feet. For of those who are thus negligent, the progress is imperfect, the impulses are vain, and the paths are dark.

Lon's wonderful book provides the reader—for the first time—with a clearly lit and well-ordered guide through the maze of Dee and Kelley's Enochian system. The hallowed lips and well-washed feet are up to the reader.

Keep an open mind, a pure heart, and a clean temple, and you will surely hear their angels and spirits speaking to you.

A Note Regarding Original Source Material and Footnote References

The original Enochian magick material is a labyrinth of manuscripts. In preparing this book, I was fortunate to have at my disposal electronic files containing the photographic images of original material currently housed at the British Library, London. The manuscripts are numbered and designated by the name of past owners. The ones I used for the present work are designated: Sloane 3188, 3189, 3191; and Cotton Appendix XLVI parts I and II.

Within these numbered manuscripts are various "books," or "Libers" bearing separate titles. Some of these Libers were copied by Kelley or others and reproduced in subsequent manuscripts (sometimes renamed) and have found their way to London's British Library and the Bodleian and Ashmolean libraries at Oxford University. For my purposes the material from the British Library's Sloane 3188, 3189, 3191; and Cotton Appendix XLVI parts I and II proved to be quite sufficient. Digital scans of the Enochian manuscripts can be accessed electronically at: http://www.themagickalreview.org/enochian/mss/.

Enochian scholar Geoffrey James prepared a concise summary breakdown of Dee and Kelley manuscripts for the bibliography of his excellent book, Enochian Magick of Dr. John Dee.[1] He has graciously allowed me to reproduce his entries for the material that relates directly or indirectly to Enochian Vision Magick. The reader who wishes to explore the source material in greater detail (or who simply wishes to track the book's footnotes and references) should find this list very helpful.

SLOANE MS. 3188.

This manuscript contains Dee's earliest scrying sessions. It contains six individual 'books', which are:—

Mysteriorum Liber Primus covering December 22, 1581 to March 15, 1582, and containing a ceremony with Saul (Dee's first scryer) and the first ceremonies with Edward Talbot, in which the table and Solomon's ring are described.

Mysteriorum Liber Secondus covering March 6, 1582 to March 21, 1582, and containing the first elements of the Heptarchic system, the spirits of the Sigil of Æmeth, and the first suggestion that an antediluvian language would be delivered to Dee. This title page is missing, but can be inferred from textual references in SLOANE MS. 3677.

Mysteriorum Liber Tertius covering April 28, 1582 to May 4, 1582, and containing numerous sigils related but apparently not essential to the Heptarchic system, as well as the names of the 49 good angels.

Quartus Liber Liber Mysteriorum covering November 15, 1583 to November 21, 1583, and containing the remainder of the Heptarchic system; this book is the first to record the name of Edward Kelly[2] as the scryer.

Liber Mysteriorum Quintus covering March 23, 1583 to April 18, 1583, and containing the tables later transcribed by Kelly into SLOANE MS. 3189.

Quinti Libri Mysteriorum Appendix covering April 20, 1583 to May 23, 1583, and containing the famous Enochian letters, as well as information concerning the construction of the Great Table.

SLOANE MS. 3189.

Liber Mysteriorum Sextus and Sanctus or The Book of Enoch revealed to John Dee by the Angels which contains 49 double-sided tables of (apparently) random letters. It is in Edward Kelly's handwriting.

SLOANE MS. 3191.

This manuscript is the only book of ceremonial magic extant in Dee's handwriting. It consists of three separate 'books,' each dealing with a different aspect of Dee's angelic magickal system. The books are:—

49 Claves Angelicæ Anno 1584 Cracoviæ (Liber 18) which contains Dee's transcription of the Angelical Keys (often called the Enochian Keys or Enochian Calls.)

Liber Scientiæ Auxillii et Victoriæ Terrestris which contains a complex system of magic based upon the Great Table (often called The Table of Watchtowers). It is entirely in Latin, and related to the Call of the Thirty Aires.

De Heptarchia Mystica which describes a complete system of planetary magic, along with excerpts from the various scrying sessions.

COTTON APPENDIX XLVI, PARTS 1 & 2.

This manuscript is occasionally referred to as Royal Appendix XLVI, or SLOANE MS. 5007. It contains thirteen 'books,' which are:—

Liber Mysteriorum (et Sancti) parallelus Novalisque covering May 28, 1583 to July 4, 1583, and containing the tail end of the Heptarchic system and the only recorded incident of Kelly speaking Greek.

Liber Pergrinatonis Prime Videlicet A Mortlaco Angeliæ Ad Craconiam Poloniæ covering September 21, 1583 to March 13, 1584, and containing the journey from Mortlake to Cracow, Poland and various political speculations.

Mensis Mysticus Saobaticus Pars primus ejusdem covering April 10, 1584 to April 30, 1584, and containing the dictations of the first calls (backwards).

Libri Mystici Apertorii Cravoviensis Sabbatici covering May 7, 1584 to May 22, 1584, and containing the remainder of the calls (except for the call of the Thirty aires, in the Angelical tongue, and the spirits of the Thirty aires.

Libri Septimi Cracoviensis Mystici Sabbatici covering May 23, 1584 to July 12, 1584, and containing the geographic locations of the spirits of the Thirty aires, the Great Table or Watchtowers, and the first third of the Call of the Thirty Aires, as well as the names of the Thirty aires.

Libri Cracoviensis Mysticus Apertorius Præterea Præmium Madimianum covering July 12, 1584 to August 15, 1584, and containing the remainder of the Call of the Thirty Aires, as well as the names of the Thirty aires.

Mysteriorum Pragensium Liber Primus Cæsarusque covering August 15, 1584 to October 8, 1584, and containing an attempt to convince the Holy Roman Emperor of the canonical nature of the visions.

Mysteriorum Pragensium Confirmatio covering December 20, 1584 to March 20, 1585, and containing mostly political speculation.

Mysteriorum Cracoveinsium Stephanicorum Mysteria Stephanica covering April 12, 1585 to June 6, 1585, and containing an alchemical formula and a letter from Dee's wife to the spirits.

Unica Action, quæ Pucciana vocetor covering August 6, 1585 to September 6, 1585, and containing religious visions obviously meant to impress the Papal Nuncio who was then attending the ceremonies.

Liber Resurrectionis Pragæ, Pactum sev Fædus Sabbatismi covering fragments from April 30, 1586 to January 21, 1587, and containing further ceremonies with the Papal Nuncio.

Actio Tertia Trebonæ Generalis covering April 4, 1587 to May 23, 1587, and containing a complex series of corrections to the Watchtowers and the infamous wife-swapping episode.

Jesus, Omnipoten sempiterne & une Deus covering March 20, 1607 to September 7, 1607 and containing the last records of Dee's magickal experiment.

Some of this material has been published in more modern times in books that are still readily available. Foremost of these are A True & Faithful Relation of What Passed for Many Yeers Between Dr. John Dee and Some Spirits,[3] and John Dee's Five Books of Mystery.[4]

To make things a bit easier for the reader to access more readily available source material, I will, wherever possible, try to make references with the text and in notes to passages in these modern works.

Prologue to the Prologue

Something Secret

Vyasa: There's something secret about a beginning. I don't know how to start.

Ganesha: As you claim to be the author of the poem, how about beginning with yourself?

—THE MAHABHARATA[5]

There is indeed something secret about a beginning, secret and invisible like the soul of infinite potential that broods in the heart of every living seed. My tongue is tied. I stare at the blank screen of my monitor. I don't know how to start. For the writer it is the most difficult moment—a million things to say, but where to begin? My eyes search the walls and ceiling of my little office and fall upon the mask of the Hindu god Ganesha. His bright, pleasant face reminds me of the opening scene of Jean-Claude Carrière's play, The Mahabharata,[6] where Vyasa, the author of the epic poem is faced with his own writer's block as he strives to begin his monumental story. Unable to read or write himself, Vyasa is blessed by the arrival of Ganesha, the beloved elephant-headed god, who offers to serve as Vyasa's scribe and take down his story from dictation. He also gives Vyasa some advice about how to start.

"How about beginning with yourself?"

And so, in pale imitation of the poet Vyasa, I will heed the wise counsel of my elephant-headed lord, the remover of obstacles. I shall begin this work of magick by telling you something about myself. Don't worry, I won't tell you much. Just enough to get us started.

I am a man. I am what they call in the East a householder—that is, I am married and have for my entire adult life endeavored with varying degrees of success to provide a loving and stable environment for my family. I am also an exceedingly lucky man, for in truth, throughout the years it has been my sainted wife and beloved son who have provided me with a loving and stable environment.

Fate (coupled with a conspicuous lack of ambition) has conspired to make our lifestyle one of genteel poverty (well, not always so genteel). We've never owned a house, a new car, or a credit card. On the other hand, we've always lived in moderately affluent communities and safe neighborhoods. We've always owned old cars that usually get us where we're going. Our bills consist primarily of the rent, the utilities, health insurance, and our groceries. We have no debts.

Some people say that's a miracle. I agree. Miracles are part of my job, for I am a magician. I'm not the type of magician who creates illusions to entertain audiences, but the type of who seeks to dispel the myriad illusions that hinder my own spiritual growth and enlightenment.

Aleister Crowley (1875–1947), the great twentieth-century magician, defined magick as the "science and art of causing change to occur in conformity with Will."[7] This is obviously a very broad definition of the term. In my opinion, however, it is the only one that is entirely accurate. You are, of course, free to interpret this definition any way you wish. Personally, I've come to the realization that the only real changes I can effect with magick are changes in myself. By changing myself, I change the world around me, hopefully for the better.

Naturally, I haven't always considered myself a magician, but for as long as I can remember I've been a seeker. Please don't project any undue piety upon this statement. I'm as wicked as anyone who seldom breaks any criminal or civil statutes can be. But even as I wallow in my dark and lazy wickedness, I find myself again and again stumbling inadvertently toward the Light.

As a magician I have also been extraordinarily lucky. Early in my career I was befriended (and many times guided) by some very wonderful, and in their own ways masterful, magicians to whom I owe an immeasurable debt: Israel Regardie, Phyllis Seckler, Helen Parsons Smith, and Grady L. McMurtry. I have also collaborated with others who have enlarged and enriched my magickal life. Foremost among these is my wife, Constance, who is the greatest natural magician I have ever known. There are many others as well: Karen James, whose profound sense of beauty and passion for the art of dramatic ritual keeps alive the mysteries of Eleusis; Douglas James, William Breeze, James Wasserman, Steven Abbott, LeRoy Lauer, David P. Wilson, Rick Potter, Dewey Warth, Nathan Sanders, Christopher S. Hyatt, Poke Runyon, Michael Strader, Sandra Brautigam, and Jonathan Taylor; and, for the last twenty-eight years, the assembled magi of my weekly magick class.

On my fortieth birthday I began to write professionally. In this vocation I have also been exceedingly fortunate. Readers who are familiar with the body of my work know that I am occasionally taken to task by knowledgeable critics who accuse me of writing for beginners and who chide me for diluting or oversimplifying complex and esoteric concepts. Against these charges I can say very little in my defense except to confess that I am indeed a simple man who, by conventional academic standards, is a lazy and undisciplined student. I have to learn anecdotally. I need to put things in a personal context. I need to appreciate and understand the general before I can be thrilled and inspired by the specifics.

Yes, I'm proud to write for beginning students of magick. But first and foremost I write to explain things to myself. I write to find out what I know. I write the books that I wish I could have studied during the first five years of my magickal studies—books that might have saved me years of frustration, blind alleys, and wheel-spinning. I also like to think that I write for more advanced students who may find themselves entangled in the elegance of magickal minutiae or else have become so entranced and self-impressed with their encyclopedic memories that they've lost sight of why they are doing magick in the first place.

I write about things with which I'm familiar and have had hands-on experience. One of those things is Enochian magick. I began my study of this most curious of quaint and curious subjects in late 1979 and began practicing it in earnest in autumn of 1980. Back then there was very little published information available. The only person I actually knew who had any significant hands-on experience with the system was Dr. Francis (Israel) Regardie,[8] who cautioned me in no uncertain terms that I probably shouldn't be dabbling in such things.

Nevertheless, armed with my copy of Aleister Crowley's Gems from the Equinox[9] and the two-volume set of Regardie's The Golden Dawn,[10] I naïvely plunged into what I thought was the deep end of the Enochian magick swimming pool. A year or so later a friend would present me with a huge stack of photocopied[11] documents from the British Museum. This material represented several significant portions of surviving diaries and magickal notebooks of Elizabethan magus Dr. John Dee (1527–1608 or 1609) and his clairvoyant partner Edward Kelley[12] (1555–1595).

Only then did I begin to realize how dreadfully deep the waters of Enochiana really are. By then, however, it was too late for me to get out of the pool. What little of the system I had mastered had already yielded breathtaking results. My life was becoming very magickal.

Those primitive photocopies eventually yellowed, then browned, then charcoal-blackened into illegibility, but my interest didn't fade. Neither did the interest of others in the magickal community. Today clear copies of the museum manuscripts are readily available to the serious student, and there are no less than thirty books currently in print with the word "Enochian" in the title. I confess a few of those are my doing. In 1991 Dr. Christopher S. Hyatt and I wrote a commentary on Aleister Crowley's little Enochian masterpiece, Liber Chanokh.[13] A year latter Herman Slater of Magickal Childe Publishing asked me to pen the introduction to the new facsimile edition of the 1659 A True & Faithful Relation of What Passed for Many Yeers Between John Dee . . . and Some Spirits. In 1995, my wife, Constance, and I created a deck of tarot cards[14] that incorporates a large number of images relating to the Enochian Elemental Tablets. In the book that accompanies the cards,[15] I elucidate on how they can be used for practical Enochian magick operations.

But writing (and reading) about Enochian magick is one thing; actually using it in a practical way to advance one's own spiritual evolution is another. With few exceptions, the thirty odd books mentioned above are very long on theory and history and very short on straightforward suggestions on how to actually sit down and perform Enochian magick, or reasons why one would want to do such a thing in the first place. I hope to remedy this, at least in small measure, by writing this book. I feel qualified to do this not because I have any illusions that I am the world's most knowledgeable scholar on the subject (I assure you I am not). I offer simply the credentials of nearly thirty years of applied experience with several aspects of Enochian magick. I have come to some very fundamental conclusions that I believe might be of significant and practical value to both the speculative student and the operative practitioner of this elegant and complex magickal system.

Before I plunge us directly into those waters, however, I need to briefly address the question of why a relatively sane and rational twenty-first-century adult would wish to seriously embark upon the path of magick. I will do this with a device that will most assuredly irritate my publisher—a second prologue. And once again, to please my Lord Ganesha,[16] I will begin by talking about myself.

Prologue

Why Magick?

Magick is as mysterious as mathematics, as empirical as poetry, as uncertain as golf, and as dependent on the personal equations as Love.

—Aleister Crowley[17]

I'm a magician. I practice the art of ceremonial magick. I adore and invoke the essence of highest Deity and hold congress with divine angels. I also evoke and command spirits and demons.[18] Ceremonial magick is the path I have chosen to give expression to the spiritual yearnings I believe are inherent in every human being. It is my Tao, my Way, my religion, my philosophy, my psychology. But ceremonial magick isn't my life. I already have a life, thank you. But I use magick to help make my life magick.

I have closets and chests full of bizarre and colorful robes and crowns and wands and daggers and chalices and swords and lances and thuribles and banners and veils and rings and incense and candles and oils and tablets and talismans and mirrors and crystals. I have books—strange books (some very old and rare), books that would scare the daylights out of most of my neighbors. I use these magickal tools; I study these books in order to perform the rites of ceremonial magick. These things are not my life. But I use them to make my life magick.

On the surface one might think it reasonable and fair to ask, "Why are you a magician, Lon? Why do you believe in this stuff? Why do you do these crazy things?"

It might surprise you to know I don't have a proper answer to these questions. It is impossible for me to adequately explain or justify why I celebrate my spiritual life through the vehicle of magick, for the same reasons it is impossible for any artist to properly explain why he or she has taken up the brush or the chisel or the violin or ballet slippers. If reasonableness were the sole criterion for the existence of art, there would be no music, no dance, no magick.

Make no mistake about it, magick is an art form, and every true magician is an artist. Just like the musician and dancer, the magician must practice, create, and perform. Just like the painter or sculptor, he or she must be armed with proper tools, skills, knowledge, and, most of all, inspiration. But what about people who've never learned to play a musical instrument, never learned to dance or paint or sculpt, yet who find themselves spiritually touched by listening to music, watching ballet, and visiting galleries? Are they not artists too?

In a very important way, I believe they are. As quantum physicists tell us, both the observer and that which is observed are changed by the act of observation itself. By appreciating the artist's handiwork, we are fundamentally affecting the reality and life of that creation. More importantly, when we expose ourselves to the artist's creation, we enjoy the passive luxury of allowing our consciousness to be altered, elevated, and enriched in unique and personal ways the artist might have never imagined.

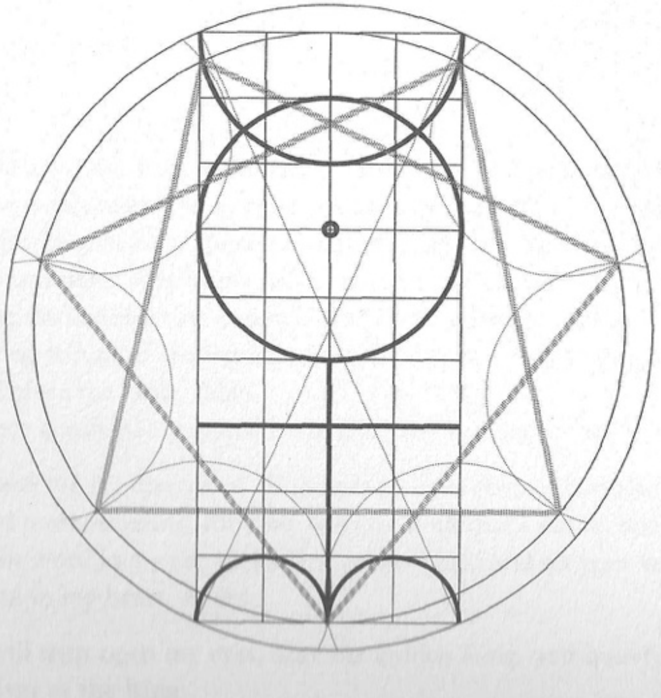
The art of ceremonial magick, however, is a little different. There is no painted canvas to display, no audience to applaud. Regardless of how altruistic the magician's motives may be, magick is spiritual performance art that must ultimately be executed and appreciated by the magician alone. He or she is at once the teacher, the student, the medium, the conductor, the performer, the venue, the audience, and the critic. The magician touches the broader audience of humanity only by affecting changes in the magician, and success can be weighed only in the silent Holy of Holies of his or her own soul.

So, here and now and for the duration of this book, I shall lay aside the question of "why magick?" If my magickal efforts seem to propel me closer to self-realization, if my work brings me a measure of health or happiness or wisdom or a sense of fulfillment, good. But none of these things, nor indeed any thing, can be the goal of my art. Instead of asking, "why magick?" I suggest all who would fancy themselves magicians seek answers to the following questions, questions I struggle to answer every day of my life:

Am I really an artist? Am I drawn to this strange and irrational art form because of my mad passion to enrich my art and fulfill my creative life purpose? Or am I doing all this to avoid fulfilling my destiny? Am I running away from myself? When I don my magickal robes and enter the temple, do I do so as a radiant artist-magician, armed and ready to storm the gates of heaven and hell to do battle for the triumph of my soul, poised to take the next step in my spiritual evolution? Or am I merely a foolish man in an exotic costume, a mystic poseur in serious need of a life?

BOOK I

Don't Try to Duplicate the Magick Dee and Kelley Did to Receive the System—Just Use the System They Received!



CHAPTER ONE

In the Middle of the Night

Teach me (O creator of all things) to have correct knowledge and understanding, for your wisdom is all that I desire. Speak your word in my ear (O creator of all things) and set your wisdom in my heart.

—JOHN DEE[19]

It's 3:43 a.m. I've been up for about a half an hour bathing, dressing, and preparing myself to operate. Constance is asleep in the bedroom, and I'm trying to be as quiet as I can. In just a few minutes I will turn off the computer here in my office, take up my almond wand, and go into the darkened living room. There I will quietly perform a Lesser Banishing Ritual of the Pentagram, light two tapered candles, and sit down before the Holy Table.

Once comfortably seated I will close my eyes and pray:

> Teach me (O creator of all things) to have correct knowledge and understanding, for your wisdom is all that I desire. Speak your word in my ear (O creator of all things) and set your wisdom in my heart. Amen.

I will then open my eyes, take the golden Ring, and quietly recite the Prayer of the Ring:

> Behold the Ring. Lo, this it is. This is it, wherewith all miracles, and divine works and wonders were wrought by Solomon: this is it, which the Archangel Michael has revealed to me. This is it, which Philosophy dreameth of. This is it, which the Angels scarce know. This is it, and blessed be his name: yea, his Name be blessed forever. Without this I shall do nothing. Blessed be his name, that encompasses all things: Wonders are in him, and his name is WONDERFUL: PELE. His Name works wonders from generation to generation. Amen.

I will put on the Ring and then take up the golden Lamen that is attached to a black ribbon. Before putting it around my neck I will again pray:

> Behold the Lamen. As the Holy Table conciliates Heaven and Earth, let this Lamen which I place over my heart conciliate me to the Holy Table. Amen.

I will then take up my almond wand, reach across the Holy Table, tap the upper right-hand corner, and begin to chant. As I do so, I will move the tip of the wand from right to left along the far edge of the table and chant:

> Pa Med Fam Med Drux Fam Fam Ur Ged Graph Drux Med Graph Graph Med Med Or Med Gal Ged Ged Drux.

Then, moving the tip of the wand down the left edge of the table, I will continue to chant:

> Pa Drux Un Tal Fam Don Ur Graph Don Or Gisg Gon Med Un Ged Med Graph Van Ur Don Don Un.

Then, moving from left to right along the bottom edge:

> Pa Drux Ur Ur Don Ur Drux Un Med Graph Graph Med Med Graph Ceph Ged Ged Ur Mals Mals Fam Un.

Then up the right-hand edge to finish where I started:

> Pa Gon Med Un Graph Fam Mals Tal Ur Pa Pa Drux Un Un Van Un Med Un Gon Drux Drux Ur.

I will repeat this entire procedure six more times, each time increasing the intensity of my focus on the words and movements. When I've completed the seventh round of chanting, I will hold the wand over the center of the table and chant seven rounds of the following:

> Med Gon Gisg, Don Ur Van, Ur Don Ur, Med Med Graph.
> Med Don Ur Med, Gon Ur Don Med, Gisg Van Ur Graph.

Then I will trace a circle over the center of the table and say:

> Seven, rest in Seven: and the Seven, live by Seven: The Seven, govern the Seven: And by Seven all Government is.

> Galas Gethog Thaoth Horl*w*n Innon Aaoth Galethog,
> Zaphkiel Zedekiel Cumael Raphael Haniel Michael Gabriel,
> E(l) Me Ese Iana Akele Azdobon Stimcul,
>
> I Ih Ilr Dmal Heeoa Beigia Stimcul,
>
> S Ab Ath Izad Ekiei Madimi Esemeli,
>
> E An Ave Liba Rocle Hagonel Ilemes,
> Sabathiel Zadkiel Madimiel Semeliel Nogahel Corabiel Lavanael.

Finally, I will place the tip of my wand upon the center of my forehead and whisper:

> luah lang sach urch
> Iad moz zir—iad bab zna—iad sor gru—iad ser osf.

The chanting will take about eighteen minutes. By then I will have chanted myself into an altered state of consciousness. In fact, I'll be high as a kite and struggling to avoid drifting into a directionless rapture. I will no longer be the overweight knot of worries and vices that haunts the daylight world of bills and phone calls and deadlines—vampires of time. I will be a magician, a key player in the business of creation, a spiritual being occupying my own indispensable rung on a hierarchical ladder of spiritual beings: gods, archangels and angels, spirits, and demons—spiritual entities who personify in metaphoric Technicolor every natural force, every monad of energy, every atom of matter, every concept and principle, potentiality, and tendency in the visible and invisible cosmos.

My living room will disappear, and in its place will tower the Temple of the Universe, holy ground demarcated by a consecrated carpet of red silk, upon which rests the Holy Table, the center of the universe, the Holy of Holies where heaven touches earth.

The table is completely veiled by a red silk cloth, with its gold tassels that hang from each corner. The cloth conceals an elaborately painted and engraved tabletop, the perimeter of which is carved with eighty-four squares containing letters from a sacred angelic alphabet—letters whose names I chanted in the angelic tongue during my seven rounds of chanting. A large carved hexagram spans the entire inner surface of the tabletop. And in the center of the hexagram broods a large rectangle made up of twelve squares, each containing an oversized angelic letter—the same letters whose names I chanted during the second round of chanting—artfully carved into the surface of the table. Seven talismans, Ensigns of Creation, are arrayed around the central rectangle. They are made of purified tin and are peculiarly lettered in the angelic script.

The centerpiece of the Holy Table is the Sigillum Dei Aemeth, a wax disk approximately nine inches in diameter and one and one-half inches thick, bearing the carved image of a complex diagram consisting of an interlocked heptagram, two heptagons, a pentagram, and an array of numbers and letters, which, when decoded, spell the names of seven sets of seven divine beings: Seven who rest in seven, seven who live by seven, the seven who govern the seven, and seven by whom all government is. Four smaller waxed versions of this Sigillum (wrapped in red silk bags) rest under the legs of the Holy Table, insulating it from distracting geocurrents.

The chanting completed, I will unveil a circular black mirror made of highly polished obsidian. I have it placed in a stand directly upon the covered Sigillum Dei Aemeth, and I will carefully angle it so I see my dimly lit face reflected in its pool of deep blackness. After only a few moments the reflection of my face will disappear, and I will see with magick eyes and hear with magick ears.

Now, the vision magick begins.

In the middle of the night I will call upon the angels.

I will call upon the angels, and they will answer.

CHAPTER TWO

The Magick of Dr. John Dee

If Merlin is an inner resonator who generated the literature which gathered about his name, then Dr. John Dee must be considered almost his outer manifestation in the real world.
He is probably the single most influential aspect of the magician ever to have lived and a worthy successor to the Arthurian mage.

—John and Caitlin Matthews[20]

The little ceremony I described in chapter one cannot be found in any other book of magick. I composed it in the spring of 2006 for the benefit of the members of my weekly magick class. It is designed as a ritual of preparation—a ceremonial "drug," as it were, to safely induce an altered state of consciousness, a trance in which specific techniques of magick may be practiced and visions can occur.

The components of the ritual are not, however, a modern invention. The magical implements and furniture were fabricated as faithfully as possible from descriptions found in sixteenth-century manuscripts and items currently housed at the Bodleian Library of Oxford University, the British Library, and the King's Library wing of the British Museum.

The prayers and the chants were drawn from those same ancient texts. In a group magical working, the prayers are recited in unison and the chants intoned Tibetan style, in a deep monotone chorus of two or four groups of voices. The hypnotic effect on the participants is tangible and powerful. (I have yet to discover what it does to our eavesdropping neighbors.)

The ancient manuscripts I refer to are the diaries and magical records of Dr. John Dee[21] and his partner Edward Kelley, and these texts represent the source material for the system of magick known and practiced today as Enochian magick.

It is not my intention, nor is it within the scope of the present work, to present a proper biography of Dee. That has been handled nicely in Peter French's brilliant biography[22] and other texts that I've itemized in the bibliography. I cannot, however, escape the necessity of providing a brief outline of his life and work, because it will have a direct bearing on our understanding of Enochian vision magick and why I think my little ritual of preparation is so important for those who wish to pursue this path.

Son of a gentleman server to Henry VIII, John Dee was a true Renaissance magus and one of the most extraordinary individuals of his time. Historian John Aubrey called him "one of the ornaments of his Age."[23] That is saying a lot, for his age was peopled with some of the brightest lights in the history of western civilization: Queen Elizabeth I, Charles V, Francis Bacon, Ben Johnson, Edmund Spenser, Giordano Bruno, Christopher Marlowe, and William Shakespeare.

Dee's unique genius blossomed at Cambridge University, and his fame as a published mathematician propelled him as a young man to academic rock-star status throughout Europe. It also brought him to the attention of the rulers of his world, including the future Queen Elizabeth.

He was the master of scores of disciplines. He was a physician, an engineer, a theologian, an astronomer, and cartographer. He invented the nautical instruments and developed the advanced navigational charts that helped make Britannia ruler of the waves. He even coined the term Britannia. A master astrologer, he was allowed to choose the date of Elizabeth's coronation, and throughout her reign he remained her friend and counselor.

Because he was fluent in many languages and lectured often on the continent, Elizabeth enlisted his services as a spy. Dee enjoyed this role very much. As a matter of fact, I believe he remained in this position until the day she died. He was fascinated with cryptography and loved word and letter puzzles. Dee was secretly known as "the queen's eyes," and he signed his dispatches to her with the stylized image of a hand shading two eyes.

Yes, John Dee, on "her majesty's secret service," was the first agent 007.[24] Dee possessed the largest private library in England and was constantly enlarging it. He was perhaps the most educated man of his day. Part of his education included esoteric philosophy, Qabalah, alchemy, and magick—not illogical pursuits for a Renaissance magus. Magick, in particular, was a science to be explored and exploited. Dee wanted to talk to angels (as did the biblical patriarch Enoch) not only to discover the wisdom of the past and the secrets of the universe, but also, more immediately, to discover the secrets of Elizabeth's enemies and brandish the power to magically manipulate the spiritual forces that control them. Dee wanted to be a magical spy.

His approach to magick (at least at first) was pretty standard procedure for the day. After bathing and dressing in clean clothes (extraordinary measures for the times—unless, of course, it was May, when many people of the day took their annual bath), he would enter a room set aside for the purpose. There he would drop to his knees before a consecrated table/altar and for a half hour or so pray fervently to God and His good angels, alternately reciting a litany of self-abasing confessions of his unworthiness to enter into the divine presence and boasting of his God-given right to do that very thing. With his consciousness duly exalted by prayer, he would then gaze into a crystal or a black mirror (a process known as scrying[25]) and wait to receive a vision.

In theory that's how it was supposed to work. However, even though Dee was skilled at composing long and eloquent prayers, he was not very good at scrying. In 1581 he started to advertise for someone who was. He had a small measure of success with a handful of rented seers until March of 1582, when he made the acquaintance of one Edward Talbot. Talbot (who would soon confess that his name was actually Kelley) was an unemployed alchemist's assistant and convicted forger. Kelley's questionable character notwithstanding, his skills as a scryer immediately impressed Dee, who hired him on the spot at a salary of fifty pounds a year, a handsome figure for the day.

The partnership of Dr. John Dee and Edward Kelley would last until 1587. Their angelic-magick workings for the most part concluded in 1584. During their time together they engaged in hundreds of scrying sessions of varying lengths, in which Kelley gazed into a crystal ball or a black obsidian mirror and reported everything he saw and heard during a variety of angelic communications. Dee, sitting at a nearby table with pen and ink, led the questioning and recorded everything in anal-retentive detail.

Not all of the sessions yielded profound revelations. Indeed, many appear to be attempts by the communicating intelligences to simply keep the conversation going. There were numerous instances when information received in earlier sessions was amended (sometimes radically) in subsequent sessions. There were even times when the magicians were informed that they had been deceived in earlier communications by evil spirits. Nevertheless, the consistency of the bulk of the material is staggeringly impressive, and the double-/triple-blind nature in which it was delivered, especially the angelic language, calls, and magical tablets, boggles the imagination.

The Dee and Kelley years can be viewed as having occurred in three major phases, resulting in what appears on the surface to be three separate and unique magical systems. I will discuss these in more detail shortly. Here at the beginning it is enough to simply point out it is the third and last phase of their angelic workings (the three-month period between April 10 and July 13, 1584) that yielded the material for the system of vision magick that can be properly called Enochian.

The Enochian period was highly productive and bore much promise. In fewer than a hundred days Dee and Kelley received an angelic language, tablets containing the names of elemental and celestial beings, and calls in the angelic tongue that promised to unlock the secrets of heaven and earth. With sad, almost Faustian irony, however, once the Enochian material was in their hands, Dee and Kelley did not proceed to actually operate the system in subsequent workings.

They would go on to other magical adventures, attempting to impress (with little success) the crown heads of Europe with their supernatural counsel. Finally, after nearly five years of working together, years of exhausting magical sessions, and years of traipsing their families around Europe (not to mention a notorious wife-swapping incident), familiarity finally bred contempt, and the two magicians parted company without ever getting into the driver's seat of Enochian magick and turning the key.

Dee's complicated life would draw him back to the English court and the distracting world of political intrigue and survival. In 1588, as the Spanish armada set sail to annihilate England's much smaller fleet (an event Dee predicted years earlier), Elizabeth called again upon her Merlin. Dee shocked her courtiers by urging the queen to not engage the Spanish armada and keep her ships at bay, prophesizing that a mighty storm would scatter and destroy the Spaniards. Elizabeth wisely heeded Dee's words. The storm manifested right on cue, and in the chaos that followed, the Spanish armada went down to defeat. In many circles Dee was credited with magically raising the tempest that saved England. The story of this event became instant legend. William Shakespeare, writing only twenty-three years later, would use Dee as the model for Prospero, the storm-raising magician in his play, The Tempest.

Kelley's post-Enochian years would not earn him such renown. His ambitions kept him on the continent, where he peddled the promise of alchemical treasures to the crown heads of Europe. He was knighted by Emperor Rudolph II of Bohemia but was shortly thereafter imprisoned by his royal patron for failing to manufacture alchemical gold. With fairy-tale panache, Sir Edward Kelley plunged to an untimely death in November of 1595 while attempting to escape from the turret of Emperor Rudolph's prison tower.

Dee's end was not so colorful. Elizabeth appointed him warden of Christ's College in Manchester, but it was not a happy tenure. His wife (and, it is believed, several of his children) died there during the plague in 1605. Dee returned to his home at Mortlake, where his daughter Katherine cared for him until his death in late 1608 or early 1609.

How so many of Dee's manuscripts survived to see the light of the twenty-first century is a magical wonder story in and of itself. Several of the most important documents Dee had hidden in the false bottom of a cedar chest (can we get much more romantic?), where they lay undiscovered for over fifty years after his death. Through a curious chain of events (that tragically saw a portion of the manuscripts baked as pie wrappings), the surviving material came to the attention of the illustrious antiquary, politician, astrologer, chemist, and Freemason, Alias Ashmole (1617–1692), one of the few people in the world capable of recognizing the importance of the discovery. Thanks to Ashmole, the material was catalogued and finally housed safely in his own museum at Oxford, the British Museum, and the British Library, where, over three hundred years after its reception, it captured the attention of S. L. MacGregor Mathers, Wynn Wescott, and the adepts of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, then Aleister Crowley—and now you.

CHAPTER THREE

Dee and Kelley vs. the Golden Dawn and Aleister Crowley

> Now hath it pleased God to deliver this Doctrine again out of darknesse: and to fulfill his promise with thee, for the books of Enoch: To whom he sayeth as he said unto Enoch. Let those that are worthy understand this, by thee, that it may be one witness of my promise toward thee.
> —The angel Ave, Monday, June 25, 1584[26]

Modern Enochian magick (as first developed in the late nineteenth century by S. L. MacGregor Mathers and the adepts of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn and later adapted and augmented by Aleister Crowley and others) is a remarkable and tidy self-referential system of visionary magick. It is based upon a small portion of sixteenth-century manuscripts of Dr. John Dee and Edward Kelley, and the mystique of its colorful origins make it initially alluring to magical dilettantes and dabblers. However, the complexity of the system, as outlined by Golden Dawn/Crowley texts, continues to effectively guard the mysteries of this marvelous magical art form from all but the most serious, courageous, tenacious, foolish, or naïve.[27]

For most of us who cut our Enochian-magick teeth during the latter half of the twentieth century, the Golden Dawn (GD) and Crowley books were at the time the only source material readily available to us. By following the intricate procedures outlined in these texts, we proceeded with our visionary quests along the two avenues of experimentation offered us by the GD/Crowley model: one branch of the system dealing with the elemental (manifest) universe, the other dealing with the aethyric (celestial). I'll discuss these branches in more detail in book IV.

Both of these magical environments are populated by spiritual beings whose names are drawn from five grids of lettered squares received by Dee and Kelley during a series of angelic communications during the third (or Enochian) period of their magical operations. Both the elemental and the celestial magical environments (and their spirit inhabitants) are accessed by intoning one or more of nineteen calls, which are chanted in an angelic language that was given to the Elizabethan magicians under breathtaking and extraordinary circumstances during the last months of their angelic magick workings. Theoretically, these calls induce very specific trances, whereby the magician can pinpoint particular spiritual entities or environments he or she wishes to contact or visit. As you can imagine, this is a very attractive prospect to the magical explorer.

The visionary labor of many post-modern Enochian explorers was well repaid, for we soon discovered that despite our very limited access to the original texts (not to mention our inexperience and ineptitude) this kind of magick actually worked. With surprisingly few exceptions, when we followed the GD/Crowley procedures and techniques, even the most insensitive and skeptical among us received visions we deemed appropriate to the particular regions we were exploring.

The technique used to receive visions such as these is called scrying. The Golden Dawn and Crowley often referred to the practice as "traveling in the spirit vision." Scrying is, quite simply, the ability to put oneself in touch with one's own psychic senses. In magical operations the scrying session is usually preceded by a formal ceremony designed to put the magician in an altered state of consciousness. It is, for all intents and purposes, a shamanistic experience. The thoughts, mental images, and impressions that flood the magician's mind during this altered state are subsequently recorded in the magician's journal and analyzed.

Naturally, some of us proved more talented than others. Art lovers and movie fans make particularly good candidates for Enochian vision magick, for they see with the romantic's eye and already possess a vast memory bank of evocative landscapes, archetypal characters, and supernatural beings. They are by nature dreamers skilled at communicating through a vocabulary of images and visual metaphors. But even the least imaginative of us, in short order, learned to develop our own visionary skills that became increasingly honed by our repeated work with the system.

There is no question (in my mind, at least) that the Enochian magick procedures and techniques developed by the Golden Dawn and Crowley embody a highly effective system of magical working that, if properly applied, can become an integral component in the modern magician's program of personal self-development. This is especially true for those of us whose magical careers have led us to the Qabalah-based disciplines referred to today in specialized circles as hermetic or ceremonial magick.

To modern ceremonial magicians, Enochian magick appears at first glance to enjoy a comfortable compatibility with our world of pentagram rituals, hexagram rituals, tarot cards, trees of life, qabalistic path workings, chakra work, invocations, god-forms, and spirit evocations. This compatibility, however, has been, for the most part, contrived and jerry-rigged. For as efficacious as the GD/Crowley applications and techniques are, they bear little resemblance to anything Dee and Kelley practiced or were instructed to engage in by their angelic contacts. With all due respect to Mathers, it is clear that he and his Golden Dawn adepts chose to limit their attention to only those portions of source texts that offered material that they could fit easily into the qabalistic/hermetic schema to which they were so passionately committed. Furthermore, it is clear that in many instances, when the original material didn't fit the schema, they found a way to make it fit.

This fact should not diminish in our respect for the wonderfully effective system the Golden Dawn and Crowley have bequeathed to us. But it has prompted many of us (who obviously have an inordinate amount of time on our hands) to examine in greater detail the surviving Dee and Kelley material that has now become more readily available to the serious student. What we discovered is an overwhelmingly large body of work—books, notebooks, and diaries—the most interesting of which span the better part of three years of intense magical operations. Most of this material appears to have nothing whatsoever to do with Enochian magick as practiced today.

As I mentioned earlier, Dee and Kelley's magical workings took place in three distinct phases that yielded three unique magical systems. For convenience, I will refer to these as (1) Heptarchia Mystica (or simply Heptarchia), (2) Loagaeth (which includes an angelic alphabet), and (3) Enochian.

One could argue quite convincingly that the revelations Dee and Kelley received during the Enochian period represent the crème de la crème of their magical workings and that it is unnecessary to waste our time on the painfully complex details of the Heptarchia and Loagaeth working periods. After all, the GD/Crowley system and techniques were developed from this plus ultra Enochian material, and everything seems to work just fine, thank you. In fact, for the better part of twenty years I was one of the most vocal apologists for the Enochian school whose motto is, "Don't try to duplicate the magick Dee and Kelley did to receive the system—just use the system they received!" Then, starting in 1999, a couple of things happened that caused me to rethink the wisdom of this attitude.

First, I became enthralled with the work of Clay Holden and the John Dee Publication Project, which brought the glories of Quinti Libri Mysteriorum to life on the World Wide Web. Then, in 2003, my O.T.O.[28] Brother and Enochian magick adept Christeos Pir sent me a computer disk of material from a marvelous Enochian seminar he presented in Pittston, Pennsylvania. Along with the seminar material, he sent me a collection of photographic files of surviving Dee manuscripts from the British Library and other materials that were of great interest to me. I assure you, I could not have written this book without these materials and the profound insights of this great modern magician.

Around the same time, my publisher sent me a copy of Joseph H. Peterson's book John Dee's Five Books of Mystery: Original Sourcebook of Enochian Magic. I had years earlier examined much of this material enlarged from microfilm, but now I had the luxury of comfortably reviewing it in clearer formats (with Latin translations) on my home computer and from Peterson's marvelously well-organized book.

I must confess that even with this information stacked conveniently and legibly under my nose, I was overwhelmed by the sheer immensity of it all. I'm interested in the magical adventures of Dee and Kelley as much as the next fellow, but I also have a life. Did I need to sacrifice three years of my own life in order to eavesdrop on every detail of three years of theirs? More than ever I saw the wisdom of simply using the magical system Dee and Kelley received and of not wasting precious time trying to recreate the magick they practiced to receive the system. After all, can't I drive a car without first having to build it myself?

But we're not talking about driving cars; we're talking about the art of magick. In the final analysis, no matter what system the magician chooses, in order to make it work most effectively he or she must first become attuned to that system's particular way of viewing of the universe. This concept is so important to the understanding of what will follow in this book that I will pause to illustrate with an example.

The ceremonial magician who practices qabalistic magick acquiesces (at least for the duration of the working) to see all things in heaven and earth in terms of a hierarchy of spiritual personages expressed by the various god names, archangels, angels, spirits, intelligences, and demons of the system. In Qabalah-based magic, such spiritual beings are conveniently organized and arranged according to fourfold formulas dictated by the Hebrew letters that make up the great Name of God, Yod Heh Vav Heh, and by the familiar schema of the Tree of Life, with its ten sephiroth and the twenty-two paths that connect them. Before the magician is ready to operate within the laws and peculiarities of this qabalistic worldview, he or she must first become a fit component of that universe—a harmonious and integral part of this great divine machine, a vital step on this hierarchical stairway of consciousness.

Like the ballerina whose ninety minutes on stage is the product of years of practice and thousands of hours of rehearsal, the magical artist must also be first transformed into a proper instrument of his or her craft. Magicians achieve this transformation with preliminary meditations and rituals, by which we adjust our focus step-by-step until we become comfortable citizens of the specific magical world in which we intend to operate. For the western ceremonial magician, the well-worn curriculum of the Golden Dawn provides perfect examples of this step-by-step adjustment process.

First the magician becomes master of the pentagram and a full citizen of the world of the five elements of the microcosmic universe. By repeated performances of the pentagram rituals and meditations, the magician's psyche becomes balanced and accustomed to the world of the four directional winds, the four elements, and the corresponding magical weapons: the wand, cup, sword, and disk.

Once the elemental (microcosmic) universe is mastered, the magician then moves on to the next step in the attunement process by mastering rituals of the hexagram. Here the magician's point of reference is enlarged as his or her consciousness and identity is obliged to expand from the microcosmic world of the elements to the macrocosmic greater world—the world characterized by the sun orbited by the planets and surrounded by the belt of the zodiac.

This is very basic stuff, but it illustrates how rituals enable the ceremonial magician to externalize internal processes and undergo self-transformation. Would-be magicians who attempt more advanced work without being adjusted by these early attunements are ill prepared to understand or properly absorb what is happening to them within the context of the progressively higher magical environments in which they presumptuously wish to operate. It is true that some magicians may receive seemingly dramatic and noteworthy effects from such premature efforts, but seeds of promise cannot long take root in soil that is not properly prepared or that is too shallow.

Late in 2005, while gathering material for yet another workshop series on Enochian magick for my Monday night magick class, I poured over the records of Dee and Kelley's pre-Enochian workings in hopes of finding the key to their preparatory processes. What exactly did the angels do to Dee and Kelley during the years prior to the final Enochian revelations? Dee and Kelley received some pretty interesting things during those earlier workings, including instructions for the creation of an array of magical implements that the Golden Dawn and Crowley all but ignored:

- a Ring;[29]
- a Lamen, which was to be worn by the magician as a breastplate and which connects him or her to the Holy Table;
- the Holy Table itself, inscribed with letters from an angelic alphabet and upon which would rest the Sigillium Dei Aemeth;
- the Sigillium Dei Aemeth, an intricately carved disk made of purified beeswax (an artifact so stunning and historically intriguing that it is prominently displayed today in the King's Library wing of the British Museum);

- seven talismans (five squares and two circles), called Ensigns of Creation, which surround the Sigillium on the Holy Table.

All of these items were linked to one another and to the magicians by an overwhelmingly complex process that distilled, shuffled, and organized thousands of letters from numerous and varied alphanumeric grids. These grids had been painstakingly received in vision, one letter at a time, by Kelley and duly transcribed by Dee. The letters spelled the names of great angels, which, in turn, when manipulated, yielded the names of subordinate angels, which produced still more names.

Now, before we get too excited about dusting off and playing with all these pre-Enochian magical tools and furniture, I have to make myself clear on one very important point. These items were received during the first phase of Dee and Kelley's workings.

This period yielded a unique system of planetary magick they referred to as Heptarchia Mystica (see book II). To all appearances, heptarchic magick has little or no direct relationship to the Enochian magick system they received during their final days of practice. Also, it is demonstrably clear (in my mind at least) that Enochian magick can be performed quite effectively without using the Ring, the Lamen, the Holy Table, and so on. However, it is equally clear to me that, as Dee and Kelley were receiving and working with the items and concepts of heptarchic magick, their minds and psychic bodies were, day by day, undergoing subtle yet profound evolutionary changes.

Could the reason the practical Enochian material came so very late in the game be that Dee and Kelley had to first complete their transformation into magicians who could appreciate and handle the advanced work? After all, isn't that what magick is really about—changes in the magician? Could these changes have been brought about by the mere act of meticulously following the angels' complex directions, which filtered and distilled these magical concepts into material manifestation? If so, this would be a vital preparatory step that modern Enochian magicians are omitting entirely.

I grew intrigued with this idea. Given the fact that the GD/Crowley methods of Enochian magick already work so well right out of the box, how much better might these same techniques work if the magician were first prepared and attuned in a manner similar to the way Dee and Kelley had been prepared and attuned. A magician so equipped would be picking up, as it were, where the two Elizabethans left off in 1584.[30]

I was at first uneasy with this theory because it came dangerously near to destroying my comfortable philosophy of "Don't try to duplicate the magick Dee and Kelley did to receive the system—just use the system they received!" However, my inherent laziness was rewarded, and I eventually took comfort in the realization that in order to ceremonially prepare oneself to perform Enochian magick, one might not need to torturously repeat everything Dee and Kelley did to receive the Ring, the Holy Table, the Lamen, the seven Ensigns of Creation, and the Sigillum Dei Aemeth. Instead, one must simply understand and use (in a way that mirrors the preparation process) the Ring, the Holy Table, the Lamen, the seven Ensigns of Creation, and the Sigillum Dei Aemeth that they received!

This book was written to show the practicing Enochian magician how to do precisely that, and the little ritual in chapter one (and outlined in greater detail in appendix I) is the ceremony that embodies this preparation process. Like the rituals of the pentagram that prepare us for elemental magick, like the rituals of the hexagram that prepare us for planetary magick, I believe this little ceremony captures the essence of the step-by-step processes of personal alchemy that prepared and attuned Dee and Kelley.

The material is based on two series of classes that Constance and I held in our home in 2005 and 2006—visionary workings that spanned a period of just over seven months. While the class spent a considerable amount of time discussing and analyzing the magical theories that underlie these methods of preparation, most of our time was spent actually applying the techniques in a formal and ceremonial manner prior to group and individual Enochian scrying sessions.

My biggest challenge, for both the class series and writing this book, has been how best to communicate the essence of the breathtakingly intricate procedures that occupied Dee and Kelley during their years of preparation without enmeshing the reader in a time-devouring web of details. It is somewhat like trying to convey the profundity of a great cathedral without dwelling minutely on every action of every stonemason who fashioned each perfect stone. I have resolved, therefore, to stay focused on the big picture and allow the reader to wrap his or her mind around the major themes, secure in the knowledge that he or she can proceed to dissect the method of the madness—and discover further revelations—by referring to the now readily available source texts. It is very important for the reader to understand that this book was not written as a substitute for the source material but simply as a guide to the practical, self-transformational applications of this magical art. I advise those of you who may be committed to in-depth academic research of this subject not to view my book as an authoritative replacement for the original texts. Dee and Kelley's records are liberally peppered with irregularities, conflicting instructions, missing pieces, and typos. I've done my best to wade through these and be as consistent and accurate as possible. But when I say I'm going to stay focused on the big picture, that is exactly what I mean.

Are you ready to begin? If so, we need to first talk briefly about the mind of Dr. John Dee and explore the reasons why the secrets of heaven and earth were communicated to him in alphanumeric ciphers, tables, and squares.

CHAPTER FOUR

The Mind of a Cryptographer

Now first I understand what he, the sage, has said: "The world of spirits is not shut away; Thy sense is closed, thy heart is dead!"

—Faust, Act I, Scene I[31]

Are angels, spirits, and demons real? Do they have an existence apart from and outside the mind? Ever since human beings could frame thoughts into words, we have asked ourselves that question. It is an eternal debate among magicians and mystics and one that likely will never be resolved to anyone's complete satisfaction. Personally, I agree with the venerable Rabbi Lamed Ben Clifford who said, "It's all in your head. You just have no idea how big your head is."[32] Certainly every outside impression we receive is ultimately processed inside our own minds. Just keeping that fact in mind we might conclude that, where objective reality is concerned, there is no outside-of-ourselves.

In either case, in the art of magick, the magician must behave (at least for the duration of the operation) as if the spirits are independent intelligences and have an objective existence in a dimension outside his or her own mind. Dee and Kelley (who believed most fervently in a tangible heaven, hell, and the characters and events of the Bible) certainly assumed that the communicating spirits and angels were real and enjoyed an independent existence. This gave the Elizabethan partners a decided psychological edge over modern magicians, who must overcome a smug mountain of logic, rationality, and spiritual cynicism in order to even begin to operate this most naïvely romantic of spiritual art forms.

For practical purposes, it does not matter whether the magician is making contact with "spirit" intelligences from a "spirit world" or merely tapping into currently unexplainable levels in his or her own mind. If the magician is properly prepared (and operating under the right circumstance), it is indeed possible for him or her to make contact with intelligences that for all intents and purposes could be characterized (objectively or metaphorically) as angels, spirits, and demons.

No two individuals are alike, and the art of preparing oneself and arranging the right circumstances for spirit contact is unique for every magician. For us to understand the elements of Enochian magick, we will need to get a basic idea of how the spirits went about reaching the minds of Dee and Kelley—especially Dee, who was, after all, the operating magician. In fact, there are instances where the communicating intelligences indicated that they viewed the two magicians as a single entity with Kelley acting as an extension of Dee's mind. On April 28, 1582, Dee asks of the archangel Michael, "You mean us two (Dee and Kelley) to be joined so, and in mind united, as if we were one man?" and Michael answered, "Thou understandest."

As I mentioned earlier, Dee was not a particularly talented scryer. Although his diaries record several instances when he saw certain spirits and phenomena, he relied almost entirely on the visionary skills of others. This makes perfect sense to me. Dee's immense intellect was actually a magical handicap. His magnificent brain was too engaged to surrender its analytical control. His mind worked too fast, and his thoughts were too loud to hear the subtle messages from the spirits. This is not good for mystical experiences. In order for the communicating intelligences to get past Dee's constantly churning mind, they had to force him to use his mind to overcome his mind. They had to beat his brain at its own game.

And what were the favorite games of Dr. John Dee's brain? Ciphers, codes, puzzles, magick squares—these were the arts that touched Dee's sense of wonder. Had he been obsessed with music, the spirits might have communicated to him through melodies or harmonies or rhythm. Had he been a dancer, they would have communicated through elements of body movement; had he been a military man, they would have through the metaphors of battle. But he wasn't a musician or a dancer or a soldier. Dee was, at heart, a cryptographer—perhaps the best in the world—and whether he consciously realized it or not, this was how he could make contact with his subconscious mind. This is how he expected the cosmos to unveil her secrets to him. For Dr. John Dee, the secrets of the universe were codes that could be broken. Divine revelation was a matter of decipherment, and he was willing to work for it. Indeed, by working for it, he would prepare himself to receive it. Give me the raw data, and I will decode the mind of God.

Dee was already looking for that raw data the day Edward Kelley first knocked on his door. He was looking for it in the Book of Soyga.

CHAPTER FIVE

The Book of Soyga

Dee: Is my book of Soyga of any excellency?

Uriel: That book was revealed to Adam in Paradise by God's good angels . . .

Dee: . . .Oh, my great and long desire hath been to be able to read those tables of Soyga.

—JOHN DEE AND THE ARCHANGEL URIEL, MARCH 10, 1582[33]

Even before Dee met Kelley he was immersed in the study of a magical treatise written in Latin called Aldaraia sive Soyga: Tractatus Astrologico magicus or, more simply, the Book of Soyga.[34] We know that Dee was intrigued by the Book of Soyga because his diary records that it was the subject of one of the very first questions he asked of the archangel Uriel during Edward Kelley's inaugural scrying session on March 10, 1582. In later diary entries he laments that he has misplaced his Book of Soyga, and still-later entries indicate that he eventually found it.

The book is an anonymous, late-medieval grimoire of planetary, angelic, and demonic magick that is in many ways not too dissimilar from other magical treatises of the period. However, there are several things that distinguish Soyga—things that obviously made it particularly attractive to Dee. For one thing, a great deal of the text concerns itself with alphanumeric exercises and puzzles; letters with numerical, astrological, and elemental values, which are combined, recombined and reduced to form magick words (spelled forwards and backwards), all of which contain increasingly complex values and magical virtues. As we will see, this magical letter distillation process is characteristic of Enochian magick.

Perhaps most intriguing to Dee were the last eighteen leaves of Soyga. These pages contain thirty-six tables, each comprising a grid of 1,296 squares, arranged in 36 x 36 grids. Each of the tables' 1,296 squares is filled with a Latin letter. Together the tables could form a cube comprising 46,656 squares. Each of the thirty-six tables is identified by an astrological or elemental symbol; the first twenty-four are attributed (in pairs) to signs of the zodiac, the next seven to the planets, the next four to the elements (Fire, Water, Air, and Earth), and one simply to "Magistri."[35,36]

For our purposes, I impress upon the reader's mind the profound importance of alphanumerics and how much information can be encoded within a grid of a magick table. I will try to demonstrate this with a very simple illustration, shown in figure 1.

♆ A^{1}	♅ B^{2}	♄ C^{3}
♃ D^{4}	♂ E^{5}	☉ F^{6}
♀ G^{7}	☿ H^{8}	☽ I^{9}

This table is made up of nine squares. Each square contains one of nine letters, and these letters can be considered by themselves or in combination with the others to spell magical words. Each individual letter has many traditional meanings attached to it. To keep things simple, I've arbitrarily assigned just two correspondences (numerical and planetary) to each of the letters; these are shown in the corners of each lettered square. Theoretically, the number of correspondences each square can represent is nearly infinite.

For example, in this particular table, c not only represents the letter c but also the number three and all things threeish. What do I mean by threeish? One very big example is all things in the universe that exist in time and have movement, and all things that have a beginning, a middle, and an end. In this example c also represents Saturn and everything Saturnian (from wisdom and restriction to darkness, old age, and lead).

Like DNA, alphanumeric squares carry an unimaginably vast amount of information in a deceptively small package. As a resident of our 3 x 3 table, the c square also carries information drawn from its position relative to the other letters and their correspondences. Can you begin to see how much information is contained in that one little square alone? Imagine, then, the mass of complex data that could be tightly stored in a 36 x 36 x 36 square cube represented by the Book of Soyga.

I've discovered no evidence of a direct connection between the Book of Soyga and any of the magical workings that led ultimately to the reception of Enochian magick. Nevertheless, the fact remains that even before Dee met Kelley, the mechanics of the alphanumeric cipher system, as presented in Soyga, captured Dee's analytical imagination and had become part of the way he expected to receive divine information. Indeed, at every phase of Dee and Kelley's workings, alphanumeric squares and codes would play a major role.

We know Dee held the Book of Soyga in high regard and was particularly preoccupied with learning the secrets of the thirty-six tables. The magical process of the Book of Soyga (shuffling and distilling immense numbers of letters and squares into smaller and smaller bits of concentrated information) would become the modus operandi by which the spirits would ultimately communicate the secrets of Enochian magick to Dee and Kelley. It would be the method by which they received the Holy Table, the Lamen, the Ensigns of Creation, the Sigillum Dei Aemeth, the Table of Nalvage, the Elemental Tablets, and, most dramatically, the angelic language and the forty-eight calls. In a way, this process is a metaphor of the mechanics of creation itself. As Carl Sagan[37] said, "If you wish to make an apple pie from scratch, you must first create the universe." In this case, our apple pie is the manifest universe—the world as it presently exists—the world Dee and Kelley wished to understand and magically affect.

This world is the end product of a progression of cosmic events that physicists believe began with an immeasurably dense singularity (containing all the potential information that would eventually become the universe) that burst open and set into motion the phases of creation. The immensely packed assembly of thirty-six 36 x 36 alphanumeric squares found in the Book of Soyga is a crude but appropriate model for such a singularity. The intricate process of combining, shuffling, and distilling information-packed squares magically mimics the astronomical processes by which atoms and elements to stars and planets were formed in the creation cycle from seemingly chaotic units of a potential universe.

The Book of Soyga did not play a direct role in the magical operations of Dee and Kelley, but the patterns and formulae it embodied would remain the methodology of their angelic communications until the end of their association. I believe that the two magicians, by taking part in this incremental process of creation, became personally attuned to the magical universe as it presently exists, and thus prepared themselves to receive and engage in Enochian magick. In the chapters that follow, I will present only the briefest snapshots of the step-by-step process that I believe was the attunement program that prepared Dee and Kelley to receive the Enochian magick system. Hopefully, by your participation in the process, you also will undergo (however vicariously) a similar transformational experience and become fully prepared to actually practice Enochian vision magick.

But first, let us pray.

CHAPTER SIX

Let Us Pray

No man should ever undertake any great or important undertaking without first invoking the blessing of God.

—Master's admonition, California Free and Accepted Masons

The whole secret may be summarized in these four words: "Inflame thyself in praying."

—Aleister Crowley[38]

One of the most fundamental and important magical tools Dee used throughout his life was prayer. So, before we begin to examine magick rings and protective breastplates and holy tables and other such wizardly items, we need to first get something straight about prayer.

It's okay to pray. Even if you think you don't believe in the same God that Dee and Kelley believed in, it's okay to pray. I realize for many twenty-first-century magicians the word prayer carries with it unpleasant memories of childhood church and Sunday school traumas, and bedtime fears that "if I die before I wake" somebody was going to take my soul to God knows where.

In magick, prayer has nothing to do with religion. It does, however, have everything to do with the magician's grasp of facts of life in the magical world in which he or she intends to operate. Part of that reality is the mystical fact that existence itself is an expression of consciousness, and there are levels of consciousness higher and lower than the one we are currently attuned to.

By the simple act of uttering a prayer, our apparently limited consciousness reaches out and makes contact with a higher level of consciousness, and by doing so, we insert ourselves into the divine circuitry of the cosmos. As we do, part of us (a part that we might not be aware of) wakes up, as it were, and recognizes our rightful place in this circuitry.

In my book The Key to Solomon's Key,[39] I illustrate this concept using the legend of King Solomon as my example. In the excerpt below, I discuss prayer in the context of spirit evocation, but the same thoughts hold true to all forms of magick, including Enochian.

> The third chapter of the book of Kings[40] tells us that at the beginning of his reign the Lord appeared to Solomon in a vision by night and said, "Ask that which I should give you." Solomon answered:
> > "Give therefore to thy servant an understanding heart to judge thy people and to discern between good and bad; for who is able to judge this thy so great a people?" And it pleased the Lord because Solomon had asked this thing. And the Lord said to Solomon, "Because you have asked this thing and have not asked for yourself riches, neither have you asked the lives of your enemies nor have you asked for yourself long life, but have asked for yourself wisdom to discern judgment; Behold, I have done according to your words; lo, I have given you a wise and understanding heart, so that there has been none like you before you, neither shall any arise after you like you."[41]
> Before undertaking the task of ruling his people and building the Temple, Solomon doesn't begin by consulting with his inferiors (his ministers, his generals, his architects, his building-supply contractors, or labor leaders). He doesn't immediately enmesh himself in the energy-draining details of micromanaging > such a huge and important project. Instead he turns his attention upward to the highest level of the hierarchical scale of consciousness. He makes direct contact with Deity and, instead of behaving like a helpless youngster asking a parent for pocket money, he boldly makes himself available to serve as a conduit through which the Deity's infinite wisdom and understanding can pass.

> This profoundly mature and uncomplicated request is instantly granted, as if Deity had no choice but to acquiesce. A unique[42] spiritual hierarchy is created, with Solomon enthroned midway between heaven and hell—poised to work in cosmic harmony with the divine consciousness above him, poised to compel the infernal spirits to do the same.
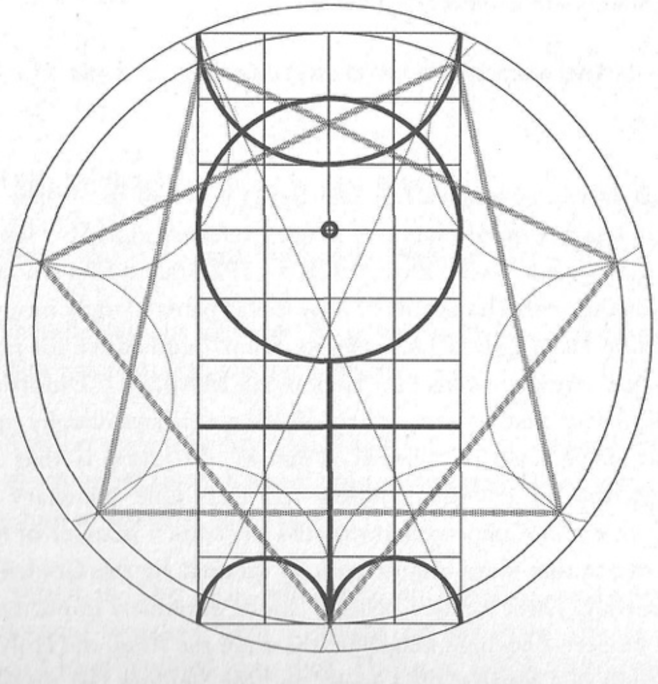
> This is the primary secret of Solomonic magic. As long as the magician remains plugged in to that which is above, he or she is simultaneously plugged into (and must begin to master) that which is below.[43]

Dee's prayers, both in English and Latin, fill page after page of his diaries and magical records. I confess I am neither inclined nor devotionally equipped to follow his exhausting example. I do, however, recognize the efficacy of prayer as an indispensable preliminary to magical operations. And, while I do not personally believe that the biblical Solomon ever existed as such in empirical history, as a magical artist I embrace his myth and happily adopt him as a patron saint of magick.

How appropriate, then, that the first magical tool Dee and Kelley would receive from their angelic contacts was the Ring of Solomon, and that before putting on that ring, the magician must first pray.

BOOK II

De Heptarchia Mystica



CHAPTER SEVEN

The Ring

Lo, this it is. This is it, wherewith all Miracles, and divine works and wonders were wrowght by Salomon.

—THE ARCHANGEL MICHAEL, MARCH 14, 1582

The first system of magick Dee and Kelley received from their angelic contacts was a form of planetary magick referred to as De Heptarchia Mystica. It was delivered mostly in late 1582 and amended somewhat the following year. The details of how it was painstakingly received are recorded in Dee's Quinti Libri Mysteriorum[44] and edited for purposes of practical working in his "De Heptarchia Mystica."[45] Unfortunately, we don't know exactly how, or even if, the magicians actually operated this particular form of magick. What we do know is that besides receiving the names and symbols for forty-nine planetary "good angels" Dee and Kelley were instructed to create a number of magical items—items that were almost entirely ignored by the Golden Dawn and Crowley. These items, I believe, can be extremely important tools for the modern Enochian magician; these are the Ring, the Holy Table, the Ensigns of Creation, the Lamen, and the Sigillum Dei Aemeth.

First we need to examine the Ring, for without the Ring the magicians were told they could "do nothing." Unlike most other things they would receive from their angelic contacts, the Ring was delivered in a relatively straightforward manner.

I will not quote long passages from Dee's records, but his description of the circumstances surrounding the reception of the magic Ring are so colorfully dramatic that I cannot resist quoting a brief passage. The date is Wednesday, March 14, 1582. Dee and Kelley were engaged in their fourth action[46] and experiencing a close encounter with the archangels Michael and Uriel. (The following excerpt retains the inconsistent spelling and punctuation of Elizabethan English. The Greek delta, Δ, is Dee, "Mi" the archangel Michael.)

> Δ: Now Michael thrust out his right arme, with the sword: and bad the skryer to loke. Then his sword did seame to cleave in two: and a great fyre, flamed out of it, vehemently. Then he toke a ring out of the flame of his sworde: and gave it, to Uriel: and sayd, thus:
> Mi: The strength of God, is unspeakable. Praysed be god for ever and ever.
> Δ: Then Uriel did make cursy unto him.
> Mi: After this sort, must thy ring be: Note it.
> Δ: Then he rose, or disapeared, out of the chayre, and by and by, cam again, and sayde, as followeth.
> Mi: I will reveale thee this ring: which was never revealed since the death of Salomon: with whom I was present. I was present with him in strength, and mercy.
> Lo, this it is. This is it, wherewith all Miracles, and divine works and wonders were wrowght by Salomon: This is it, which I have revealed unto thee. This is it, which Philosophie dreameth of. This is it, which the Angels skarse know. This is it, and blessed be his Name: yea, his Name be blessed for ever.

Δ: Then he layd the Ring down uppon the Table: and sayd, Note.

Δ: It shewed to be a Ring of Gold: with a seale graved in it: and had a rownd thing in the myddle of the seale and a thing like an V, throwgh the top of the circle: and an L, in the bottome: and a barr cleane throwgh it: And had these fowre letters in it, P E L E. After that, he threw the ring on the borde, or Table: and it semed to fall throwgh the Table and then he sayde, thus,

Mi: So shall it do, at thy commanndement. Without this, thow shalt do nothing. Blessed be his name, that cumpasseth all things: Wonders are in him, and his Name is WONDERFULL: His Name worketh wonders from generation, to generation.[47]

Solomon was, and remains, the archetypal magician, and his legendary exploits as a master of spirits fill the pages of traditional Jewish, Islamic, and Ethiopian religious literature. In many of the stories, his magical ring played an important role as the source of his power to control demons. I can imagine Dee and Kelley were very impressed to be given the Ring of Solomon by none other than the archangel Michael himself.

Although the ring's design is unique, the word PELE (wonder worker) is found in two books which Dee already had in his library: De Verbo Mirifico by German humanist and Hebrew scholar Johann Reuchlin and Cornelius Agrippa's Occult Philosophy. (Agrippa apparently took the term from Reuchlin.)

Dee was told the Ring should be made of pure gold. If he indeed had one made, it has not survived the centuries. Realistically, few of us today have the skill to fashion or the resources to have a golden ring custom made.[48] Nevertheless, Michael seemed adamant, "Without this, thow shalt do nothing." And so I've come to the conclusion if I'm to practice this particular art of magick, then before I do anything, I'm going to wear the Ring.

Here is the pattern for a Ring that can be made out of colored paper or poster board. I realize such material is not as impressive or romantic as pure gold. You might even think that a true magick Ring cannot be made from a scrap of paper. You might tell me you'd feel silly wearing a paper ring. If you feel this way, then I hope you won't be offended when I tell you that if you can't make a real magick Ring out of paper, then you'll not be able to make one out of gold. The same goes for the other magical items I am going to discuss in the next few chapters.

Before I practice any aspect of Enochian magick, I recite two short prayers. The first is a prayer John Dee used regularly throughout the years of his magical workings:[49]

> Teach me (O creator of all things) to have correct knowledge and understanding, for your wisdom is all that I desire. Speak your word in my ear (O creator of all things) and set your wisdom in my heart.

The second is a prayer I fashioned from the words the archangel Michael spoke to Dee and Kelley during their March 14, 1582, action:

> Behold the Ring. Lo, this it is. This is it, wherewith all miracles, and divine works and wonders were wrought by Solomon: this is it, which the Archangel Michael has revealed to me. This is it, which Philosophy dreameth of. This is it, which the Angels scarce know. This is it, and blessed be his name: yea, his Name be blessed forever. Without this I shall do nothing. Blessed be his name, that encompasses all things: Wonders are in him, and his name is WONDERFUL: PELE. His Name works wonders from generation to generation. Amen.

After reciting these prayers and putting on the Ring, I then position myself at the Holy Table and prepare to put on the Lamen.

CHAPTER EIGHT

The Lamen

Beware of wavering. Blot out suspicion of us, for we are God's creatures that have reigned, do reign, and shall reign forever. All our Mysteries shall be known unto you.

—The Angel Bralges, one of the angelic princes named on the Lamen, November 16, 1582, Prince Bralges, November 16, 1582[50]

The Lamen and the Holy Table are inextricably linked. By wearing the Lamen over the heart, the magician becomes linked to the Holy Table. I cannot say it any plainer than that. But putting on the Lamen and sitting at the Holy Table are empty gestures unless the magician has some idea of what these items represent and how they are connected.

The designs for both the Lamen and the Holy Table were distilled from tables composed of letters of the names of planetary angels of the Heptarchia. Even though the chronology of their reception is a bit tangled, it is probably easiest to discuss the Lamen first.

Traditionally a Lamen is a breastplate that is hung from the neck by a chain or ribbon. The breastplate of the high priest of Israel is the biblical archetype for this most important piece of magical adornment. It was a square plate, a 3 x 4 grid embedded with twelve precious stones representing, among other twelveish concepts, the tribes of Israel and the signs of the zodiac. The Lamen that the angels delivered to Dee and Kelley contained no precious stones but displayed eighty-four angelic letters arranged in a most curious and exacting manner.

Two versions of the Lamen were received by Dee and Kelley. The first, delivered in 1582, was a rather odd assortment of lines, squiggles, and letters reminiscent of Solomonic or Goetic sigils. This Lamen, they were told, was to be made in gold and worn as a protective device. After receiving it, the magicians spent the rest of the year and part of 1583 receiving material relating to the forty-nine planetary good angels of the Heptarchia (see figure 5).

The seven-letter names of these angels were received (much to Dee's cryptographic delight, I'm sure) by the complex manipulation and distillation of letters from a cross-shaped table composed of seven 7 x 7 tables (343 squares in all, each containing a number and a letter). This process was dictated by the archangel Michael during a grueling three-hour session. Just to give you an idea of the shape and size of this table, I've included a rough image without the letters and numbers.

The magicians were then instructed how to organize and arrange these 343 letters to reveal the hierarchy of planetary good angels. Each of the seven planetary spheres was assigned a king, a prince, and five ministers. Figure 5 shows how the 343 letters form the names of the forty-nine good angels and how they are arranged according to planet (starting at the top of the wheel and working counterclockwise: Venus, Luna, Saturn, Mercury, Jupiter, Mars, Sol). Note also that only the names of the kings and princes are in all capital letters.

It is obvious from the surviving material that some technique of practical magic was intended to call forth the heptarchic kings, princes, and ministers. Illustrations of flat wooden disks containing the names of the kings and other unexplained characters tantalize us with glimpses of an organized magical system. But the sad fact remains that important source material that could shed light on this has not survived the centuries.

However, just as amber encapsulates and preserves the essence of a prehistoric insect (right down to the DNA), so too the Lamen and the Holy Table capture the distilled essence of the heptarchic hierarchy and system.

After receiving the names, sigils, and hierarchical structures of the forty-nine good angels, the magicians were informed that the first Lamen they received during their actions the previous year was a false one, delivered to them by an "illuding spirit." They were given instructions how to create a new one, which was to be worn not for protection per se, but in order to "dignify" the magicians as worthy practitioners of this form of magick.

I'm going to try to illustrate (as painlessly as possible) how both the Lamen and the Holy Table were created and why I believe their use in Enochian magick is important. Now, the reader might be tempted to skim over the following material, invoking my slogan, "Don't try to duplicate the magick Dee and Kelley did to receive the system—just use the system they received." But I beg you to resist that temptation. By following through (even halfheartedly) the methods by which these magical tools were constructed, you will slip, however subtly, into the divine creative stream that produced them. You will become part of the same process that programmed and prepared Dee and Kelley.

The key to the construction of the Lamen was a 12 x 7 table containing the letters of the names (minus the initial b[51]) of the seven planetary heptarchic kings and their princes (see figure 6).

Mimicking the cooling phases of Big Bang creation, this 12 x 7 table was condensed from the 343 lettered squares of the much larger cross-shaped table (see figure 4).

As you can see, the names of the kings are found on the right half of the table, the names of the princes on the left half. The names in this table are read from right to left. You will immediately notice that the kings of one planet are not matched on the same line as the prince of the same planet (e.g., the sun ☉ king, Bobogel, is set on the same line with the Venus ♀ prince, Bornogo, instead of on the line of the sun ☉ prince, Befafes).[52] This odd juxtaposition of planetary king and prince puts a certain strain on the sensitivities of those of us who like the order of our universe nice and symmetrical. However, this is the arrangement the angels insisted upon for the 12 x 7 table from which the Lamen was to be formed. As we will soon see in the following chapter, they will rectify the imbalance in the 12 x 7 table in order to create the Holy Table. But first let's continue to see how the Lamen is built.

The basic form of the Lamen is a table of twenty-four squares (arranged from top to bottom: 2—4—6—6—4—2) enclosed within diamond square, enclosed by a square, enclosed by a larger square.

The letters of the 12 x 7 table were applied to the Lamen by means of an exercise that first divided the table into three sections, described as flesh, heart, and skin. The letters were then transferred to the blank Lamen in three steps.

Step One: The letters of the flesh were added to the perimeter of the Lamen in their same relative positions to the 12 x 7 table.

Dee was told that the Latin letters of the finished Lamen should be translated into the angelic script. (I'll discuss the angelic alphabet a bit later.) Figure 15 shows the completed Lamen with angelic letters.

As with the Ring, gold was the material suggested for the Lamen, but it can be made from paper or poster board. The Lamen I first used was printed on both sides (Latin letters on one side, angelic script on the other) and laminated in plastic. In the area just above the top center I punched a hole through which I threaded a black ribbon.

As I put on the Lamen I utter the prayer:[53]

Behold the Lamen. As the Holy Table conciliates Heaven and Earth, let this Lamen which I place over my heart conciliate me to the Holy Table. Amen.

To understand what I mean by that prayer, we'll next need to turn our attention to the Holy Table.

CHAPTER NINE

The Holy Table

Every one of those sides must have 21 Characters: But first, at every corner make a great B.

—The Angel Il, April 28, 1583[54]

Magick tables were nothing new to Renaissance magicians. Unlike the protective circle and triangle spirit-trap apparatus used by Solomonic magicians, a properly consecrated magick table in a room transforms the entire chamber into holy ground. The table itself becomes the Holy of Holies, the place whereupon earth and heaven touch. Drawings of the period show the magician on his knees, his arms stretched in supplication, before a magick table sheltered by a conical tent.

Dee was already using a table of practice before Edward Kelley entered the picture, but afterwards, as the elements of the heptarchic magick developed, it became clear that the communicating spirits wanted Dee to customize his table in a most specific manner. The angels wanted the Holy Table to be an "instrument of conciliation," made of "sweet wood,"[55] and built two cubits square and two cubits high.[56] The table was to stand upon a carpet of red silk that was large enough to accommodate the scryer's chair. Once the Sigillum Dei Aemeth and the seven Ensigns of Creation were in position, the Holy Table was covered by a red silk cloth with gold tassels that hung from the corners.

The scrying stone or black mirror was then placed upon the covered Sigillum.

The public's first view of the Holy Table (sometimes referred to as the Table of Covenant or Table of Practice) was published in 1659 by Meric Casaubon in his A True & Faithful Relation . . . .[57] It was Casaubon's image that was reproduced in 1912 in Aleister Crowley's magazine The Equinox[58] and numerous books since then.

It may come as a surprise to many (and be highly amusing to others) that Casaubon's impressively printed image of the Holy Table is perhaps the greatest flaw in his liberally flawed and ill-titled A True & Faithful Relation. One look at the description and drawing in Dee's Quinti Libri Mysteriorum: Appendix[59] reveals the eighty-four letters that form the border of the Holy Table and the twelve letters that fill the 3 x 4 center square of Casaubon's image are printed in backward order. Figures 16 and 19 illustrate the correct arrangement of the letters on the Holy Table.

The Holy Table and the Lamen are inextricably linked. By wearing the Lamen, the magician is linked, or conciliated, to the Holy Table. The object that forms this magical link and serves as the common denominator between the Holy Table and Lamen is the same 12 x 7 table that was used to construct the Lamen—the same table that bore the names of the seven planetary kings and the seven planetary princes of the heptarchic hierarchy.

Did I say the same 12 x 7 table? That's not entirely accurate.

Recall that when we were discussing the 12 x 7 table in the previous chapter, something appeared out of whack. The names of the planetary kings did not share the same lines as their planetary counterpart prince (e.g., the sun ☉ king, Bobogel, is set on the same line with the Venus ♀ prince, Bornogo, instead of his sun ☉ prince, Befafes). This planetary mismatch in the 12 x 7 table's construction did not appear to bother the angels, and indeed the "flaw" seemed to be a vital characteristic of the Lamen.

As you can see in Figure 17, the version of the 12 x 7 table that is the key to the Holy Table "corrects" this imbalance by rearranging the names of the planetary kings to match those of the princes of the same planet. Furthermore, the table is reversed, so that the kings now occupy the left side of the table and princes the right, and the direction in which the names are read is reversed to read from left to right.

In my mind, the differences between the two 12 x 7 tables demonstrate a fundamental fact of life—the fact that even though human beings are an integral part of the hierarchy of spiritual beings, we currently find ourselves "on earth," trapped in a tomb of matter and to all appearances separated from the greater realities of the spiritual "heavens."

Qabalists tell us that we are created in the image of Deity—that we are, in the truest sense, a little reflection (a microcosm) of the great intelligence and creative force that creates, sustains, and destroys all things in the universe (the macrocosm). As Hermes Trismegistus said, "As above, so below."

That's all fine and good, and I go about my magical business as if it were true. But honestly, even though I'm composed of the same material that makes up the sun and moon and stars and angels and archangels and the supreme Deity, even though I am striving for self-awareness and do my best to be a divinely creative individual, still I don't feel much like the macrocosmic Deity. Compared to the macrocosm, my microcosm is way out of whack. My life is one of stress and imbalance. From where I stand, there is a very big break between Deity's above and Lon Milo DuQuette's below. I'm like the 12 x 7 table from which the Lamen is created: I've got all the condensed components of a perfectly tuned universe in me, but they are out of sync just enough to keep me from actually being the perfect reflection of the big "way things are."

I can really identify with the way the Lamen is constructed. Like it, my hierarchy of planets is mismatched and unbalanced. (Take one look at my astrological chart if you don't believe it!) Like the curious inconsistencies that characterize how the individual letters are transferred from the 12 x 7 table to the Lamen, my individual components are a litany of curious inconsistencies.

The 12 x 7 table that makes the Holy Table, on the other hand, sets this all straight. It is like the macrocosm showing the microcosm how it's done. As I sit before the Holy Table with the Lamen over my heart, I can almost feel the Holy Table's order and perfection pulling magnetically at my heart through the Lamen, connecting me by an almost tangible electric current to the Holy of Holies, pulling my heart and my attention toward the sacred spot in my living-room temple where heaven touches earth. The Holy Table is indeed an instrument of conciliation, an instrument of reunion.[60]

The letters of the 12 x 7 table are transferred to the Holy Table in the following manner. First, to make things a little easier to see let's turn the 12 x 7 table on its end.

The border of the Holy Table is first segmented into twenty-one cells per side. Per angelic instructions, the sacred letter B is placed in the four corners, and then the letters of the 12 x 7 table are inserted in the remaining cells as indicated by the four sets of arrows on figure 18. The 3 x 4 square in the center of the Holy Table is extracted from the central heart of the 12 x 7 table, as highlighted in figure 18.

The arrows around the edges of figure 19 (see page 54) show that the letters are arranged to generate a counterclockwise whirl. In the Ritual of Preparation of chapter one, I chant seven rounds of the perimeter letters in this order using the angelic pronunciation. I also do the same for the twelve letters of the center square. By doing so, I effectively activate the Holy Table and the objects that sit upon it (including the Sigillum Dei Aemeth, the Ensigns of Creation, and the skrying mirror). The chant affects a powerful shift in consciousness unlike anything I have experienced before in magical practice.

As the manifest universe is the evolving end product of the dynamic forces that created it, so too the Holy Table manifests on earth as the perfect miniature working model of the heavenly matrix. It is a magical machine with many moving parts, all in perpetual motion.

the border of the Holy Table circumscribe the other objects on the tabletop with an eternal counterclockwise movement around the outside of the table's hexagram (symbol of the macrocosm).

Within, the twelve angelic letters in the 3 x 4 square in the center of the Holy Table's hexagram churn with the dynamics of the up-down/right-left movement suggested by its four rows of three letters networked with its three columns of four letters.

The Lamen is born of the same alphanumeric codes as the Holy Table, but its construction is flawed by a slight imbalance. So too the magician, in his or her present state, is the seemingly flawed *micro*cosmic reflection of Deity. By wearing the Lamen, the imperfect magician is linked to the perfection of the Holy Table, and while in this exalted state may become privy to the secrets of the *macro*cosmic universe.

CHAPTER TEN

The Sigillum Dei Aemeth

Seven, rest in 7: and the 7, live by 7: The 7, govern the 7: And by 7 all Government is.

—The Archangel Michael, March 20, 1582[61]

The design of Dee's Sigillum Dei Aemeth ("the seal of God's truth") is perhaps the most recognizable image of Enochian magick. It is a powerful magical device, alive with the angelic forces of an ordered universe in which "Seven, rest in Seven: and the Seven, live by Seven: The Seven, govern the Seven: And by Seven all Government is."

Unlike the hierarchies of the Lamen and the Holy Table, the Sigillum's hierarchy of angels was not condensed, distilled, or otherwise generated from the seven 12 x 7 tables from which the names of the forty-nine good angels were drawn. Nevertheless, the Sigillum is the centerpiece of heptarchic magick and is the object through which all heptarchic energy (if we dare call it that) is focused.

The Sigillum itself was a disk nine inches in diameter and approximately an inch and a half thick. It was made of pure beeswax and placed in the center of the Holy Table. The scrying crystal or black mirror was placed upon it. Four smaller wax versions were placed beneath small boxes, upon which stood the four legs of the Holy Table.

Dee was first told to simply copy the design from a book he already had in his library. But Dee had at least two volumes[62] that contained designs for sigilla. He couldn't make up his mind which one to use, so he asked for further clarification. The angel then gave instructions how to construct an entirely new sigillum based on the format of the others but adding an array of heavenly personages: seven god names enclosing seven sets of angelic names.

It is clear to me that the construction of the Sigillum was a vital step in Dee and Kelley's preparation program and that construction can serve that same important purpose to the modern magician as well. I'm going to walk you through the steps of how it is constructed, because I hope readers who are serious about actually doing magick, rather than merely studying it, will want to build their own.

I've provided you with a blank sigillum (figure 21), and I encourage you to make multiple photocopies of it. Enlarge it, if you wish, to nine inches in diameter. Then follow the step-by-step instructions. As you do, you will not only be building this magical device on paper, but you also will be installing it inside yourself. Constructing your own Sigillum Dei Aemeth is the fastest and easiest way I know to meet and connect with the angelic forces resident in the design and make them part of you. It may take you several tries to get it all right, but I'm confident when you have completed your Sigillum you will think it worth the effort.

Building the Sigillum

Step One: The Seven God Names

The seven god names were drawn from numbers and letters that appear in the forty cells that make up the perimeter of the Sigillum. The magicians were told to divide the outer perimeter of a blank ring into four sections. Then they were to divide each of the four sections into ten (making forty cells in all). Kelley then had a dramatic and colorful vision, facilitated by the archangel Michael, with the help of Uriel and the angel Semiael. In this vision, forty angels stepped forth, one at a time, and parted their garments to reveal one of three things:

1. a number positioned above a letter,
2. a letter positioned above a number, or
3. a single letter.

Some of the letters were capitalized, but most were lowercase. As they revealed their letters and numbers, each of the forty angels also uttered a different pious declaration in Latin, such as, "O God, God, our God, blessed are you, now and forever" or "And you are true in your works." Then the angel disappeared or was consumed in flashes of fire or other such dramatics. The magicians were then left with a string of numbers and letters, which I've arranged in a table (see figure 22).

←	4	9	7	t	22		6	22	20	14	6		18	26	l		l	7	13	H		y	t	o	e	10	11	15	8	r		6	o	5	h	o		a	a	6
→	T	G	n	9	h	n	m	o	a	n	a	h	o	l	30	n	8	G	r	12	og	15	11	8	21	b	A	I	a	16	n	A	10	G	14	17	s	5	24	ω
	*	*																*		*								*				*		*

Figure 22: Outer perimeter bar code (the lowercase letter l is italicized so as to not be confused with uppercase I*)*

First make sure your blank Sigillum is oriented so that the pentagram in the center is pointing toward the top of the page. Then refer to figure 23 and locate the topmost cell of the Sigillum's outer perimeter—the cell that contains the number 4 over the capital letter T. Fill in that cell with a 4 over a T. Then, referring to the table (figure 22) and moving clockwise, fill in the remaining thirty-nine cells of the outer perimeter of your blank Sigillum as you see them in figure 23.

From the letters and numbers of the perimeter the seven god names and their sigils are drawn. The starting points for the god names are the cells that contain capital letters. These are also identified in figure 22 with asterisks beneath them.

From those starting points, note the number inside the cell and count your way to find the next letter in the god name. You count clockwise when the number in the cell is positioned above the letter, and you count counterclockwise when the letter is positioned above the number. Keep counting until you reach a cell that contains a letter but no number. That will be the last letter of that particular god name. It's almost like turning the dial of a combination lock, and, indeed, that's exactly what you're doing.

Confused? Don't be. It's much easier to actually do it than describe it. Just keep figure 23 in front of you as you follow the directions that follow.

Galas

Starting at the cell with 9/G in it (near the top of the circle), count nine cells clockwise (because the number is above) to 6/a. From there, count six cells clockwise to l/8. Count eight cells counterclockwise (because the letter is above) to 20/a. Count twenty cells clockwise to 8/a. Count eight cells clockwise to the single letter s. Because there is no number assigned to the s cell, we know that s is the final letter to this god name.

When all the counting is done, we have spelled the god name Galaas. The archangel Michael would later advise Dee and Kelley to alter the spelling (an archangel's prerogative) to Galas.

Michael assigned Galas a characteristic sigil and a number (see figure 24). He also instructed that the sigil and number of Galas should be placed on the Sigillum, in the area between the perimeter of cells and the outer bar of the heptagon at approximately the eleven o'clock position (see figure 32). Although a connection is not mentioned overtly in the original material, the god name Galas and its sigil are generally considered by many modern Enochian magicians to be associated with the qabalistic planetary sphere of Saturn.

Gethog

Starting with 7/G (near the bottom of the circle), count seven cells clockwise to e/21. Count twenty-one cells counterclockwise to t/9. Count nine cells counterclockwise to h/14. Count fourteen cells counterclockwise to the unnumbered letters og to finish the god name Gethog.

Michael assigned Gethog the sigil and number shown in figure 25 and instructed that they should be placed on the Sigillum in the area between the perimeter of cells and the outer bar of the heptagon at approximately nine o'clock (see figure 32). Although a connection is not mentioned overtly in the original material, the god name Gethog and its sigil are generally considered by many modern Enochian magicians to be associated with the qabalistic planetary sphere of Jupiter.

Thaoth

Starting with 4/T (near the top of the circle), count four cells clockwise to 22/h. Count twenty-two cells clockwise (because the number 22 is on top) to 11/A. Count eleven cells clockwise to a/5. Count five cells counterclockwise to o/10. Count ten cells counterclockwise to t/11. Count eleven cells counterclockwise to the cell that contains the single letter h to finish the god name ThAaoth.

Again using his archangel's prerogative, Michael later advised Dee to slightly alter the spelling to Thaoth. He also assigned Thaoth the sigil and number shown in figure 26 and instructed that they should be placed on the Sigillum in the area between the perimeter of cells and the outer bar of the heptagon at approximately seven o'clock (see figure 32). Although a connection is not mentioned overtly in the original material, the god name Thaoth and its sigil are generally considered by many modern Enochian magicians to be associated with the qabalistic planetary sphere of Mars.

Horlωn

Starting with H/12 (near the bottom of the circle), count twelve cells counterclockwise to 22/o. Count twenty-two cells clockwise to r/16. Count sixteen cells counterclockwise to 26/l. Count twenty-six cells clockwise to 6/ω.[63] Count six cells clockwise to single letter n, producing the god name Horlωn.

Michael assigned Horlωn the sigil and number shown in figure 27 and instructed that they should be placed on the Sigillum in the space between the perimeter of cells and the outer bar of the heptagon at six o'clock (see figure 32). Although a connection is not mentioned overtly in the original material, the god name Horlωn and its sigil are generally considered by many modern Enochian magicians to be associated with the qabalistic planetary sphere of Sol.

Innon

Starting with 15/I (near the left-hand side of the circle), count fifteen cells clockwise to 7/n. Count seven cells clockwise to 14/n. Count fourteen cells clockwise to o/8. Count eight cells counterclockwise to the single letter n, producing the name Innon.

Michael assigned Innon the sigil and number shown in figure 28 and instructed that they should be placed on the Sigillum in the area between the perimeter of cells and the outer bar of the heptagon at approximately four o'clock (see figure 32). Although a connection is not mentioned overtly in the original material, the god name Innon and its sigil are generally considered by many modern Enochian magicians to be associated with the qabalistic planetary sphere of Venus.

Aaoth

With Aaoth, you have your choice of either (1) starting at 11/A (near the left-hand side of the circle) and counting eleven cells clockwise to a/5 or (2) starting with 6/A (near the left-hand side of the circle) and counting six cells clockwise to a/5.

In either case, once you get to a/5, count five cells counterclockwise to o/10. Count ten cells counterclockwise to t/11. Count eleven cells counterclockwise to finish at h, producing the god name Aaoth.

Michael assigned Aaoth the sigil and number shown in figure 29 and instructed that they should be placed on the Sigillum in the space between the perimeter of cells and the outer bar of the heptagon at approximately two o'clock (see figure 32). Although a connection is not mentioned overtly in the original material, the god name Aaoth and its sigil are generally considered by many modern Enochian magicians to be associated with the qabalistic planetary sphere of Mercury.

Galethog

Starting at 5/G (near the left-hand side of the circle), count five cells clockwise to a/24. Count twenty-four cells counterclockwise to l/30. Count thirty cells counterclockwise to e/21. Count twenty-one cells counterclockwise to t/9. Count nine cells counterclockwise to h/14. Count fourteen cells counterclockwise to the single letters og, producing the name Galethog.

Michael assigned Galethog the sigil shown in figure 30 and instructed that they should be placed on the Sigillum in the area between the perimeter of cells and the outer bar of the heptagon at approximately one o'clock (see figure 32). Although a connection is not mentioned overtly in the original material, the god name Galethog and its sigil are generally considered by many modern Enochian magicians to be associated with the qabalistic planetary sphere of Luna.

These seven god names—Galas, Gethog, Thaoth, Horlωn, Innon, Aaoth, and Galethog—are distilled into one supreme name. Strangely enough, the great name is also spelled Galethog. The code that reveals this distillation can be found on those little numbers that appear beside six of the sigils of the god names. Let's take a look at the supreme god name as it appears with the sigils.

Obviously, the sigils of the divine names contain the stylized letters G, a, l, xe, t, and og. The little numbers beside the letters point out seven landmarks among the forty cells: 5/G, a/24, l/30, e/21, t/9. Og has no number attached to it, confirming that it is the end of the supreme god name.

Step Two: The Seven God Names of the Outer Heptagon and of the Planetary Archangels

A heptagon (a seven-sided figure) rests just inside the perimeter of the Sigillum. Each of the seven bars that compose the heptagon is divided into seven cells and is filled with the names of the next order of angels in the hierarchy of the Sigillum. These seven names were drawn from a 7 x 7 (sevenfold) table delivered to Dee and Kelley in a series of brief and colorful visions (see figure 33).

The names are read horizontally and are inserted in the bars of the outer heptagon as shown in figure 34.

When the table is read vertically, however, the names of the seven classic planetary archangels appear:

Zaphkiel	(Saturn)
Cumael	(Mars)
Haniel	(Venus)
Gabriel	(Luna)
Zadkiel	(Jupiter)
Raphael	(Sol)
Michael	(Mercury)

These archangels were assigned to these planets many years before Dee and Kelley received them and could have been found in any number of books in Dee's library. However, Dee and Kelley insisted that the table was given to them before they noticed these names were generated by the table. Whether we choose to believe their assertion or not, the fact remains that these particular angels are not unique to the Enochian system.

In order to read each archangel's name using the seven god names on the bars of the heptagon, we are obliged to project the letters in progressive layers rising from the surface of the Sigillum itself. I wish I could graphically illustrate this using the modern magick of animation, but you can demonstrate this for yourself. Let's turn to the first table in figure 35 and use the name of the planetary archangel of Saturn, Zaphkiel, as our example.

Start with the capital Z found in the first cell of the name ZllRHia, then move to the first cell of the name aZCaacb (to pick up the a), then move to the first cell of the name paupnhr (to pick up the p), then move to the first cell of hdmhlaI (to pick up the h), then move to the first cell of Kkaaeee to pick up the K, then move to the first cell of eellMG (to pick up the e). Finally, move to the second cell of the ZllRHia bar of the heptagon and pick up the final l to spell Zaphkiel.

I hope you can visualize what happens every time you move to another bar of the heptagon to pick up a letter in the archangel's name. As you move, you are literally shifting the dimensional structure of the Sigillum up another level—in the case of Zaphkiel, eight levels in all (see figure 36). (Picture the multilevel chess game played by characters on Star Trek.)

Compound this with the fact that Zaphkiel's name is braided together in these same layers with the names of the six other archangels' names. Viewed this way, the Sigillum is no longer a flat image placed on the flat surface of the Holy Table. It is a multidimensional space hovering over the Holy Table—a magical basket formed of the netting of the entwined letters of the names of the seven planetary archangels. It is within this invisible basket that the scrying stone or black mirror is placed during the magical operation. Is it any wonder visions appear in such an environment?

But we're far from through with the wonders of the Sigillum. Fill the cells of your personal Sigillum's outer heptagon, and then let's move inward another step.

Step Three: The Seven Names of the Planetary Angels Beneath the Bars of the Outer Heptagon

Just inside the bars of the outer heptagon are seven more divine names. These names are drawn from a second 7 x 7 (sevenfold) table given to Dee and Kelley, letter by letter, in vision. These names are read horizontally and placed beneath the bars of the outer heptagon.

I	H	R	L	A	A	$\overset{21}{\underset{\cdot}{8}}$

You will immediately notice some of the squares in this table contain tiny numbers (21 over 8, 8, 26, 30, and so on) and variously placed dots. These are added to indicate the addition of the letter l or letters el or al (angelic suffixes) to the letter in the square, the better to spell out the names of the various angels this table will produce.

These names of these seven great angels are added to the Sigilum as shown in figure 38.

Step Four: The Daughters of the Light

Five more sets of planetary angels are drawn from the second sevenfold table. The first set was revealed in vision by seven young women (called "Daughters of Light" or "Women") clad in green silk. Each bore a little blue tablet on her forehead that identified her by name: El, Me, Ese, Iana, Akele, Azdobn, and Stimcul.

The names of the Daughters of Light are drawn from the second sevenfold table by reading the upper right section of the table in a diagonal, downward direction.

Although the angels were not identified with planets in the original material, the manner in which the vision proceeded to reveal these names suggests these seven angels carry the following planetary assignments:

Akele	Venus	Azdobn	Mercury
Stimcul	Luna

The names of the Daughters of Light are placed on the Sigillum in clockwise order in the points created by the interlocking lines of the heptagram (see figure 40).

Step Five: The Sons of the Light

Next came seven young men (called the "Sons of the Light" or "Men") dressed in white, each carrying a metal ball: the first ball was gold, the second silver, the third copper, the fourth tin, the fifth iron, the sixth quicksilver, and the seventh lead. Each had a tablet of gold on his breast that identified him by name: I, Ih, Ilr, Dmal, Heeoa, Beigia, and Stimcul.

The names of the Sons of Light are drawn from the second sevenfold table by reading the lower left section of the table in a diagonal, downward direction.

Step Eight: The Planetary Angels of the Pentagram

Finally, Dee and Kelley were instructed in a relatively straightforward manner how to arrange the names of seven planetary angels—Sabathiel (Saturn), Zedekiel (Jupiter), Madimiel (Mars), Semeliel (Sol), Nogahel (Venus), Corabiel (Mercury), and Lavanael (Luna)—around a pentagram at the very center of the Sigillum. These seven names are also drawn from the second sevenfold table by reading it in a zigzag manner, illustrated in figure 47.

Because the original Dee and Kelley material does not confirm the planetary attributions to all the various names on the Sigillum, I will not presume to do so either. I have, however, created a chart (see figure 49) that I currently use to help me in my meditations on the subject. I offer it along with the key to reading the names of planetary archangels from the first sevenfold table.

Step Nine: The Crosses

Once the names of these angels were placed around the central pentagram, a number of tiny crosses were added to the Sigillum in a curiously inconsistent manner (see figure 50).

And now your Sigillum is nearly complete. The only thing left to add is the design on the back. It is a very simple image of a cross dominating a small circle, around which are the letters of the divine word AGLA (an acronym for the Hebrew phrase Ateh Gibor Le-olam Adonai, "the Lord is mighty forever.")

Years ago, on a Christmas morning, I melted the stubs of scores of candles into a round Christmas cookie tin.[64] After the wax cooled and hardened, I removed the wax disk from the tin and set to work carving my own Sigillum. Other magicians I know have sealed their drawings of the Sigillum upon wooden disks that they purchased for pennies at a crafts store, or glued the image to foam board. Whatever the medium, I think the presence of the Sigillum is an important factor in creating the magical environment conducive to Enochian vision magick.

There is so much more the angels told Dee and Kelley about the Sigillum, including suggestions for how every letter in each of the names contains a set of angels, and on and on by sevens by sevens. I encourage you to continue your exploration of the Sigillum's mysteries. But now we must move on to the seven Ensigns of Creation, where I promise you a much shorter journey.

CHAPTER ELEVEN

The Ensigns of Creation

Of these seven tables, characters, or scotcheons. Consider the words spoken in the fifth book Anno 1583, April 2nd. How they are proper to every King and prince in their order. They are Instruments of Conciliation.

—John Dee, footnote to Quinti Libri Mysteriorum: Liber Tertius

The Ensigns of Creation are seven planetary talismans designed to be positioned on the Holy Table in a circle surrounding the Sigillum Dei Aemeth or laid out in a line along the edge of the table nearest the scryer. They were to be made of purified tin or else painted directly upon the Holy Table. Like the Lamen and the Holy Table, they are "Instruments of Conciliation" connected to the Heptarchia planetary kings and princes in a manner that, I must confess, is not altogether clear to me.

Five of them are square tables containing squares filled with numbers, letters, crosses, and lines. Two ensigns are a circle surrounded by a square. The letter B (Pa in the angelic language) is by far the most used letter in the ensigns.

The ensigns originally displayed Latin letters. The communicating angel would later insist that the Latin letters be replaced with the corresponding characters of the angelic script (see chapter fourteen). Dee was reluctant to do this and even asked the angel if he really had to. The angel said he must. We don't know if he ever did.

It is clear that the ensigns were to be utilized ritualistically, such as being held in the magician's hand during prayers or invocations. But information on exactly how things were to be done is incomplete, and there are no records whatsoever of Dee and Kelley actually performing rituals of heptarchic magick.

However, the ensigns remain part of the Holy Table ensemble, and their subsequent connection to the table and the magician's own Lamen make them, in my opinion, an integral component of the hierarchical current that charges the holy ground of the Enochian magick temple.

Figures 53 and 54 show the ensigns lettered in the angelic script. To my knowledge, this is the first time the ensigns have appeared in print in their correct form.[65] As with the Ring, Holy Table, Lamen, and Sigillum, the ensigns can be reproduced in paper board or whatever material is at the magician's disposal.

Figure 55 shows the positions in which the ensigns are placed on the Holy Table around the Sigillum. Note they are positioned near the points of the Sigillum's heptagram.

The entire assembly is one big magical machine—the Sigillum resting like a sevenfold, multidimensional dynamo in the center of the Holy Table's swirling and churning angels and the circling Ensigns of Creation. The scrying stone or black mirror is placed upon the Sigillum at the very heart of this magnificent instrument like the monitor screen of a magical computer connected to the ultimate worldwide-web.

We have made only the tiniest scratch on the surface of Dee and Kelley's material of this period. There is much more information concerning De Heptarchia Mystica available to the serious student, and I encourage the reader who feels drawn to this system to make the effort. I know it is only a matter of time before some bright magician fine-tunes, perfects, and transforms the material into a workable magical system.

The focus of this book, however, is Enochian vision magick, and we must now move on to the second phase of Dee and Kelley's magical operations. Through our understanding of the Ring, the Lamen, the Holy Table, the Sigillum Dei Aemeth, and the Ensigns of Creation and of their construction, we have prepared ourselves to meet with angels on the holy ground of our temple.

CHAPTER TWELVE

Do I Need All This Stuff?

Never since the beginning of the world was this secret delivered, nor this holy mystery set open, before the weaklings of this world.

—THE ANGEL IL, APRIL 29, 1583

The question I'm sure many of you are asking at this point is, "Do I need all this stuff?"

During the classes that I conducted in our home in 2005 and 2006 (with experienced magicians) and subsequent day-long workshops I've conducted around the country with people having little or no prior magical experience) it has become abundantly clear to me that the magical objects and "furniture" Dee and Kelley received during the Heptarchia periods (the Ring, the Holy Table, the Lamen, the Ensigns of Creation, and the Sigillum Dei Aemeth) can and should be formally employed in order to create the specific environment of consciousness conducive to the practice of angelic vision magick.

Furthermore, it has been my observation that regular and repeated activation of this magical "temple" by means of the little ritual outlined in chapter one (and laid out more fully in appendix I) can attune the magician to this uniquely ordered universe and serve to progressively strengthen and enhance his or her visionary capabilities.

Most exciting for me was the discovery that once the magician is prepared and the temple activated the angelic forces (especially the good angels resident in the Holy Table, Lamen, Ensigns of Creation, and the planetary angels resident in the Sigillum) can be individually called forth or visited by means of classic evocation techniques or even informal extemporaneous prayers and conjurations. In other words, I believe that even if he or she never went on to practice Enochian magick per se, a resourceful magician, willing to experiment, and armed with a proper understanding of the tools and formulae of the Heptarchic periods would be already prepared to engage in angelic vision magick of a high order.

This is new territory for all of us, but it holds much promise, for it entails the possibility of contacting the same angelic forces that engaged Dee and Kelley throughout most of their day-to-day actions. Obviously, dealing with these angelic forces offers an alluring challenge for today's more intrepid magicians who, when frustrated by gaps and perplexities in the original material, will not be afraid to go straight to the communicating angels for guidance and clarification on how all this should operate. Indeed, I expect to see in the years to come exciting and viable magical systems develop as the result of the magical efforts of gifted practitioners who dare to make such angelic contact.

But do you need all this stuff?

My answer is this: In order to do this particular variety of magick you need all this stuff inside you. That's where the real magick takes place. But until such time as you have internalized all this (even in the most cursory and general manner) it is necessary to have some outward, visible, material representation of the magical concepts and forces you are dealing with.

I suggest, if you're serious about engaging in this magical art form, then you should, at the very least, provide yourself with a Ring, a Holy Table, a Lamen, a Sigillum Dei Aemeth, and the seven Ensigns of Creation. Make them out of paper if you have to. Copy them straight out of this book if you have to. But have them. Make them real to you. Consecrate them by using them. Use them to create your Enochian magick temple.

The sense of art for some magicians is stimulated by replicating as much as humanly possible the tools and procedures as outlined in ancient texts. By doing so, they achieve a level of empowerment they believe is necessary to execute the work. Personally, my sense of art is quite happy with paper rings and photocopied Holy Tables. However, I have over the years been blessed with many talented colleagues who have generously helped me equip my temple so I might better demonstrate these things to others.

Here is as good a place as any for me to pause and describe what I believe the source material suggests would transform a clean uncluttered room into the holy ground of an Enochian magick temple.

The Temple

Upon the floor in the center of the room is a square carpet of red silk cloth large enough to accommodate the Holy Table and the chair of the scryer.

Upon the silken carpet are placed four miniatures of the Sigillum Dei Aemeth, made of wax. They are covered and protected from the table legs by shallow cylindrical boxes.

Upon the box-covered sigilli rest the four legs of the Holy Table.

The Holy Table is made of sweet wood (laurel).

Upon the Holy Table, arranged as we've discussed, are the seven Ensigns of Creation (lettered in the angelic script) and the Sigillum Dei Aemeth, made of purified beeswax, nine inches in diameter and an inch and a half thick.

The Holy Table and all the objects upon it are covered by a red silk cloth with gold tassels that dangle from the corners. This cloth should match in material and color that of the red silk carpet.

Upon the covered Sigillum the scrying stone (a crystal ball) or black mirror is placed.

The scryer's chair is placed on the carpet near the table. His or her feet should touch the carpet.

The Ring and Lamen should be near. The magician should ceremonially put them on at the beginning of each session and remove them at the conclusion.

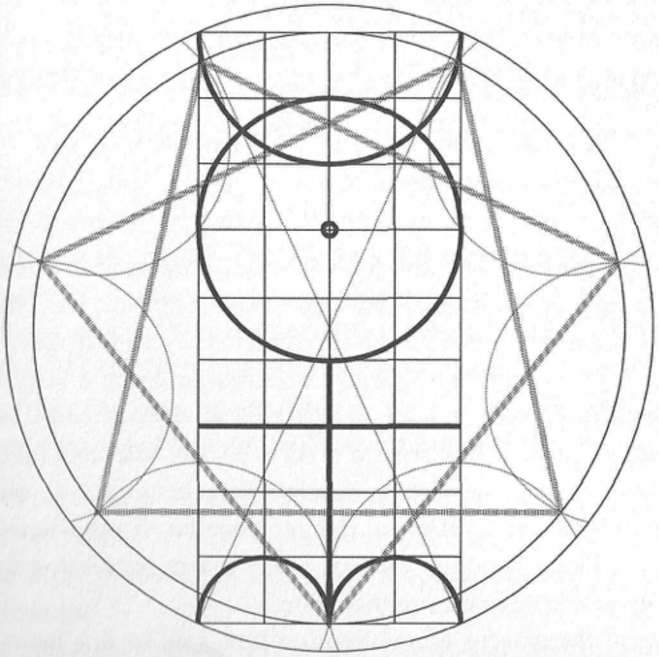
Renaissance magicians often wore crowns and white linen robes, and on one occasion in preparation for a specific working, Dee and Kelley were instructed to wear white linen robes. In an operation that took place on July 13, 1584 (at the very end of the Enochian communications), the archangel Gabriel told the magicians:

> See that your garments be clean. Herein be not rash: Nor over hasty; For those that are hasty and rash, and are loathsomely appareled, my knock long before they enter.[66]

In practical operations conducted by my Monday night class and my Enochian magick workshops, everyone is shoeless and wears comfortable street clothes. In private sessions, such as the one I described in chapter one, I put on a simple black robe. Not only does it carry with it a certain personal magical virtue, but its color does not distract from the images reflected in the black mirror as I scry.

BOOK III

Liber Loagaeth and the Angelic Alphabet



CHAPTER THIRTEEN

Liber Loagaeth

> Every element (of the book) hath 49 manner of understandings. Therein is comprehended so many languages. They are all spoken at once, and severally, by themselves, by distinction many be spoken. Until thou come to the City, thou canst not behold the beauty thereof.
> —The angel Me to John Dee, Easter Day, 1583[67]

The second phase of Dee and Kelley's magical operations remains, for the most part, a tantalizing mystery to modern students. Covering most of 1582 and 1583, it is a period characterized by considerable tension between the two magicians, but one that also produced a large body of work in the form of a book referred to at various times as Liber Mysteriorum Sextus et Sanctus, the Book of Enoch, and Liber Loagaeth.[68] While in recent years Enochian scholars have courageously set out to give us a closer examination of this information, it unfortunately has not been enough to allow modern practitioners to develop anything near a workable system from this material.

One of the reasons more attention isn't paid to this period is the nature of the material itself and the nearly complete lack of direction concerning how it is to be applied. Also, the focus of the communications of this period is driven by Dee's very personal fixation on discovering lost books of the Bible, the Apocrypha, and in particular the Book of Enoch, which is mentioned in several places in the Bible. The resulting character of Liber Loagaeth is rich in apocalyptic imagery and prophetic sounding rhetoric. This has been seized upon in recent years by commentators who would project a patently sectarian interpretation upon the material, even going so far as to suggest sinister (perhaps even Satanic or Lovecraftian) motives behind the "angelic" communications.

We are all, of course, free to our own religious convictions and spiritual worldviews. After all, they are part of the magical artist's pallet of tools. I think it wise, however, to keep in mind that when we study the Dee and Kelley material, we are not only eavesdropping on questions framed in the minds of two sixteenth-century Englishmen and put in the context of biblical literature, but we are also hearing the answers to those questions given in such a manner as these men could understand—that is, framed within the same cultural and Biblical context. I'm sure if Dee had been a Chinese alchemist or an African shaman in these same circumstances, the angels would have communicated the same universal answers unencumbered by the apocalyptic nomenclature familiar to the Jewish or Christian mind.

Joseph Peterson wrote in the introduction of his marvelous book John Dee's Five Books of Mystery:

> The importance of Liber Loagaeth cannot be overemphasized. From it would "be restored the holy bokes, which haue perished euen from the beginning, and from the first that liued." The truths it contains will end religious disputes and restore religious unity. "Which when it hath spread a while, THEN COMMETH THE END."[69] In short, it will usher in the new age. Since the book is so central to these angelic communications, it is amazing that it has remained unpublished.[70]

Amazing indeed, but as I wrote concerning De Heptarchia Mystica, it is only a matter of time before someone cracks the code of this breathtakingly immense body of work. What do I mean by breathtakingly immense?

One surviving manuscript comprises forty-eight leaves, each containing 49 x 49 lettered squares, 115,000 lettered squares in all. Each square was filled, letter-by-letter, according to Kelley's vision. In the end, the magicians were left with forty-nine calls in an angelic language. (Note: These calls were not the same calls in the angelic tongue that would come later and form the centerpiece of the Enochian phase of Dee and Kelley's partnership.) Loagaeth literally means "speech from God," and the magicians were informed that the words of the forty-nine calls were the same as those uttered by God at the dawn of creation—in the same language spoken by Adam when he named all things.

Unfortunately, these calls were never translated (or else the material has been lost), and attempts by modern linguists have failed to find enough landmarks of a properly constructed language to put the calls of Loagaeth in the same category as the angelic language that would be received in the third and final phase of the magicians' actions.

Kelley's visionary skills were severely exploited during this period, and his visions were characterized by the presence of a dazzling light that both magicians could see. The light would fly out of the scrying stone and penetrate Kelley's head, putting him in a trance in which he could read and comprehend the text of Liber Loagaeth. He was, however, forbidden to translate it and told that God would later provide the translation. At the end of the session, the light would leave Kelley's head and return to the stone. When he returned to normal consciousness, he claimed to have no memory of the experience.

As tempting as it might be, I am, for the time being not incorporating any of the calls from Loagaeth in my Enochian-magick preparation ritual. However, something else of great importance came out of this period: the angelic alphabet.

CHAPTER FOURTEEN

The Angelic Alphabet

He wiped his finger on the top of the Table, and there came out above the Table certain Characters enclosed in no line: but standing by them selves, and points between them. He pointed orderly to them with his finger, and looked toward the skryer at every pointing.

—EDWARD KELLEY DESCRIBING HIS VISION OF THE ANGEL'S REVELATION OF THE ANGELIC ALPHABET, MARCH 26, 1583[71]

I confess, even with clear copies and transcriptions of the source material in front of me, it has been very difficult for me to wrap my mind around the order of the visionary events of Dee and Kelley's years together. Because certain elements of these magical systems were often corrected or amended by the angels in subsequent visions, often occurring months apart, it is extremely difficult (for me at least) to present a clean chronology of events. The circumstances surrounding the reception of the angelic alphabet are no exception.

The alphabet was received during the Loagaeth period, but because the magicians were told to replace the Latin/English letters of the Lamen, Holy Table, and the seven Ensigns of Creation with letters from the angelic script, its influence reached back in time to touch the Heptarchia period as well.

The twenty-one characters of the angelic alphabet appeared fully formed in yellowish letters that rose in Kelley's vision above the table. The images of the individual letters then obligingly hovered over a sheet of paper and stayed visible long enough for him to copy them in ink before fading away.

Words in the angelic language are written from right to left, and that is the order the letters first appeared to Kelley. All twenty-one letters appeared in a single row and were separated by dots. There was also a dot preceding the first letter.

Script							Name	pal	med	don	ceph	van	fam	gisg

You will notice that the name for the first letter received, Pa, is the only letter whose name is capitalized. Pa, b in English, has a special significance in the magick of the Heptarchia. For example, the names of all the forty-nine good angels begin with b, the letter b appears overwhelmingly on the Ensigns of Creation, and each of the four corners of the Holy Table displays an oversized Pa.

This abundance of *b*s has caused several knowledgeable modern magical commentators to speculate that b must represent the number seven, the number upon which these magical systems seem to be based. While that makes a great deal of sense to me, I have nonetheless found nothing in the original material that would specifically suggest numerical equivalents to any of the single letters of the angelic alphabet.

What is very clear, however, is the fact that the communicating angel wanted Dee and Kelley to immediately memorize the letters of the angelic alphabet and the letters' names. Dee was a busy man and wanted to be excused from this time-consuming duty. The angel Me would have none of it. In this March 26, 1583, exchange, Dee tries to make the angel understand, "Look man, I've gòt a life!"

> Me: I instructed thee before-hand and told thee, that both of you must jointly learn those holy letters (For, so, I may boldly call them) in memory: with their names: to the intent, that the finger may point to the head, and the head to the understanding of his charge.
> Dee: You perceive that I have diverse affairs which at this present do withdraw me from peculiar diligence using to these Characters and their names learning by heart: And therefore I trust, I shall not offend, if I bestow all the convenient leisure that I shall get, about the learning thereof.
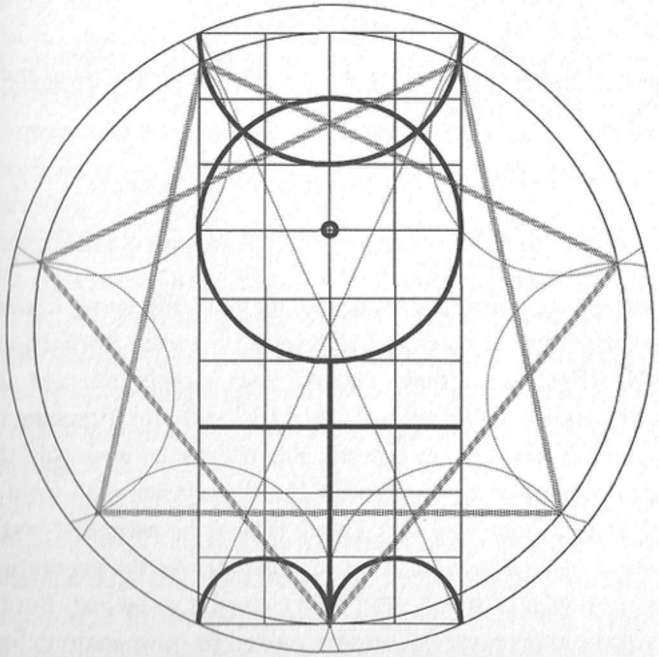
> Me: Peace, Thou talkest, as though, thou understoodest not. We know thee, we see thee in thy heart: Nor one thing shall not let another. For short is the time, that shall bring these things to proof.[72]

BOOK IV

Enochiana



CHAPTER FIFTEEN

Enochian Magick

The Lord appeared unto Enoch, and was merciful unto him, opened his eyes, that he might see and judge the earth, which was unknown to his Parents, by reason of their fall : for the Lord said, Let us shew unto Enoch, the use of the earth : And lo, Enoch was wise, and full of the spirit of wisdom.

—THE ANGEL AVE, MONDAY, JUNE 25, 1584[73]

To my knowledge, Dee and Kelley never used the word Enochian to describe the system of magick they received between April 10 and July 13, 1584. Throughout their actions, they simply referred to it as angelic. We cannot, however, be faulted too badly for attaching the biblical patriarch's name to the system. The magicians were told that this was the magick given by God to Enoch (the seventh man from Adam) in the form of a book and that Enoch (before he ascended bodily into the presence of God) passed it on to others. Over the generations, the book fell into wicked hands, and God caused it to be lost. But because of Dee's piety and prayers, God was moved to once again deliver it to mankind.

These final days were an especially difficult period in Dee and Kelley's relationship. They and their families were living in Krakow, Poland. Their actions were regularly interrupted by "evil spirits," who encouraged the magicians to abandon the actions. Kelley was increasingly impatient and uncomfortable with the work, voicing his fear of the possible evil nature of the communications on one hand. Ironically, Kelley was at the time practicing demon magick behind Dee's back. Dee was furious when he learned of this. So were the communicating angels, who warned that such behavior attracted evil spirits into the magician's environment—an annoying and time-consuming distraction. Finally Kelley promised Dee and the angels that he would knock off the black magick.

The angels, too, appeared to be growing impatient with Dee and Kelley, as if they realized the magical chemistry that existed between the two magicians (the personal factors that made them such a perfect operator/receiver team) was rapidly disintegrating. In April, the magicians were told in no uncertain terms that the work had to be completed by August. The magicians met their deadline with time to spare. July 13, 1584, Dee's fifty-seventh birthday, saw the final communication that completed the reception of the angelic calls and provided the names of the thirty Aethyrs. Not only had the Enochian phase of Dee and Kelley's operations ended, but, indeed, the entire angelic adventure had also come to a close. The plug was pulled. The communicating angels fell silent.

The magicians would continue on and off for several years with visionary operations and unsuccessful mago-political adventures in Europe. But, with the exception of only three brief references in their subsequent diaries, they never again mention the angelic magick. One of those latter-day references (the Tabula Recensa), however, is very significant to the study of the Enochian magick period. I'll speak more on that very soon.

The reception of the Enochian material was (at least to my impatient attention span) even more confused and topsy-turvy than that which characterized the Heptarchia and Liber Loagaeth periods. Sadly, as we discovered in the two earlier cases, the surviving information, while abundant, still does not provide us with adequate information on how it all was supposed to work as a practical system of magick.

And here is where we must again tip our magical hats to S. L. MacGregor Mathers, the adepts of the Golden Dawn, and Aleister Crowley, who at the dawn of the twentieth century developed this material into a remarkably logical system of vision magick—a system possessed of the solid infrastructure lacking in the surviving source material, a system that, for all intents and purposes, offers the diligent practitioner a practical and elegant unified field theory of hermetic and qabalistic magick.

As applied most commonly today, Enochian magick is a two-part magical system: one part focusing on the elemental universe, the other on the aethyric. The former enables the magician to summon or visit in vision the spirits of the myriad levels of the elemental worlds of Fire, Water, Air, Earth, and Spirit; the latter enables the magician to systematically penetrate increasingly higher heavens (or Aethyrs) to access information from those heavenly levels of consciousness.

I will soon show how these two systems are operated. But before I do that, and in keeping with our program of systematic attunement, I need to introduce you to another magick table. It was the first revelation of the Enochian period, but it is also, in my opinion, the final component of the preparation protocol. This tablet was delivered to the magicians by the angel Nalvage in April of 1584. It is an item that was acknowledged by the adepts of the Golden Dawn but never incorporated into any practice. It is something, however, I believe should not escape our attention. No name was given to this object. Some modern scholars designate it simply the Tablet of God. I shall refer to it as the Round Tablet of Nalvage.

CHAPTER SIXTEEN

The Round Tablet of Nalvage

The order and knitting together of the parts in their due and perfect proportion, God the Holy Ghost. Lo the beginning and end of all things.

"The Method of Science—The Aim of Religion" was the official motto of The Equinox, the great magical periodical first published by Aleister Crowley and his colleagues in the early years of the twentieth century.[74] This same phrase could also comfortably serve as the watchwords that describe what the art of magick is to me.

Conversely, superstition (as the word is commonly understood) has, in my opinion, no place in the arsenal of the modern magician. This, I believe, is especially true concerning the practice of Enochian vision magick. In all my years of magical practice and exploration of this system, I have never encountered a single case of so-called psychic attack, demon possession, headache, hives, or hernia—indeed any ill effects whatsoever—resulting from the practice of this particular kind of magick.

That being said, strange and unexpected things do occasionally happen to those who practice magick. And while I believe it is bad for one's mental health to ascribe undue importance to these phenomena, it is important that they be dispassionately observed and recorded. So, before I discuss the Round Tablet of Nalvage and its importance to the system of Enochian magick, I feel I must share with you two little stories that might help you understand the level of respect I hold for this particular magical object.

Twenty years ago, I was teaching a class in Enochian vision magick at our home in Costa Mesa. This class was different from the Enochian magick classes I had taught previously, for it was the first time we would study and experiment with using the Round Tablet of Nalvage. In preparation for the first class, I decided to make a copy of the tablet out of wax (as I had done with my Sigillum Dei Aemeth). A friend had given me two massive, black wax candles shaped like giant chessmen (bishops). My plan was to melt these down in a round Christmas cookie tin and carve the squares and the angelic letters of the Tablet of Nalvage on the cooled wax disk.

It was a foolish time to be starting an arts project like this, because our landlord had just informed us he was bulldozing our house in two weeks and building apartments on our lot (thanks a lot!), and we were deep in the midst of packing up our things to move. Still, magick is magick, and life goes on. I put the two black wax bishops in the cookie tin and slid them into the oven. I set the heat on the lowest possible warm level and went out to the garage to help (watch) Constance pack.

As you might imagine, we had some very interesting things in our garage, many of which we hadn't looked at in years. We did more reminiscing than packing. I didn't forget the black wax bishops in the oven, however, and checked on them regularly. It seemed they were taking a long time to melt, so I turned up the heat a little higher.

Back out in the garage we found a stash of psychedelic artwork Constance had painted and drawn in the late sixties, when we were hippies living in the woods of southern Oregon. We hadn't seen them in fifteen years. What a treat! We lingered over them for probably ten minutes before I remembered the black wax bishops for the Round Tablet of Nalvage in the oven.

When I opened the back door, I found the kitchen dark except for a warm orange glow that, like a spectacular sunset, brightened the dark clouds of smoke that filled the house from the ceiling to about four feet from the floor. The oven was completely engulfed in flames. I ran into the living room and found our son, Jean-Paul, lying on the floor watching television completely oblivious to the black smoke pressing its way toward him from above.

Once he and the dog were evacuated, I called for Constance (always a level head in times of emergency), and we proceeded to attack the fire. When I opened the flaming oven, I discovered that one of the bishops had slid to the side of the cookie tin and parts of it had melted down the outside rim. The wax had run to the bottom of the oven and dripped down upon the pilot light, which then become the eternal flame of Costa Mesa. There was nothing we could do to turn off the oven. Constance eventually had to turn off the gas outside, and with the help of baking soda and wet towels, we got the fire out. I rescued the cookie tin and let it cool in the sink. A couple hours later, in the charred ruins of our kitchen, I carved a beautiful black wax Round Tablet of Nalvage.

Now, I'm the first to confess that this story has less to do with magick and superstition and more with my own carelessness and stupidity. (I am now forbidden to use the oven for magical crafts.) The accident did, however, serve to give me a healthy respect for the Round Tablet of Nalvage—a respect that in the last year has increased immeasurably. And that brings me to my second magical tale of Nalvage.

As we'll soon see, there is much we know about the Round Tablet of Nalvage. What we don't know is how it was intended to be used. As I was preparing for the class series that inspired this book, I debated with myself how (or even if) I was going to introduce it into our studies. After all, there is nothing in the source material that hints at what is to be done with it. Late in the afternoon, I prepared our living room temple for the evening's class. The Sigillum and ensigns were set neatly on the Holy Table; the table was covered with its red silk cloth, and the obsidian mirror was set in place.

I went to the closet cupboard in my office and took down my black wax Round Tablet of Nalvage from the topmost shelf. I unzipped its plastic bubble-wrapped envelope and carefully removed it. I had to admit, after all those years, it still looked magnificently magical. I took it into the living room and set it down upon the covered table. I sat down in my comfy chair, and in the warm glow of sunset (which brought to my mind the glow of our blazing kitchen so many years earlier), I meditated about how the Round Tablet of Nalvage fits into the system.

I didn't get much meditating done, because the moment I closed my eyes I fell asleep. I awoke just a few minutes before people would start arriving for class. I still didn't know how or if I was going to the use the tablet for the night's gathering. I hastily decided that if I didn't have sound reasons for using the tablet, I was going to skip it altogether—at least for that night. I took the tablet off the Holy Table, wrapped it back up, and carefully put it back on the top shelf of the closet cupboard.

I went to my desk to turn off the computer and gather things for class, when I was startled by the sound of something smashing against my guitar, which was mounted upright in its stand near the open closet door. With the guitar strings still ringing, I turned to see that the Tablet of Nalvage had flown from its shelf, ricocheted off my guitar, and was resting inches from my feet.

As a reasonably rational man, I am of the opinion that there is nothing supernatural in the world, just natural things that have yet to be explained. I'm sure there is nothing I can say to convince the cynic that the tablet hadn't fallen naturally from the shelf because I hadn't put it there properly. I remain, however, extremely impressed at the distance this object had to travel across physical space in order to strike the guitar and find its way to my feet at the very moment I had decided not to discuss it at that evening's class.

Needless to say, I changed my mind about the importance of the tablet, and in the few moments remaining before class members started to arrive, I composed the two-part chorus that incorporates the dynamics created by the letters of the Round Tablet of Nalvage—a chant that has become the last (and perhaps the most important) component of the Ceremony of Preparation.[75]

Now, let's take a brief look at those dynamics and how a chant based on the Round Tablet of Nalvage can be constructed.

The Tablet of Nalvage is not really round. It is a square divided into four squares (or continents) and surrounded by four outer bars (see figure 59). The continents and bars are subdivided into lettered squares (nine squares per continent and four squares per bar). But before we start filling in the letters, let's see what the angel Nalvage had to say about the continents.

Nalvage told Dee and Kelley that continents 1 and 2 are "dignified," while 3 "is not yet dignified, but to be dignified," and 4 is "without glory or dignity." Nalvage described them in Latin as follows:

1. Vita suprema (highest life), the continent of "joy";
2. Vita (life), the continent of "potentiality";
3. Vita non dignificata, sed dignificanda (life not dignified, but which shall be dignified), the continent of "creation"; and
4. Vita est etiam haec, sed quae perperit mors ("Even this is life, but life which will be paid with death"), the continent of "discord."

Each continent contains nine letters that, when read in various ways, yield words in the angelic language. In order to more easily see these words, I have separated the tablet into its component parts (see figure 60).

When read counterclockwise, the outer bars of the tablet spell the names of four classes of angels: luah (praising angels), lang (ministering angels), sach (confirming angels), and urch (confounding angels).

These angels circumscribe and contain the angelic forces at work within the continents. Nalvage gave the following Latin meanings to the words inside the continents when the words are read horizontally from left to right (see figure 61).

idz – Gaudium – Joy aoi – Praesentia – Presence mzr – Laudantes – Praising	sai – Actio – Action god – Factum – Events urr – Confirmantes – Establishing
bna – Potestas – Power daz – Motus – Motion iab – Ministrantes – Ministering	fos – Luctos – Lamentation sea – Discordia – Discord rdi – Confundantes – Confusing

Figure 61: Words and meanings of the words of the four continents

Figure 62 shows how the letters of the continents are read to reveal the nature of the divine powers resident in the tablet.

First notice how the three letters of outer corners of each of the four continents (upper left corner of upper left continent, lower left corner of lower left continent, and so on) all spell the Enochian word meaning God—iad.

Notice next that the three diagonal letters of continents spell the words moz (joy), bab (power), sor (action), and ser (lamentation).

Finally, the three letters of the inner corners of the continents spell the words zir (I am), zna (motion), gru (deed), and osf (discord).

The arrows in figure 62 show the beautiful symmetry the words create within the tablet. If we put the words of each continent together, we arrive at phrases such as:

Continent 1.	iad moz zir (I am the Joy of God.)
Continent 2.	iad bab zna (God's Power in Motion)
Continent 3.	iad sor gru (Result of God's Action)
Continent 4.	iad ser osf (God's Discord and Lamentation)

This rich tapestry of joy, movement, creation, and sorrow is contained and encircled by a counterclockwise whirl of the angels: luah, lang, sach, and urch.

Concerning the tablet as a whole, Nalvage said,"The Substance is attributed to God the Father."[76]

In reference to the letters on the outer bars, Nalvage said, "The first circular mover, the circumference, God the Son, The finger of the Father, and mover of all things."[77]

Referring to the continents and the manner in which their letters are read, he said, "The order and knitting together of the parts in their due and perfect proportion, God the Holy Ghost. Lo the beginning and end of all things."[78]

Like the Holy Table, the Round Tablet of Nalvage, once decoded, displays divine and angelic words and names in perpetual motion in such a way that one can almost sense what is meant by the term choir of angels. In group workings, I break the participants up into two voices as we ceremonially chant the words from the tablet.

Voice One: luah lang sach urch

Voice Two: iad moz zir—iad bab zna—iad sor gru—iad ser osf

The effect is powerful even when I'm alone in the middle of the night and chant one voice at a time.

Once Nalvage described the dynamics of the tablet, he didn't go on to provide instructions on how, or even if, the tablet was to be used. Is it a talisman? Is it to be worn as the Lamen? Is it to be held or placed on the Holy Table? We don't know.

However, we do know that after the two magicians had become attuned to the structure of the Round Tablet of Nalvage, the entire remaining system of Enochian magick was revealed in less than ninety days. This has led more than a few magicians to speculate that the Round Tablet of Nalvage might be the key to a mysterious and unexpressed "first call" of the Enochian system, or perhaps even represent the call itself.

CHAPTER SEVENTEEN

The Forty-eight Calls

Move, therefore, and show yourselves: open the Mysteries of your Creation: Be friendly unto me: for I am the servant of the same your God, the true worshipper of the Highest.

—FROM THE FIRST CALL[79]

The centerpiece of the Enochian system is a collection of calls[80] in an angelic tongue that is significantly different from the language delivered in Liber Loagaeth. The reception of the calls followed that of the Tablet of Nalvage. They were first dictated to the magicians in the angelic tongue, then afterwards translated into English. Careful examination of the calls and their translations reveal that Enochian is a real language and not simply strings of barbarous names and words. The calls read like evocative hymns or invocations. They are constructed of real, sometimes breathtakingly beautiful sentences that can be translated (not merely transliterated). The language exhibits a remarkable consistency of word meaning from call to call. It has a form of grammar and syntax. This phenomenon, coupled with the multiple double-blind/letter-by-letter method by which it was received, makes this (in my mind at least) one of the most extraordinary aspects of Dee and Kelley's workings.

Technically, there are forty-nine calls. However, as the first call was said to be unexpressed, I will refer to them as if there were forty-eight.

They appear translated in their entirety in appendix II of this book, along with the keys to how they are put to use by modern Enochian magicians (see also chapter twenty-seven).

Beginning on April 10, 1584, the first four calls were painstakingly delivered, letter-by-letter (in backward order, because the angels at first voiced fears that the calls were so powerful it might be too dangerous to deliver them in a straightforward manner). As usual, the letters were drawn from an assortment of lettered grids. The angels also provided translations to the first four calls immediately after their delivery.

Then things changed. It appears that even the angels became impatient with this tedious method. They proceeded to deliver calls five through eighteen in a straightforward manner, but they would wait six weeks before delivering the English translations.

The fact that the translated words from the first four calls (delivered backwards) matched (or were otherwise linguistically compatible with) the translated words of calls five through eighteen (delivered forward and translated six weeks later) all but rules out the possibility that either Dee or Kelley invented the angelic language or the calls.

The nineteenth call (the Call of the Ayres or Aethyrs) and the names of the thirty Aethyrs (or heavens) were received on July 13, 1584, Dee's fifty-seventh birthday, effectively ending Dee and Kelley's angelic magick relationship. However, before that final communication, the angels would deliver an incredible amount of material to the two magicians between April 10 and July 13—material that three hundred years later would inspire the adepts of the Golden Dawn to develop the hybrid system we now call Enochian magick. I call it hybrid because the "Enochian" magick developed by the Golden Dawn and Crowley is based on a number of assumptions that connect the forty-eight calls with other "Enochian" material Dee and Kelley received after the reception of the calls. I refer to what are now commonly called the Elemental Tablets, which I will discuss in detail in chapter twenty-three and beyond. While eminently logical and based on the most anal-retentive hermetic principles, many of the assumptions made by the Golden Dawn and Crowley were nonetheless not clearly made in the original Dee material.

First, however, we need to look at the circumstances that triggered the final and most astounding chapter in the story of the reception of Enochian magick. It all started with Dee wanting to spy on the king of Poland and ended with the reception of what appears to be nothing less than the printed circuit board of the mind of God.

CHAPTER EIGHTEEN

The Ninety-one Parts of the Earth

> Dee: Hey Nalvage, I'd sure like to magically eavesdrop on secret meetings between King Stephen of Poland and his ministers. I'd like to know if Count Albert Laski will soon succeed Stephen as king of Poland. Can you help me do this?
> Nalvage: No problem, Dr. Dee. But first you have to understand how the universe where this can happen operates. You need to understand how everything in heaven and earth is connected to everything in heaven and earth.[81]
> —IMAGINARY CONVERSATION, JOHN DEE AND THE ANGEL NALVAGE

The fantasy dialogue above is more than just another one of my lame attempts to be witty. It describes what, for all intents and purposes, was happening during this phase of the Enochian magick revelations. Dee was indeed trying to squeeze from the angels some information regarding political intrigues in Poland. The angel Nalvage's response was to first try to explain to Dee the mechanics of how specific spirits rule specific parts of the earth. In doing so, Nalvage would ambitiously attempt to demonstrate how everything in heaven and earth is connected to everything in heaven and earth. The results of this revelation Dee would neatly memorialize thirteen months later in Liber Scientae Auxilii et Vitoriae Terrestris.[82]

Nalvage started by dividing the universe into thirty segments that would eventually be identified as Aires, or Aethyrs (see column I of figure 63). To the thirty Aires he assigned ninety-one parts of the earth (see column II), which he first referred to by the geographical name recognizable to the sixteenth-century magicians, such as Syria (see second name in column III), then by the name by which it is known in the divine realms, such as Pascomb (see second name in column IV).

He then assigned each of these pairs of names to one of the twelve mythical tribes of Israel, along with their directional coordinates, an angelic king, and a respectable number of good ministers.

All this information and more can be found in figure 63. Columns I through V contain the information Dee and Kelley received at this stage of the reception. The symmetrical characters found in column VI and the names of the good princes of the Air in column VII were delivered to Dee and Kelley at a later date than the information in columns I through V. This fact will have astonishing significance when we examine the circumstances and sequence of events that brought to a close the angelic adventures of the two magicians.The key to the columns of the table is as follows:

Column I	Number of the Aire
Column II	Sequence of the ninety-one parts of the earth
Column III	Names of the ninety-one parts of the earth as imposed by man[83]
Column IV	Names of the ninety-one parts of the earth as imposed by God (Note: These are also the names of ninety-one governors of the Aethyrs; see chapter twenty-eight.)
Column V	(from top to bottom) Tribe of Israel, quarter of the earth assigned to the dispersed tribes of Israel, angelic kind, number of good ministers
Column VI	Divinely ordained symmetrical characters (see chapter twenty-one) (Note: The mystery of the missing symmetrical characters 28, 29, and 30 would be revealed to Dee and Kelley later; see chapter twenty-four.

Column VII	Names of the good princes of the Air (Note: These are also the names of the thirty Aethyrs; see chapter twenty-eight.)

Using the second of the ninety-one parts of earth, Syria, as our example, we see that its divinely ordained name is Pascomb. The tribe of Zabulon is assigned to Syria/Pascomb, as are the angelic king Zinggen and 2,360 good ministers.

In order for you to appreciate the amazing circumstances surrounding the reception of the Enochian material, it will be important for you to have a general understanding of the chronology of events that took place in the spring and early summer of 1584. This I will try to provide in the following chapter.

CHAPTER NINETEEN

The Golden Talisman and the Watchtowers of the Universe

Now therefore hearken unto me: for I will open unto you the secret knowledge of the Earth, that you may deal with her, by such as govern her, at your pleasure; and call her to a reckoning, as Steward doth the servants of the Lord.

Very early on the morning of Wednesday, June 20, 1584, Edward Kelley was aroused from a sound sleep by someone (something) patting him on the head. He opened his eyes and beheld an angel, "clothed with feathers, strangely wreathed about him all over, etc." standing at the head of his bed. The angel would later identify itself as Ave, one of the Sons of Sons of Light from the Sigillum Dei Aemeth (see chapter ten). Ave proceeded to project a vision that would dramatize the elements and structure of the entire system of Enochian magick as widely practiced today. The following is from Dee's diary:[85]

> There appeared to him [Kelley] four very fair Castles, standing in the four parts of the world: out of which he heard the sound of a Trumpet. Then it seemed out of every Castle a cloath to be thrown on the ground, of more than the breadth of a Table-cloath . . . [86]
> . . . Out of every Gate then issued one Trumpeter, whose Trumpets were of strange form, wreathed, and growing bigger and bigger toward the end.
> After the Trumpeter followed three Ensign Bearers.
> After them six ancient men, with white beards and staves in their hands.
> Then followed a comely man, with very much Apparel on his back, his Robe having a long train.
> After him came five men, carrying up of his train.
> Then followed one great Crosse, and about that four lesser Crosses.
> These Crosses had on them, each of them ten, like men, their faces distinctly appearing on the four parts of the Crosse, all over.
> After the Crosses followed 16 white Creatures.
> After them, an infinite number seemed to issue, and to spread themselves orderly in a compasse, almost before the four foresaid Castles.

The highlights of Kelley's vision would eventually be memorialized upon a round talisman etched in gold, which is today on display at the British Museum. Much as I'd like to believe this object was fashioned by Dee himself, it is almost certainly a forgery patterned upon the flawed image printed in Casaubon's A True & Faithful Relation. For reference, however, I will continue to refer to both the vision and the image as the Golden Talisman.

The four castles, or Watchtowers, formed a cross, the center of which was a circle supported by twenty-four columns. Figure 64 illustrates the lower quarter of the Golden Talisman.

Ave would elucidate upon the nature, powers, and hierarchical status of the characters on the Golden Talisman. Eventually he would go into far greater detail by projecting and organizing all of it upon what he called the Great Table or the Great Table of the Watchtowers. The Great Table is the Rosetta stone of Enochian magick. How it was received and how it is connected to the information Dee and Kelley had already received concerning the ninety-one parts of the earth present us with perhaps the most convincing proof that the two magicians were indeed in contact with noncorporeal intelligences of a superior order.

CHAPTER TWENTY

The Unlettered Great Table and the Four Great Seals

> The seals and authorities of these Houses are confirmed in the beginning of the World. Unto everyone of them be 4 characters, (tokens of the presence of the son of God: by whom all things were made in Creation.)
> —THE ANGEL AVE, JUNE 20, 1584[87]

In a working that took place on Wednesday, June 25, 1584, the angel Ave showed the magicians the image of a table that was divided into four sections by a central cross. Each of the four sections was identified as one of the castles of the Golden Talisman vision. Also called Watchtowers, Watchmen, princes, and mighty angels of the Lord, they were each represented by a seal. Three of these seals, by their imagery, bear a direct and unambiguous connection to the Sigillum Dei Aemeth or the Ensigns of Creation.

The first seal was assigned to the upper left section of the table. It was the image of a capital letter T with four rays beaming vertically from the top bar. This seal comes from a major landmark of the Sigillum Dei Aemeth. The 4/T cell is the first (near the top) of the forty cells that form the perimeter (see figure 23). The 4/T cell is where we began counting to create the seven Names of God drawn from the Sigillum.

The second seal was assigned to the upper right section of the table and identified as an alphabet cross. We first saw this cross on the (lower right) corner of the first sevenfold table (see figure 33), which generated the letters of the large outer heptagon of the Sigillum, where the cross appears at the top left (see figure 34).

The third seal was assigned to the lower right section of the Great Table. Its origin was a little harder to track down. Ave said, "It is in that table, which consisteth of 4 and 8." One of the seven Ensigns of Creation that ring the Sigillum on the Holy Table (the one many modern magicians associate with Mercury) is a 4 x 8 table (see figure 54). The square occupying the position of the second column, second row, contains the cross, numbers, and letters exactly as appears on the vision of the third seal.

The forth seal was assigned to the lower left section of the table and was the image of "a little round smoke, as big as a pin's head." It is illustrated in one of the drawings of the Great Table in Sloane 3191 as a tiny circle with twelve rays issuing from it. It is perhaps the stylized representation of the figure that appears on the back of the Sigillum Dei Aemeth: a small circle from which projects the four capital Ts of a cross potent formed from twelve right angles (see figure 51). Perhaps it is connected to the Round Table of Nalvage and the twelve words that occupy its four continents. Frankly I've been unable to find any reference in the original material that would suggest either of these connections.

Figure 65 shows the positions of the Great Seals on the Great Table and the order in which they were revealed to Dee and Kelley on June 25, 1584. On April 18, 1587 (nearly three years after the magicians had, for all intents and purposes, discontinued their angelic workings), Kelley would receive a vision that would alter (or reform) several aspects of the Great Table, including the relative positions of the seals and all they represent.

As one might expect, this reformation remains the source of intense frustration to Enochian students and practitioners. To add to all the confusion, Dee at different times assigned different directional attributes to the quarters of the table. Later, the Golden Dawn, in order to develop a workable system from this material, would attribute the quarters of the Great Table to the elements of Air, Water, Earth, and Fire. Eventually, I will do that as well, but for the moment, let's be satisfied with identifying the four quarters of the Great Table by their seals and original numbers as shown in figure 65, while we move on to the wonders of what next took place.

CHAPTER TWENTY-ONE

The Great Table

There was a terrible storm of thunder and rain, toward the end of our yesterdays action: which I said, was somewhat more than natural.

—JOHN DEE, JUNE 26, 1584[88]

I feel I must here briefly outline (if only for my own benefit) the sequential landmarks of the Enochian magick period up to this point:

- The reception of the Round Tablet of Nalvage,
- The beginning of the reception of the forty-eight calls in the angelic language,
- The reception of the order and earthly name of each of the ninety-one parts of the earth, together with:
  - its divinely given name,
  - the tribe of Israel to which it is assigned,[89]
  - the direction assigned to that tribe,
  - the name of its ruling angelic king,
  - the number of good ministers.

(All of the above information is itemized in columns I through IV of the figure 63 in chapter eighteen.)

Then came:

- The vision of the Golden Talisman, with its four sets of castles:
  - one trumpeter,
  - three ensign bearers,
  - six seniors ("six ancient men"),
  - the king and his five princes (the "comely man, with very much Apparel" and the "five men, carrying up of his train"),
  - five crosses in the air ("one great Crosse" and "four lesser Crosses"),
  - sixteen dispositors ("16 white Creatures").
- The vision of the unlettered Great Table and the four Great Seals.

What happened next was so remarkable that I hope I can recount what happened clearly enough for you to appreciate how remarkable it was.

During the working of Monday, June 25, 1584, Kelley was given in vision four blank grids, each of which was twelve squares wide by thirteen squares high. These grids were said to represent the four quarters of the unlettered Great Table of the vision of a few days earlier. As the vision proceeded, "little pricks," or dots, began to appear in the squares. Kelley was then instructed to connect the dots in groups of seven, which created sigils, each forming a curious pattern.

When he was through connecting the dots, all but eight of the 624 squares that make up the four grids were covered by eighty-eight characters, each unique in form, each covering seven squares, but none of which intruded upon another character's squares. These symbols were identified as "the true images of God his Spiritual Creatures."

Now we know what those zigzag lines that fill column VI in chapter eighteen's figure 63 are. They are called symmetrical characters because each one is formed from the same number of pricks—in this case, seven.

Once the blank grids were filled with the lines of the symmetrical characters, Kelley was instructed to fill in the squares with letters. Starting at the top left of each grid and moving to the right, letters began to appear to Kelley, one by one, as Dee copied them down. Some of the letters were capitalized, but most were not. A few of the capitalized letters appeared to be written backwards.

When all four grids were filled in with letters and characters, it became clear that the characters spelled out names. Not only that, but each of these eighty-eight names also began with a capital letter and contained no other capital letter among the remaining six.

This phenomenon is in itself impressive, but it is nothing compared to what Dee and Kelley would learn next. Within a few hours (and with a few helpful hints from the angels), the two magicians discovered, to their utter amazement, that the symmetrical characters spelled all but three of the divine names of the ninety-one parts of the earth—names they had been given days earlier and in list format. Figure 67 shows an example of how the divine name of the second part of the earth, Pascomb, is spelled out by its symmetric character.

All four grids were filled with similar characters all spelling out (with a few minor irregularities) the names of eighty-eight of the ninety-one parts of the earth.

The next day the angels tidied up this array by joining the four 12 x 13 grids with a central cross and turning it into one Great Table. The letters of the three missing divine names of the parts of the earth were found distributed in the central cross (sometimes referred to as the Black Cross or the Great Central Cross) and a mysterious ninety-second name, Paraoan, was created from certain of the backwards letters that occupied the squares left vacant by the symmetrical characters (see chapter twenty-four). Things were wrapped up pretty neatly.

Before we continue, I would like to again stress how impressive was the method of reception. Enochian scholar and magician David R. Jones, wrote:

> The student of Enochian can compare the lists of names with the sigils, which formulate their existence on the Watchtowers, and easily see the correlation. But realize that the names were delivered first and then the Watchtowers horizontally line by line and after having both figures at hand. The Angels demonstrated that, by discrete (7 letters, the number of letters in each Governor's name) linear connections, all of the letters given in the Watchtowers could be accounted for from the letters that formulate names of the Governors previously given. This would require either a monumental and complex second and third order memorization (2 dimensions to 1 dimension then back to 2 dimensions and with directional correlation from a 3 dimensional origin to a 3 dimensional conclusion) on Kelly's part or an elaborate and extremely obtuse deception on Dee's part. This constitutes one of the chief proofs of the system.[90]

The magicians would eventually be informed that the ninety-one divine names of the parts of the earth are also the names of ninety-one governors who inhabit the thirty Aethyrs, or Aires, or heavens that surround the Watchtowers like a heavenly glass onion. We've yet to discuss the Aethyrs because their names (see figure 63, column VII) were among the last bits of information Dee and Kelley received in their Enochian magick workings. The lowest of these Aethyrs, Tex, is inhabited by four governors. The remaining Aethyrs including the highest, Lil, each have three governors.

I will talk more about the Aethyrs in chapter twenty-five. Here it is important for us to simply understand that linking the ninety-one parts of the earth to the thirty Aethyrs was the Enochian way of identifying and linking all levels of divine consciousness from bottom to top. Thus, the dynamics of the Great Table really are a demonstration of how everything in heaven and earth is indeed connected to everything else in heaven and earth.

CHAPTER TWENTY-TWO

Tabula Recensa

At length, E. K. was willed to go down into his Chamber, and I did remain still at our Dineing Table till his return, which was within an hour or somewhat more. And at his return this he brought in writing . . . .

—JOHN DEE, APRIL 20, 1587[91]

Such was the amazing genesis of the Great Table. How all this is connected to the vision of the Golden Talisman and the practice of modern Enochian magick will be the subjects of the next chapters. Before moving on, however, and in order to more easily illustrate the structure of the system, I need to temporarily tighten up some of the loose ends that the irregularities in the original material often leave dangling in the eyes of the student. The most serious of these concerns the lettering of the Great Table and the various names of angels drawn therefrom. Here's the problem:

After they initially received the Great Table, the magicians were obliged to change or add certain letters in some of the squares. To confuse things further, in documents they received both earlier and later,[92] the names of a handful of the ninety-one governors of the table (whose names are spelled out by the symmetrical characters) and the names of specific angels drawn from the Watchtowers of the Great Table are in subsequent communications spelled a bit differently than they appear in the original table. This difference has proven very frustrating to modern Enochian magicians, who naturally would like to be confident in their ability to accurately identify and spell the name of the angel with whom they wish to communicate.

There are other loose-end inconsistencies that plagued Dee and Kelley, one of which was the uncertainty over which compass directions were to be assigned to the four quarters of the Great Table—a problem that Dee appears never to have resolved to his satisfaction, and one that I have chosen to sidestep completely by not using the directional references to identify the four quarters of the Great Table at all. These inconsistencies, however, pale before what happened in April of 1587, nearly three years after Dee and Kelley had ended their Enochian workings.

For some reason Kelley felt compelled to revisit the mysteries of the Great Table and once and for all settle the questions of unresolved inconsistencies. During a conversation with the archangel Raphael that lasted approximately one hour, he claimed to receive the Tabula Recensa, or "Reformed Table." This table, while correcting a few of the letters, was characterized by one very dramatic change: three of the quadrants housing the four Watchtowers were shifted to different positions within the full table. This alteration did not change any symmetrical characters, nor did it tinker all that much with the names of the governors or other angels within the table. What it did do was change the basic construction of the Great Table.

For the duration of this book I will, for the sake of consistency, try to use the Tabula Recensa as my main model for both the lettering and arrangement of the Watchtowers of the Great Table. I say "try to use" because for nearly the entire Enochian period the angels referenced the original Great Table (figure 68) when explaining the angelic hierarchies and spelling the names of individual angels. It will be necessary from time to time to refer to the original, unreformed Great Table, especially when we start discussing the Kerubs (see chapters twenty-three and twenty-four), whose names might be dramatically affected by the reformed table's new arrangement.

I should remind the reader that in magick it is eminently possible for many contradictory ideas to be simultaneously true. In the pages that follow, the alert reader will notice that the names of certain angels are spelled in a manner inconsistent with the original Great Table, the Tabula Recensa, and/or other obvious references within the text. It is probable that particular inconsistencies are the result of subsequent angelic instructions or other extenuating reasons. For a practical manual such as this it would be distracting to the point of absurdity for me to pause, footnote, cross reference, defend, and explain each and every one of these aberrations, especially considering the fact that in many instances I myself have not been able to track down the source of the differing lettering. For those of you whose research will take you deeper into this subject, I have included in appendix IV versions of the Watchtowers containing all the variations in lettering that I have been able to discover.

Also for convenience sake, I'm going to represent the segue between the Enochian magick of Dee and Kelley and Enochian magick as it is generally practiced today. Up to this point in the chronology of the adventures of Dee and Kelley, each of the four Watchtowers of the Great Table (both the original and reformed) have been identified by the one of the four Great Seals (see figure 65) or by certain landmark letters. At different times in the original material they have been identified by the order they were received or by the directions: east, south, west, or north. Nowhere in the surviving documents have I been able to find the four quadrants of the Great Table overtly identified as the Elemental Tablets of Fire, Water, Air, and Earth.

That being said, certain clear references in the continuing communications revealed elemental hierarchies and rulerships both of and within the individual Watchtowers. Building on this information, the adepts of the Golden Dawn projected an eminently logical elemental structure to the Great Table, its central Black Cross, and its individual subdivisions. These elemental attributions are the heart and soul of the system of Enochian magick taught and practiced by the Golden Dawn, Aleister Crowley, and most modern practitioners.

I personally believe that when these more modern adepts treated the Watchtowers as expressions of the elements they were picking up where Dee and Kelley had stopped and were taking the next logical step in the development of the system. To more easily discuss how all this is going to relate to the practical application of the system, I will now and for the remainder of this book, refer to the four Watchtowers by their modern elemental designations. Please refer to figure 69.

- The upper left quadrant of the reformed Great Table I will now refer to as the Watchtower, or Elemental Tablet, of Air.
- The upper right quadrant of the reformed Great Table I will now refer to as the Watchtower, or Elemental Tablet, of Water.
- The lower left quadrant of the reformed Great Table I will now refer to as the Watchtower, or Elemental Tablet, of Earth.
- The lower right quadrant of the reformed Great Table I will now refer to as the Watchtower, or Elemental Tablet, of Fire.

This is how they are identified in most modern Enochian literature. There is a fifth Elemental Tablet—the Tablet of Union—that is attributed to the quintessential element, Spirit. It is much smaller, containing only twenty squares, and its letters are drawn from those on the central Black Cross of the Great Table, which serves to unite the four Watchtowers in precisely the same way Spirit is said to unite and separate the four elements. I will have more to say about this very important tablet in chapter twenty-six.

CHAPTER TWENTY-THREE

The Great Table Meets the Golden Talisman

The Angels of the 4 angles shall make the Earth open unto you, and shall serve your necessities from the 4 parts of the Earth.

—The Angel Ave, July 2, 1584[93]

Recall, from chapter nineteen, that the vision of the Golden Talisman revealed four castles from which flowed four cloths of different colors. Out of each castle, marching in procession came one trumpeter, three ensign bearers, six seniors, and one king. The king was followed by five men (who held up his train) and five crosses (one great cross surrounded by four lesser crosses) that floated in the air above them. Each of the four lesser crosses "had on them, each of them ten, like men, their faces distinctly appearing on the four parts of the Crosse, all over."[94]

After the crosses came sixteen white creatures, identified as dispositors on the Golden Talisman, and then "an infinite number seemed to issue, almost before the four foresaid Castles."[95]

These images and characters provide, at least partially, the key to the divine hierarchy of the Great Table. This hierarchy represents the spiritual forces that govern not only the phenomenal universe but also heaven. Let's take a moment and project the vision of the Golden Talisman upon the Great Table.

The Four Castles

The castles are obviously the four Watchtowers (Elemental Tablets) themselves, and the rest of the characters in the vision represent the angelic hierarchy resident in each tablet. These angels can be called forth and visited in vision by intoning one or more of the first eighteen calls to activate the Elemental Tablet and the specific area of the tablet where they reside. I will show how that is done in appendix I. First, let's see how the cast of characters from the Golden Talisman fit on the individual Elemental Tablets.

For purposes of illustration, I will use the Elemental Tablet of Fire (the lower right quarter of the reformed Great Table) as our model.

The Trumpets (Trumpeter)

The first character to issue from each of the castles was the trumpeter. The trumpeters are the Great Seals of the tablets. In our example (the Elemental Tablet of Fire), the seal is the image of the sun emitting rays.

The Three Ensign Bearers

At the top of the hierarchical ladder of each Elemental Tablet are the three ensign bearers, who represent the Three Great Secret Names of God. These names appear in the central horizontal row of the Great Central Cross that divides each Elemental Tablet. This cross is made of the two vertical columns that bisect the tablet into left and right; the left column is called the Line of the Father and the right column is called the Line of the Son, and the single central row that bisects the tablet top and bottom is called the Line of the Holy Ghost.

Dee and Kelley were told that the three ensign bearers were respectively of the nature of "3, 4, and 5." This means that the Three Great Secret Names of God are spelled using the first three letters, the next four letters, and the final five letters of the central horizontal row of the central cross. In the case of the Fire tablet, these letter combinations are: oiP, teaa, pDoce.

Figure 73: The Three Great Secret Names of God of the Elemental Tablet of Fire

If there was any doubt as to the angels' meaning concerning the four sets of the Three Great Secret Names of God, they thoughtfully provided a round diagram with all twelve names neatly represented as ensign flags surrounding a central quartered square. In that diagram, all the letters of the names appeared in uppercase letters: OIP, TEAA, PDOCE.

The Three Great Secret Names of all four Elemental Tablets are found in appendix IV.

The Six Seniors

Next came the six seniors. While there is little specific indication in the surviving documents that would suggest the six seniors carry planetary attributions, it is nonetheless a logical assumption; it was made by the adepts of the Golden Dawn and is made by most modern practitioners. For clarity of reference (and for the duration of our discussion), I will adapt the modern planetary designations given to the seniors.

The six seniors of each of the Elemental Tablets are found on the Great Central Cross of each tablet. The seven-letter names of the six seniors radiate from the center two letters of the cross to its extremities.

On the Elemental Tablet of Fire, the six seniors are: aaetPio (Mars), adoeoet (Jupiter), aLndVod (Luna), aapDoce (Venus), arinna (Saturn), and aNodoin (Mercury).

In subsequent references to the seniors (such as in lists and prayers), Dee would standardize the capitalization of the names on all the Elemental Tablets. In our example: Aaetpio, Adoeoet, Alndvod, Aapdoce, Arinna, Anodoin.

The names of the seniors of all four Elemental Tablets are found in appendix IV.

In Kelley's vision of the Golden Talisman, the six seniors from each of the four castles march to the center and meet as pillars that support, as it were, the entire structure. This image is suggestive of the twenty-four elders who surround the throne of God in the Book of the Revelation of John.[96] The twenty-four seniors together are represented on the Golden Talisman as the twenty-four columns that ring the center circle of the talisman (see figure 64).

There is a seventh planetary senior who is attributed to the sun. Just as the sun is the central "king" of our solar system, so too is the sun senior identified as king and found in the center of each Elemental Tablet.

The King

Like the sun, which attracts and holds the planets in orbit, the king of each Elemental Tablet is said to summon and direct the seniors for heavenly duties. When those duties are of a merciful nature, the king spells his name a bit differently than when the duties are those of severity and judgment.

Like those of the six seniors, the seven letters of the king's name are drawn entirely from the Great Central Cross (the lines of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost) of the Elemental Tablet. Beginning with the fifth letter from the left in the horizontal line of the Holy Ghost, the name is spelled out in a clockwise whirl that ends in one of the two squares that occupies the center of the cross: either at the sixth letter from the left for operations of mercy (figure 75) or the seventh letter from the left for operations of judgment (figure 76).

In the case of the Elemental Tablet of Fire, the letters that hold those positions are both *a*s, so both names are Edlprna.

Figures 75 and 76: Clockwise whirl spelling the two names of the king of the Elemental Tablet of Fire, Edlprna and Edlprna

Perhaps my use of the Elemental Tablet of Fire is not the best example to illustrate how the name of the king is formed by the clockwise whirls because the resulting names are the same. The other three Elemental Tablets yield distinctly different names.

The names of the Kings of all four Elemental Tablets are found in appendix IV.

The Five Crosses (One Great Cross and Four Lesser Crosses)

Each of the four quarters formed by the Great Central Cross is a rectangle five squares wide by six squares high. These quadrants are often referred to in modern Enochian magick as lesser angles or subangles. Just as the reformed Great Table positions the Elemental Tablet of Air in its upper left, Water in its upper right, Earth in its lower left, and Fire in its lower right quadrants, so too each subangle is assigned one of the four elements and positioned on its Elemental Tablet in the same way.

Each of the four subangles is dominated by a Calvary cross made up of ten squares (the ten men of the vision of the Golden Talisman), which form the two god names of the subangle. The name drawn from the six letters of the vertical column of the cross (read top to bottom) was said to summon the angels of the subangle, and the five-letter god name of the horizontal bar of the cross (read left to right) was said to command them. Figure 78 shows the god names rzionr and nrzfm from the Fire subangle (the lower right quadrant) of the Elemental Tablet of Fire.

Sixteen White Creatures (Dispositors)

Next in procession in Kelley's vision (and next in the hierarchy of the Elemental Tablets) are the "16 white Creatures." On the Golden Talisman diagram they are represented as sixteen small columns standing side-by-side at the extremity of each rectangular cloth (see figure 64) where they are labeled "XVI Dispositors."

Among modern magicians there are several schools of thought concerning the identity of the sixteen dispositors. The simplest (and in my opinion the most correct) theory holds they are made up of the four angels who reside beneath the arms of the Calvary cross of each of the four subangles of the Elemental Tablet. Referred to as good angels or servient angels, they are invoked and commanded by the god names of their Calvary cross and have powers and knowledge that can be of great practical use to the magician (see appendix IV).

The names of the servient or good angels can be spelled with four letters (if you omit the central letter from the vertical bar of the Calvary cross) or with five letters (if you include the letter from the cross). In our example, the names are:

adre or ad[i]re
sisp or si[o]sp
pali or pa[n]li
ACar or AC[r]ar

This is a logical and very workable way of looking at the angelic hierarchy of the Elemental Tablet and conforms nicely to the vision of the Golden Talisman and to the way Dee composed his prayers to conjure these good angels.

This theory does, however, leave out in the cold the four letters above the arm of each Calvary cross. To address this issue we must bring up the several schools of thought concerning Kerubs.

Kerubic Angels

In Christian iconography, every well-appointed crucifix bears a rectangular piece of wood nailed above the head of Christ and displaying the four letters INRI.[97] So too above the arms of the Calvary cross of every subangle we find four letters that spell the name of the Kerub of the subangle, a unique spiritual personage. The Golden Dawn dubbed these angels Kerubs.[98]

Now, if you are paying attention, you might want to point out that there are only four subangles and only four Calvary crosses (one in each Elemental Tablet), and therefore there should only be four Kerub/dispositors, not sixteen, per tablet. Of course, your observation would be accurate—if we restrict ourselves to spelling their names in a straightforward and orderly manner. But according to this theory, there are actually four Kerubs hidden in the four letters above the arms of every Calvary cross, and these sixteen Kerubs are actually the sixteen dispositors.

Let's use the Fire (lower right) subangle of the Fire Elemental Tablet and the Kerub ZiZa as our example.

This subangle's four Kerubs are created from a simple permutation of the four letters above the arms of the Calvary cross; simply slide the four letters to the left, each time placing the displaced first letter to the back of the line:

ZiZa iZaZ ZaZi aZiZ

This dynamic perpetual motion of letters doesn't stop with the Kerub, for each letter of the Kerub's name can also rule a column and row of the sixteen letters of the servient angels residing beneath the arm of the Calvary cross.

In our example, the first Z in the Kerub's name rules the column directly beneath it and the arm of the cross: aspA.

The Z also rules the bottom row of the subangle: ACar.

Figure 81 shows how the other letters in the Kerub's name rule the servient angels of the subangle.

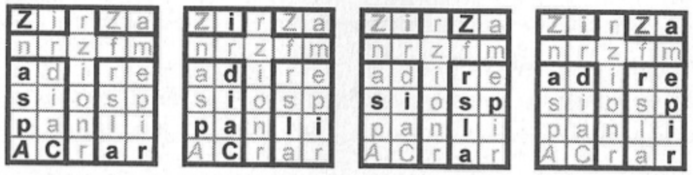

Figure 81: How the letters of the Kerub rule the servient angels of the Fire subangle: The first Z rules column name aspA and row name ACar. The letter I rules column name diaC and row name pali. The second Z rules column name rsla and row name sisp. And finally, the letter a rules column name epir and row name adre.

According to this theory, in order to open a subangle to summon or contact a servient angel, the magician must first invoke the two god names of the Calvary cross of the subangle in question, then invoke the Kerub, then invoke the servient angel of choice. This is a logical and workable system, but one that doesn't appear to have been on Dee and Kelley's menu. In fact, original material suggests that the Kerub is a unique citizen of the subangle, one who is not under the rulership of the Calvary cross, but under a "god" whose name begins with a sacred letter drawn from the Black Cross (the Great Central Cross) of the Great Table.

A Super Kerub?

Neither Dee or Kelley nor the modern magicians of the Golden Dawn ever use the term Super Kerub.

There is, however, a variety of kerubic angel who seems to embody that title. Like the variety of kerubs we've just discussed, the names of the Super Kerubs are drawn from the letters above the arms of the Calvary crosses of the subangles of the Great Tablet. But, instead of answering to the two Calvary cross god names of their subangle, the Super Kerubs answer to a higher authority—a supercharged angel who is linked directly to the Black Cross of the unreformed Great Tablet. This angel was the subject of much discussion in the original Dee and

Kelley material, for its existence and posers were central to the understanding of the "wicked" angels.

In order for us to understand the nature of the Super Kerubs and the wicked angels, we will need to take a closer look at the Black Cross.

CHAPTER TWENTY-FOUR

The Black Cross, Super Kerubs, Wicked Angels, Missing Symmetrical Characters, and the Tablet of Union

> That shall make the cross that bindeth the 4 Angles of the Table together. The same that stretcheth from the left to right, must also stretch from the right to the left . . .
> —THE ANGEL AVE, JUNE 25, 1584[99]

I stated earlier that I have been unable to find in the surviving Dee and Kelley material any overt references to the four Watchtowers as being Elemental Tablets of Fire, Water, Air, and Earth. However, the communicating angels gave every indication that the dynamics and hierarchical structure of the Great Table were, at least in part, elemental in nature. In the communication of Monday, June 25, 1584, the angel Ave speaks of the virtues of the table:[100]

> First, generally this Table containeth:
> 1. All humane knowledge.
> 2. Out of it springeth Physick.
> 3. The knowledge of all elemental Creatures, amongst you. How many kindes there are, and for what use they were created. Those that live in the air, by themselves. Those that live in the waters, by themselves. Those that dwell in the earth, by themselves. The property of the fire—which is the secret life of all things.

4. The knowledge, finding and use of Metal.
   The vertues of them.
   The congelations, and vertues of Stones.
   } They are all of one matter.
5. The conjoining and knitting together of Natures. The destraction of Nature, and of things may perish.
6. Moving from place to place, [as, into this Country, or that Country at pleasure.]
7. The knowledge of all crafts Mechanical.
8. Transmutatio formalis, sed non effentialis.[101]

If we look at the four quarters of the Great Table as being the Elemental Tablets of Air, Water, Earth, and Fire, the Black Cross that separates and joins the tablets would then obviously represent Spirit—that quintessential force that binds the four elements together in infinite quantities and ratios to create and sustain the universe, while at the same time keeping the elements separated just enough to retain their identities. This push/pull, active/passive nature is a defining characteristic of Spirit. As I mentioned earlier, this characteristic is illustrated (as every good ceremonial magician knows) by the dynamics of the pentagram, which allow for two types of Spirit pentagram, one active and one passive.

The Black Cross contains forty letters that radiate from the central blank square. When we read from the top of the column toward the center, we find the curiously spaced and inconsistently capitalized letters e xarp and h Coma. When we start at the center square of the Black Cross and read to the right, we find the letters nanTa and bitom.

We can find identical sets of letters if we read from the bottom of the column toward the center and from the center of the row to the left. In other words, the Black Cross contains mirror images of the letter groups e xarp, h Coma, nanTa, and bitom—a phenomenon curiously reflective of the dual nature of Spirit.

During the same June 25 session, Ave would (in remarkably few words) explain the letters on the Black Cross, answer questions concerning the three missing symmetrical characters of the tenth Aire (Lexarph, Comanan, and Tabitom—the twenty-eighth, twenty-ninth, and thirtieth parts of the earth; see chapter eighteen, figure 63), and demonstrate how those three names construct a master table, the Tablet of Union, which appears to rule the whole Great Table.

But before discussing all that, we have a small bit of unfinished business to clean up from the last chapter. I am, of course, talking about the Super Kerubs and the wicked angels.

Super Kerubs, or Gods of the Kerubs?

It is my opinion, and I'm sure many will disagree, that there are two hierarchies of angels existing simultaneously in each subangle. The first hierarchy simply begins with the two god names of the Calvary cross, who are invoked before calling upon the four servient angels whose names appear beneath the arm of the cross. In this schema, all the names of the angels in the hierarchy are drawn neatly and exclusively from within the subangle itself. The Kerub plays no role at all.

The second hierarchy, I believe, does not use the two god names of the Calvary cross at all, nor does it necessarily concern itself with the servient angels. Instead, it places a new character, a Super Kerub, or kerubic god, above a group of angels whose names are drawn exclusively from the four letters above the arms of the cross.

Figure 82 is a version of the original, unreformed Great Table that I've highlighted to, hopefully, make this all clear. I realize it may sound crazy for us to bounce back to using the unreformed table when locating these angels, but it is the unreformed table the angels used in 1584 when this information was received. For the moment, please ignore the circled backwards letters on the diagram.

The letters of the Black Cross are the key to creating the kerubic gods. Note how four of the letters in the column are isolated from others that appear neatly in groups of four. Reading from the top toward the center, the e of e xarp and the h of h Coma are isolated. Reading from the bottom toward the center, the p of exar p and the a of hCom a are also isolated. Note that these four isolated letters appear in the same rows as the Kerubs who live above the arms of the Calvary crosses of all sixteen subangles.

To determine the name of a subangle's kerubic god, simply insert the isolated letter (that appears on the same row as the Kerub's name) at the beginning of the Kerub's four-letter name. For example, the Kerub of the Fire subangle of the Fire tablet, ZiZa, would be transformed into the Super Kerub, pZiZa (see figure 80). Instead of ruling the servient angels, this Super Kerub pZiZa directly rules four angels whose names are created by the permutation of the Kerub's own name: ZiZa, iZaZ, ZaZi, and aZiZ. A table containing all the kerubic gods and their Kerubs can be found in appendix IV.

The important thing to remember is that in this system there are two hierarchies of angels in each of the sixteen subangles: one hierarchy that simply uses the god name of the Calvary cross to summon or contact the serviant angels living under the arms of the cross, and one hierarchy that selects a letter from the Black Cross (outside the Elemental Tablet) and adds it to the Kerub's name to create a kerubic god who rules four Kerubs whose names are created by the permutation of the regular Kerub's own name.

When to use one hierarchy and not the other in a magical operation remains a subject of debate among modern magicians. One thing is certain, the more the magician understands about the nature and dynamics of the Great Table, the more he or she will be able to devise a logical and workable mode. So let's discover more wonders of the Black Cross. Let's start with something we haven't encountered before in Enochian magick—wicked angels.

Wicked Angels

The letters of the Black Cross are also the key to creating the names of the four wicked, or evil or malevolent, angels of each subangle. Up to now we've been dealing with angels whose names are representative of complete and balanced segments of the Great Table and its Elemental Tablets. But during the June 25 session, as the angel Ave was expounding on the virtues of the Black Cross, he also introduced Dee and Kelley to a set of angels that are not complete and balanced—angels he referred to as being "wicked." These malevolent angels manifest aversely the powers of their good-angel subangle neighbors. For example, if the good angels are useful for healing, the wicked angels bring sickness and affliction (see appendix IV).

But some of the wicked angel duties seem rather tempting and are said to be useful in obtaining money and for gambling. Kelley initially got pretty excited about such prospects and was very disappointed when Ave in no uncertain terms told him hands off the evil angels. Why Ave would give details of these critters and turn around and tell the magicians not to use them remains a mystery. Or does it?

The name of an evil angel is a portrait of incompleteness and imbalance supercharged with an injection of the immense power of the Black Cross—a dangerous recipe if there ever was one. Creating it is very simple. Here's how to do it.

Remember how we created the name of a kerubic god by prefacing the name of a regular Kerub with the letter from the Black Cross occupying the same row? Well, that's almost exactly what we do to create the name of a wicked angel. However, instead of prefacing the four letters of a Kerub's name, we preface only the first two letters of the servient angel's name with its neighboring letter from the Black Cross. This three-letter supercharged perversion of the first half of a servient angel's name is a wicked angel.

r	r	s	O	n	i
p	i	z	i	n	r

And how does one, if one were inclined, call forth these evil angels? Who are their hierarchical rulers? As one might expect, the adverse god names that call forth the evil angels are the names on the Calvary cross spelled backwards. In the case of our example they are iOpgna and xanNu.

You can easily work out the names of the other evil angels and their rulers by referring to figure 82 or consulting the table in appendix IV.

Paraoan

Ave was particularly concerned that Dee and Kelley locate the name Paraoan on the Great Table. The significance of this great angel has not (at least to my satisfaction) been adequately explored or explained. The name Paraoan first appeared among the ninety-one parts of the earth as one of the three divine names (number 65) in the twenty-second Aire. Paraoan is the divine name of the part of the earth designated as Marmarica. According to Enochian scholar Robin Cousins, in Dee and Kelley's day, Marmarica was a North African coastal region straddling the Egyptian and Libyan coasts, bounded on the east by the River Nile (see appendix III).

Oddly enough, a perfectly good sixty-fifth symmetrical character already existed. It is found in the lower right section of the Elemental Tablet of Water, and spells the name Laxdizi.

Nevertheless, Paraoan seems to also hold the title of the sixty-fifth part of the earth known as Marmarica. The obvious and inescapable similarity between the names Marmarica and America inserts (into my mind at least) an added dimension of mystery to this curious anomaly. Add to this the enigmatic and direful comments Ave made concerning the final n in Paraoan:

> As far as that N. stretcheth in the Character, so far shall that Countrey be consumed with fire, and swallowed into Hell, as Sodom was for wickednesse. The end of all things is even at hand: and the earth must be purified, and delivered to another.[102]

A bit later, Dee presses Ave on this:

> Dee: I beseech you say somewhat of the N in Paraoan, of which you said, so far as that stretched, should sink to hell.
> Ave: Every letter in Paraoan, is a living fire: but all of one quality and of one Creation. But unto N is delivered a viol of Destruction, according to that part that he is of Paraoan the Governour.[103]

The letters of the name Paraoan are created from seven of the eight backward letters that appear scattered among the four Elemental Tablets of the Great Table. See the circled letters in figure 82. The eighth backwards letter, the backward L found in the lowermost square on the right of figure 82, has another very important job to do.

The Three Missing Symmetrical Characters of the Tenth Aire

Recall from the table in chapter eighteen (figure 63) that there were no symmetrical characters for the three parts of the earth assigned to the tenth Aire (those whose divine names were Lexarph, Comanan, and Tabitom). Neither can these three names be found within the available letters in any of the four Elemental Tablets. They are, however, to be found on the Black Cross, and the angel Ave, in his highly productive lecture of June 25, 1584, shows how it is done.

Ave instructed Dee and Kelley to pluck the backward capital L from the lower right corner of the lower right Watchtower (I've circled it in figure 82) and preface the lowercase letters e, x, a, r, p, and h from the column of the Black Cross to form dual versions of the divine name Lexarph.

Then starting with the capital letter C in the column, moving down from the top C (or up from the bottom C), then continuing to read either right or left into the horizontal row, dual versions of the divine name Comanan are formed.

Then, starting with the capital letter T in the left and right arms of the Black Cross and reading toward the extremities, we discover dual versions of the divine name Tabitom.

Lexarph, Comanan, and Tabitom are respectively the divine names of the twenty-eighth, twenty-ninth, and thirtieth parts of the earth in the tenth Aire, whose symmetrical characters were missing from the original material concerning the ninety-one parts of the earth. Their characters are simply the straight lines and rotating *L*s that spell out their names on the Black Cross.

Obviously, angelic beings whose names are drawn from the Black Cross are of a nature that sets them apart from their neighbors in the Elemental Tablets. Their presence in the tenth Aire also distinguishes that portion of the ninety-one parts of the earth for special attention—something that will be important to us later.

The Four Names of the Tablet of Union

Lexarph, Comanan, and Tabitom also contain within themselves the four names that appear in pairs on the Black Cross, names that are very familiar to practicing Enochian magicians: EXARP, HCOMA, NANTA, and BITOM. These are the four divine names of the elements that (in the practice of modern Enochian magick at least) rule the four Elemental Tablets.

These four names are arranged into a table five squares wide by four squares high. This Tablet of Union, in its profound simplicity, extracts the essence and hierarchical dynamics of the entire Great Table. The Tablet of Union is quite literally the Great Table distilled.

We'll soon learn much more about the Tablet of Union. But first, we are almost ready to bring the story of Dee and Kelley's Enochian period to an end. It was not long after Ave's revelations concerning the Black Cross, Kerubs, wicked angels, missing symmetrical characters, and the Tablet of Union that the two magicians' great angelic adventure, for all intents and purposes, came to a close. There remained only a couple of loose ends to tie up. But my heavens, what loose ends those were!

CHAPTER TWENTY-FIVE

"There Is All."

Nalvage is called away and cannot be in Action with you until Wednesday. Then shall you have the Calls that you look for. And so enter into the knowledge and perfect understanding of the 49 Gates and Tables if you will.

—The archangel Gabriel, Monday, July 9, 1584[104]

In early July of 1584, the two magicians were busy trying to tie up loose ends before a mysterious August deadline. On July 7, the angel Ave waxed eloquent about how Enoch made tablets such as those Dee and Kelley now possessed, and had labored fifty days in prayer and confession before receiving a supreme revelation. It appears from the communication[105] that the two magicians were to do likewise.

In a breathtakingly short amount of time, Dee and Kelley received the translations of the remaining angelic calls (five through eighteen), which they had six weeks earlier received in the angelic tongue, together with tantalizing hints that the eighteen calls might be connected to the Tablet of Union and the four Elemental Tablets.

On Thursday, July 12, the angel Ilemese[106] began to deliver a nineteenth call, together with its translation. This call was said to be actually thirty calls, bringing the total number of calls to forty-eight. Add the unexpressed "first" call (see chapter sixteen), and we have a grand total of forty-nine (7 x 7) calls. The next day, Friday the thirteenth, 1584, John Dee's fifty-seventh birthday, Ilemese delivered the remaining portion of the nineteenth call and revealed that it was the key to accessing the thirty Aires (the heavens connected to the ninety-one parts of the earth). Lastly, he revealed the names of the thirty Aires, which until then had only been identified by numbers (see chapter nineteen, figure 63, columns I and VI).

The nineteenth call was a master call to be used to access each of the thirty Aires or Aethyrs. The only thing that differentiated the thirty calls from one another was insertion of the name of the particular Aire in the first line. Ilemese delivered the names of the Aires as a simple list and then engaged in a brief exchange with Dee.

The first Aire is called ———— Lil.
The second ———— Arn.
The third ———— Zom.

Ile: There is all—Now change the name, and the Call is all one.

Δ: Blessed be he who onely is always one.

I take these names to be as primus, secudus, tertius, and to 30.

A voice . . . Not so, they be the substantial names of the Aires.

Δ: It was said they had no proper names; but were to be called, O thou of the first Aire, O thou of the second, etc. I pray you reconcile the repugnancy of theses two places, as they should seem.[107]

Dee's testiness evoked a response from none other than the archangel Gabriel, who was sitting nearby in Kelley's vision during Ilemese's discourse. The great angel stood and informed the magicians they now possessed the knowledge they needed. He encouraged them to study and prepare for the August operation and then, after one more little jab at Dee's cheekiness, delivered a most poignant valediction.

E. K. The Curtain is opened.

E. E. [sic] Now Gabriel standeth up.

Gabr . . . Thus has God kept promise with you, and hath delivered you the keyes of his storehouses: wherein you shall find, (if you enter wisesly, humbly, and patiently) Treasures more worth than the frames of the heavens.

But it is not August come: Notwithstanding the Lord hath kept his promise with you be the time. Therefore, Now examine you Books, Confer one place with another, and learn to be perfect for the practice and entrance.

See that your garments be clean. Herein be not rash: Nor over hasty; For those that are hasty and rash, and are loathsomely appareled, may knock long before they enter.

There is no other reading of the Book, but the appearing of the Ministers and Creatures of God: which shewing what they are themselves, shew how they are conjoyed in power, and represented formally by those letters.

E. K. Now he taketh the Table, and seemeth to wrap it up together.

Δ: Seeing I have moved the doubt of their names I pray you to dissolve it.

Gab . . . You play with me childishly.

Δ: I have done.

Gab . . . Thinkest thou that we speak any thing that is not true?

Thou shalt never know the mysteries of all things that have been spoken.

If you love together, and dwell together, and in one God; Then the self-same God will be merciful unto you: Which bless you, comfort you, and strengthen you unto the end. More I would say, but words profit not. God be amongst you.

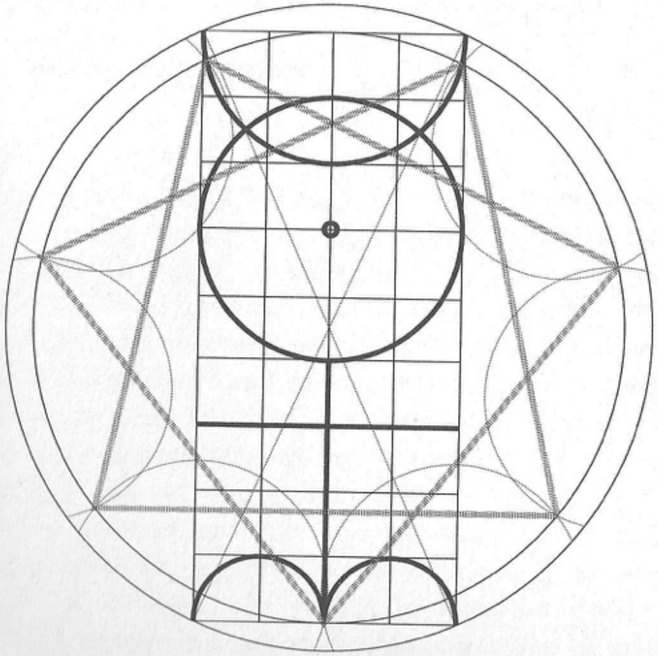
E.K. Now they both be gone in a great flame of fire upwards . . . [108]

Thus, in a dramatic burst of flame, the angels of Enochian magick fell silent, and the most amazing magical operation ever recorded came to an end. Unfortunately, we don't know if the two magicians actually performed the fifty-day operation scheduled for August. Surviving diary entries for the month treat on other matters. What we are left with, however, is an elegant and remarkably coherent system of vision magick.

For those of us who have made Enochian magick a part of our spiritual quest, Gabriel's parting words ring profoundly true. God did keep promise with Dee and Kelley and delivered unto them (and us) the keys to the storehouses wherein we shall find, if we enter wisely, humbly, and patiently, treasures worth more than the frames of the heavens.

BOOK V

Putting It Together



CHAPTER TWENTY-SIX

Rulership of the Tablet of Union

The Tablet of Union is a Great Table you can put in your briefcase; but EHNB is a Tablet of Union you can put in your pocket.

—Lon Milo DuQuette

I have purposefully placed this brief overview of practical Enochian vision magick after the chronology of Dee and Kelley's great Enochian adventure. I do so because Enochian vision magick as it is generally practiced today is a system that depends heavily on innovations that were developed long after the great magicians passed into history. Not that I think that modern Enochian magick is an affront to the memories of these two giants of magick. But I do think it is important for us to know the difference between the foundational material and the structures that have later been built upon it.

I think it is also important to remember that there is nothing particularly sacrosanct about the methods and techniques developed by the Golden Dawn, Crowley, or any other latter-day magicians. As an informed and competent magician, you are just as free as these individuals were and are to develop your own Enochian magick art form based and structured on your personal interpretation and understanding of Dee and Kelley's experiences and material. After all, in order for you to justly claim the title of magician you must be a magician, not merely a one-man or one-woman Society for Creative Anachronism dedicated to simply recreating the lives and works of real magicians of the past.

Enochian vision magick as practiced today can be divided into two broad categories: elemental and aethyric. Both require the ability to scry and to keep a faithful written record of one's workings. Scrying the Aethyrs has, in my later years, become the focus of most of my Enochian operations, because that process deals most directly with the current state of my personal initiatory career—by that I mean my personal transformational process, my spiritual journey, the lifting of my consciousness.

However, it has not always been so. Indeed, I would never encourage any magician, especially in the early stages of his or her Enochian career, to neglect either branch of Enochian exploration. I spent many years honing my visionary skills by exploring the elemental worlds that not only make up my physical, mental, and emotional environment but also actually represent everything that my limited senses tell me is me.

It is the elemental branch of Enochian vision magick that I will first discuss. To help me do this, I'm going to talk briefly about the structure of another great magical tool, the tarot.

Rulership of the Tablet of Union

The classic tarot image of the Magician shows the magician standing behind a table, upon which are four magical tools; a wand, a cup, a sword, and a disk. These are the four elemental weapons of the magician. They represent respectively the four suits of the tarot and the elements Fire, Water, Air, and Earth.

The master card of each suit is the ace. The ace is the "Spirit" of the suit—the "Spirit" of the element. The other cards in the suit are given life by the spirit of the ace. They are essentially subdivisions, components, and aspects of the ace—they all "live" inside the ace.

If we put an ace under a magick microscope, we would first see that it is composed of four major components.[109] These are the four court cards (commonly titled king, queen, prince, and princess) that represent respectively the elements Fire, Water, Air, and Earth. For example, if we put the Ace of Wands (Fire) under our magick microscope, we would see that it was composed of the King of Wands (the fiery aspect of Fire), the Queen of Wands (the watery aspect of Fire), the Prince of Wands (the airy aspect of Fire), and the Princess of Wands (the earthy aspect of Fire).

In the Enochian model, we can actually see Spirit's influence interpenetrating the heart and every quadrant of the Elemental Tablet in the form of the Great Central Cross and the Calvary crosses of the subangles. The Black Cross of the Great Table reveals Spirit's influence on an even larger scale. It literally holds together and separates the four Elemental Tablets. The Black Cross is like the ace of aces. All this is expressed most simply and elegantly in the Tablet of Union.

I draw your attention to figure 85 and the four rows of names in the Tablet of Union.

Subangles

🜂	B	I	T	O	M

Recall that Exarp, Hcoma, Nanta, and Bitom are the four names found in pairs on the Black Cross of the Great Table. In modern Enochian magick, these Black Cross letters represent the element Spirit. The four names on the Tablet of Union are not merely the master keys to the elemental universe—they are the elemental universe.

Starting with the top row, we see that EXARP is the elemental world of Air; HCOMA the world of Water; NANTA, Earth; and BITOM, Fire.[110] (Note the little symbols of the elements to the left of each row of names.)

Now let's look at the five columns of the Tablet of Union. The leftmost column is made from the four first letters of the names, giving us the name EHNB. At the top of this column is a little circle with spokes inside. This is the symbol of Spirit. It tells us that EHNB is the column of Spirit and the essence of the entire tablet.

Obviously, the angelic entity described by the letters EHNB is profoundly powerful. It is a name that represents and contains within itself the entire Great Table and all the angelic forces within it. E represents the entire the Elemental Tablet of Air, H the Elemental Tablet of Water, N the Elemental Tablet of Earth, and B the Elemental Tablet of Fire.

In a real sense, the remaining sixteen letters all live inside EHNB in just the same way the sixteen court cards of the tarot live inside their aces. Put E under a microscope and see the letters XARP. Put H under a microscope and see COMA. Put N under a microscope and see ANTA. Put B under a microscope and see ITOM.

As we move right, the next column is XCAI, whose letters represent the four Air subangles of the four Elemental Tablets and all the resident angels inside the Air subangles. (XCAI would be the four princes of the tarot.)

AONT does the same for the Water subangles (queens of the tarot), RMTO for the Earth subangles (princesses of the tarot), and PAAM for the Fire subangles (kings of the tarot).

Now are you starting to see the power resident in the Tablet of Union? If we were to call EXARP, HCOMA, NANTA, and BITOM archangels of the elements, then we would have to say that EHNB is the archangel of archangels of the elements. The Tablet of Union is a Great Table you can put in your briefcase, but EHNB is a Tablet of Union you can put in your pocket.

The Tablet of Union and the four Elemental Tablets are activated and penetrated in vision by intoning one or two of the first eighteen calls in the angelic tongue. I give details showing how this is done in appendix II, but here is a brief overview:

The first two calls are dedicated to the Tablet of Union exclusively and are never used to call or visit the angels of the Elemental Tablets.

The next four calls (three through six) deal with the angels of the individual letters of EXARP, HCOMA, NANTA, and BITOM, and/or are used to activate and penetrate the native subangles of the Elemental Tablets. (A native subangle is the subangle of an Elemental Tablet that represents the same element as the Elemental Tablet—e.g., the Air Subangle of the Air Tablet, the Water Subangle of the Water Tablet.)

The next twelve calls (seven through eighteen) are used to activate and penetrate the remaining three subangles of the Elemental Tablets. How these calls are allotted to the various subangles is an exercise in routine hermetic logic.

As I mentioned earlier, it is not necessary for you to have elaborate or expensive models of the Elemental Tablets and the Tablet of Union in order to perform Enochian magick. But it is important that you have a good understanding of them and have the equipment "installed" in your mind. When I work with the angels of the Elemental Tablets or the Tablet of Union, I simply have my four colored Elemental Tablets (positioned as they appear in the reformed Great Table) on a table before me and place my small Tablet of Union on the top of them in the center.

Now on to the business of actually doing Enochian vision magick.

CHAPTER TWENTY-SEVEN

Elemental Workings, Temple Openings, and Addressing the Hierarchies

Sylphs and Gnomes and Undines too,

Salamanders beckon you . . .

—"THEME FROM MOUNT OREAD"[iii]

Why on earth would anyone wish to call upon an angel of the elements? What can a salamander (Fire elemental) do for me? When does an undine (Water elemental) come in handy? Does a sylph (Air elemental) really look like Tinkerbell? Are gnomes (Earth elementals) really grumpy? Is exploration of the elements a necessary prerequisite to higher magical workings?

As I wrote in the prologue, the question of, "why magick?" is one that is not easily answered. The supreme goal of the magician is spiritual enlightenment and liberation of the soul. Do I expect to accomplish that end through the aid of elemental spirits?

Not directly. But the elementals are a part of my world, a part of my being. They move within me and around me. They dwell among themselves in their infinite number, ratios, and proportions. "Know Thyself" was chiseled above the doors of the ancient temples of initiation. How can I know myself when the mysteries of the elements of my own heart and soul remain undiscovered?

Enochian elemental magick is not a matter of calling up a spirit to command it to do a job for you, to cause the girl next door to fall in love with you, to bewitch your neighbor's cow, or to kill an enemy at a distance. Instead, when you visit an Enochian elemental angel in vision, you are exploring a specific aspect of creation, a highly specialized area of which the angel is the visual and metaphoric embodiment. You see things the way they are in that narrow quadrant of the universe. Once armed with the insights these spiritual specialists can provide, you are better prepared to know how to go about causing the girl next door to fall in love with you or bewitching your neighbor's cow. (I understand that killing at a distance is less satisfying than one might imagine.)

Does this really help the magician? First and most obviously, it broadens his or her understanding of how the spirit world is the subjective and underlying reality of the objective world. Just as the educated and seasoned traveler is better equipped than the novice to understand rewards and pitfalls of world travel, a magician experienced with elemental work is endowed with a greater understanding of existence. That in and of itself is a spiritual reward.

But more than that, each willed encounter with the angels of the elements activates, readjusts, and rebalances the magician's own internal elemental components. Like the computer user who periodically defragments the hard drive of his or her computer in order to make things to run more efficiently, the magician is changed and (hopefully) improved with every thoughtful and seriously examined elemental encounter.

At our Monday night magick class, we've developed a series of simple questions we first ask every angel we call from an Elemental Tablet. Just as we would not expect any two computer hard drives to be fragmented in exactly the same way, no two magicians should expect the exact same answers to these questions. Here are a few of them. The first questions are the simplest yet most important:

- What is your name? (Confirm you have who you've called.)
- What is your nature?

The next questions deal with how the angel is perceived by the human senses:

- What is your color?
- What is your sound (musical note, if possible)?
- How do you feel to the human touch?
- What do you taste like?
- How do you smell?

The next questions deal with how the angel makes itself known to us through our thoughts and emotions:

- How do I express you through emotions?
- In what form of images and ideas are you most revealed to me?
- When are you most manifest in my daily life?

Other questions could concern things more specific to one's own personal magical issues, but I think you get the picture.

Now that we know a little more about why to practice Enochian elemental magick, let's look at how to do it. It is likely that my opinion on this subject will be slightly at odds with a number of practicing Enochian magicians. It is even more certain to receive condemnation by legions of others who don't actually perform Enochian magick but instead enjoy speculating how Enochian magicians should operate.

Dee and Kelley contacted the angels by praying. Boy, did they pray! There is nothing in the surviving records that suggests that they performed banishing rituals, drew pentagrams or hexagrams in the air, made knocks or magical gestures, or called upon the strings of classic qabalistic Hebrew divine names from the sephiroth of the Tree of Life. The operating procedures of the Golden Dawn and Crowley, however, do all those things and more.

Here is an example of a Golden Dawn–style temple opening appropriate for working with the Elemental Table of Earth. It is a ceremony that incorporates ritual components from the GD's neophyte degree, the grade that represents Malkuth, the tenth and lowest sephirah on the Tree of Life. As you can see, the ritual invokes the qabalistic hierarchy of divine names, archangels, and angels traditionally attributed to Malkuth and the element Earth.

The Opening of the Temple in the Grade of 1° = 10□

Give the Sign of the God SET fighting.

Purify with Fire and Water, and announce

"The Temple is cleansed."

Knock.

"Let us adore the Lord and King of Earth! Adonai ha Aretz, Adonai Melehk, unto Thee be the Kingdom, the Sceptre, and the Splendour: Malkuth, Geburah, Gedulah, The Rose of Sharon and the Lily of the Valley, Amen!"

Sprinkle Salt before Earth tablet.

"Let the Earth adore Adonai!"

Make the Invoking Hexagram of Saturn.

Make the Invoking Pentagram of Spirit Passive and pronounce . . .

"AHIH AGLA NANTA"

Make the Invoking Pentagram of Earth, and pronounce . . .

"ADNI MLK." And Elohim said: "Let us make Man in Our own image; and let them have dominion over the Fish of the Sea and over the Fowl of the Air; and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the Earth. And the Elohim created ATh-h-ADAM: in the image of the Elohim created They them; male and female created They them. In the Name of ADNI MLK, and of the Bride and Queen of the Kingdom; Spirits of Earth, adore your Creator!"

Make the Sign of Taurus.

"In the Name of Auriel, great archangel of Earth, Spirits of Earth, adore your Creator!"

Make the Cross.

"In the Names and Letters of the Great Northern Quadrangle, Spirits of Earth, adore your Creator!"

Sprinkle water before Earth Tablet.

"In the three great secret Names of God, MOR, DIAL, HCTGA, that are borne upon the Banners of the North, Spirits of Earth, adore your Creator!"

Cense the Tablet.

"In the name of ICZHIHA, great king of the North, Spirits of Earth, adore your Creator! In the Name of Adonai Ha-Aretz, I declare that the Spirits of Earth have been duly invoked."

Knock. 4444—333—22—1

For many modern Enochian magicians, rituals such as this qabalistically formatted degree opening ceremony are perfect vehicles for establishing the proper elemental environment in which to operate. For years they were an indispensable part of my operating procedure as well. I discontinued, however, about ten years ago.

As we myopically focus on the fascinating intricacies of different magical systems, we often forget the big picture and the fact that we have only one universe to play with. There is no such thing as a separate qabalistic magick universe, or a separate Solomonic magick universe, or a separate Enochian magick universe. These various systems simply oblige us to view the same universe from different angles. Granted, when we look from differing points of view, we see certain similarities. After all, it's the same universe. There are certain to be recognizable landmarks. But we can't expect the structure of one system's point of view to neatly match or define the other.

It is my opinion that the spiritual forces inherent in Enochian magick are expressed units of living consciousness that reflect a uniquely structured and organized point of view of the universe—one that the communicating angels obliged Dee and Kelley to build from scratch. It is a perfect, self-referential system of looking at things that cannot be expected to be consistently compatible with other self-referential systems.

With all due respect to the knowledgeable and eloquent magicians who created the above temple opening, I believe that (unless your sensitivities as a magical artist demands it) most of it is completely unnecessary in order for you to properly activate an Elemental Tablet and effectively address the hierarchy of angels who rule the angel you may wish to contact. The use of the various pentagrams and the hexagram, the assumption of a Samo-Thracian elemental god-form, the invocation of the various names of the Hebrew deity and traditional angels, and the recitation of Bible verses are all tried-and-true magical methods to access the elemental world of Earth, but they are tools used in another kind of magical system—a system that views the magical universe from a slightly different angle, music played using a different scale of notes.

Please don't misunderstand me. Qabalistic temple openings such as the one above work effectively enough for Enochian elemental operations. But what makes them work, in my opinion, is not the pentagrams, Hebrew god names, or Bible verses. They work because, nestled within the ramblings and tossing about of salt and water, the magician is required to recognize and address by name the spiritual forces of the elements as they are uniquely organized and expressed in the Enochian magick system. In our example above, those names are Nanta (the great angel of Earth from the Tablet of Union), Mor, Dial, Hctga (the Three Great Secret Names of God from the Elemental Tablet of Earth), and Iczhiha (the king of the Elemental Tablet of Earth). The hierarchy of high elemental forces that the other magical system calls Adonai ha Aretz, Adonai Melehk, Malkuth, the Rose of Sharon, and the Lily of the Valley—everything the other system calls forth by means of pentagrams, gestures, and Bible verses—are all wrapped up and neatly addressed in the Enochian system in the names Nanta, Mor, Dial, Hctga, and Iczhiha.

If you conclude that my thoughts on this subject have some merit, I encourage you to customize for yourself a simply formatted little speech that addresses by name and in proper order the various angelic personages of the hierarchies of each Elemental Tablet. I will outline my address to the hierarchies at the end of this chapter. But first, let's discuss what the proper procedure for an elemental working might be.

DuQuette's Protocol for Enochian Elemental Vision Magick

The lower the angel you wish to contact is in the hierarchy of the Elemental Tablet, the more superior angels there are above it who must be named and addressed. Therefore, for our example I will use Adre, a lowly servient angel found under the arms of the Calvary cross of the Fire Subangle of the Elemental Tablet of Fire. (See chapter twenty-three, figures 71 through 79.)

I. Preliminaries

Before embarking on any formal magical operation it is helpful, indeed necessary, to feel good about oneself. Therefore, I always recommend that the magician first bathe, dress in clean clothing, and operate in a clean and uncluttered space. It is also wise to formally purify and banish the area before operating. These preliminary ceremonies can be as simple or as elaborate as you feel necessary. I always begin with a simple Lesser Banishing Ritual of the Pentagram that I've customized to reflect my own taste and spiritual proclivity. A classic version if the pentagram ritual can be found at the beginning of appendix I.

I next perform the Ceremony of Preparation that is outlined in chapter one and appendix I of this book. I consider this ritual an Enochian magick temple opening par excellence. I believe it serves to purify, banish, and consecrate both the temple and the magician in a manner that is in harmony with the universe as perceived by the Enochian angels. It also establishes and sanctifies the magical environment for the black mirror or scrying stone.

II. The Call(s)

A complete list of the angels of all four Elemental Tablets, together with their traditional duties, can be found in appendix IV.

In order to contact any angel from an Elemental Tablet, one need first activate the tablet by intoning the proper call or calls in the Enochian tongue. The calls and the key to their use can be found in appendix II.

Only one call is necessary if your target angel resides in the Great Central Cross (one of the Three Great Secret Names of God, a senior, or a king). Also, only one call is necessary if your target angel resides in the native subangle of the Elemental Tablet (e.g., the Fire Subangle of the Fire Tablet, the Water Subangle of the Water Tablet, etc.). But if your target angel resides in a non-native subangle (e.g., the Earth Subangle of the Water Tablet, the Air Subangle of the Fire Tablet, etc.), you must also recite an additional call assigned specifically to the subangle.

Our target angel, Adre, resides in the native subangle (Fire Subangle of the Fire Tablet), so we need only recite the sixth call (see appendix II).

Reciting the sixth call switches on the power of the Elemental Tablet of Fire, as it were, and puts it in standby mode to await more specific actions from the magician.

III. Addressing the Hierarchy

Whether you feel it or not,[112] your recitation of the sixth call has put you in an altered state of consciousness. Magically speaking, you are now present within the environment of the Element Tablet of Fire. You have awakened the spiritual forces of the tablet, and they are waiting to see if you are worthy of their attention. If you can convince the spirits of the tablet that you know where you are and how you got there, they will acknowledge you as a natural citizen of their well-ordered magical universe. Once you've established rapport with its superiors, the target angel will have no choice but to be compliant and ready to open its mysteries to you.

You prove your worthiness by remembering your manners and addressing by name the angels who reign over your target angel. In the case of a servient angel like Adre, the hierarchy is essentially the whole cast of characters. Starting from the top we have:

1. The Supreme Name of Fire from the Tablet of Union: Bitom.
2. The Three Great Secret Names of God of the Elemental Tablet of Fire: Oip, Teaa, Pdoce.
3. The name of the king of the Elemental Tablet of Fire: Edlprna.
4. The names of the six planetary seniors of the Elemental Tablet of Fire: Aaetpio, Adoeoet, Alndvod, Aapdoce, Arinna, and Anodoin.
5. The first god name of the Fire subangle: Rzionr.
6. The second god name of the Fire subangle: Nrzfm.
7. And finally, the name of our target servient angel: Adre.

If the target angel is higher on the hierarchical ladder, there are fewer names to include in your little speech. For example, to call a senior, you only need to use the names in steps 1, 2, and 3 before calling on the name of the target senior. If your target angel is the king of the Elemental Tablet, you only have to use the names in steps 1 and 2.[113]

And what about the kerubic angels who, as we learned earlier, have a separate hierarchy that skips the god names of the subangle?

In the case of the Fire subangle of the Elemental Tablet of Fire, simply replace the name in step 5 with the name of the god Kerub (Pziza) and replace the name in step 6 with the name of the Kerub (ZiZa, iZaZ, ZaZi, or aZiZ).

IV. Calling Your Target Angel

Repeat out loud the name of the target angel, Adre, several times. State why you have called it; ask your questions and/or make your requests, then sit quietly and scry. If necessary, repeat the call to induce a deeper state of mind. If you wish, have a tape recorder running and describe your vision as it unfolds. Don't tire yourself. Conclude your visionary business at the first signs of fatigue. Thank the angel and formally close the session with a banishing ritual of your choice.

V. Write It All Down

Immediately transcribe everything into your magical journal. I mean everything: the date and time, weather conditions, astrological aspects (if you know them and care about such things). Even if you think there is nothing to report, write that down, along with your thoughts of why things might not have worked.

Sample of a Hierarchical Invocation

The invocation below is what I currently use to acknowledge and invoke the hierarchy of the Elemental Tablet. I will provide the English translation of it first so you will know what it is saying. You may easily customize your own by referring to an Enochian dictionary.[114]

With the Elemental Tablet before me, I utter each angel's name and I wave my wand over the squares that spell it.

> I invoke and move thee, O thou, Spirit (name of target angel).
> And being exalted above you in the power of the Most High, I say unto you come forth and obey!
> In the name of (Supreme Name from the Tablet of Union; e.g., Exarp, Hcoma, Nanta, or Bitom); > and in the name of (the Three Great Secret Names of God of the Elemental Tablet), > and in the name of (the name of the king of the Elemental Tablet), > and in the name of (the names of the six seniors of the Elemental Tablet),
> and in the name of . . . ,
> and in the name of. . . ,

and in the name of . . . (as many names in hierarchy as necessary),

I invoke and move thee, O thou Spirit (name of target angel).

Here is the same invocation in the Enochian angelic language:

Ol vinu od zacam, Ils gah (name of target angel).

Od lansh vors gi Iad, gohus pugo ils niiso od darbs!

Dooiap (Supreme Name from the Tablet of Union), od dooiap (the Three Great Secret Names of God), od dooiap (the name of the king),

od dooiap (the names of the six seniors),

od dooiap . . . ,

od dooiap . . . ,

od dooiap . . . (as many names in hierarchy as necessary),

Ol vinu od zacam, Ils gah (name of target angel).

CHAPTER TWENTY-EIGHT

Aethyric Workings

Everything in heaven and earth is connected to everything in heaven and earth.

Everything in heaven and earth is the reflection of everything in heaven and earth.

Everything in heaven and earth contains the pattern of everything in heaven and earth.

Look hard enough at anything and you will eventually see everything.

—Rabbi Lamed Ben Clifford[115]

In order to more easily understand what follows, I ask that you turn back to chapter eighteen and refer to the columns in figure 63.

Right up until the last day of the Enochian period, Dee and Kelley believed that the thirty Aires (column I) were simply the numbered segments of creation that organized in groups of three[116] the ninety-one parts of the earth. Furthermore, they believed that the ninety-one divinely appointed names of the parts of the earth (column IV) were merely the angelic language names for the geographic areas of the earth named in column III. But in his final communication of July 13, 1584, the angel Ilemese revealed that the thirty Aires had names and a certain connection with the nineteenth call. As we saw in chapter twenty-five, this concept appeared to confuse and irritate Dee, who seemed comfortable with merely identifying the Aires by their sequence number.

Even though there is very little in the surviving material to suggest the thirty Aires are anything other than containers for the parts of the Earth, many modern magicians believe they carry a more profound significance. Indeed, it appears to me that this is an excellent example of modern magicians picking up the football where Dee and Kelley dropped it and running with it for a very big touchdown. The basic idea is this.

In keeping with the most fundamental hermetic and qabalistic axiom, "As above, so below," the *micro*cosmic world (the physical universe and humanity) is the reflection of a heavenly *macro*cosmic world of divine consciousness. So too, the thirty Aires containing the ninety-one parts of the earth are the microcosmic reflection of thirty Aethyrs, or heavens, that surround and enclose the four Watchtowers of the Great Table in thirty heavenly spheres, like layers of a glass onion.

Like the ten sephiroth and the twenty-two paths on the Tree of Life, the thirty Aethyrs can be viewed as emanations of divine consciousness. The thirtieth or lowest Aethyr would represent a level of divine consciousness that is so low that it has almost descended into matter. The first or highest Aethyr would represent the pure and undifferentiated mind of Deity.

Using this model, the ninety-one parts of the earth (column IV of figure 63) have their counterparts in the Aethyrs, and the divine names of the parts of the earth (e.g., Pascomb for Syria) also serve as the names of angelic governors, who, in groups of three, inhabit the thirty Aethyrs. The only exception to this is the thirtieth Aethyr, Tex, which has four governors.

There is a great temptation among modern practitioners to project this thirty-Aethyr model upon classic schema of the qabalistic Tree of Life with its ten sephiroth and twenty-two paths that also represent levels of consciousness. Some magicians go so far as to suggest the thirty Aethyrs can simply be divided by three into ten units and superimposed upon the ten sephiroth of the Tree. I wish I could believe things were as simple as that, but, as I wrote in the previous chapter, the classic qabalistic and Enochian models oblige us to view the same universe from different angles.

Aleister Crowley gave perhaps the most comprehensible way of viewing the relationship of the thirty Aethyrs and the Tree of Life:

> It is to be remarked that the last three æthyrs have ten angels attributed to them, and they therefore represent the ten Sephiroth. Yet these ten form but one, a Malkuth-pendant to the next three, and so on, each set being, as it were, absorbed in the higher. The last set consists, therefore, of the first three æthyrs with the remaining twenty-seven as their Malkuth.[117]

The angels Crowley is referring to are the governors of the Aethyrs. Because Tex contains four governors instead of three, Crowley considered the last three Aethyrs (Tex, Rii, and Bag) as a set containing ten governors who could be projected on a Tree of Life (see figure 86).

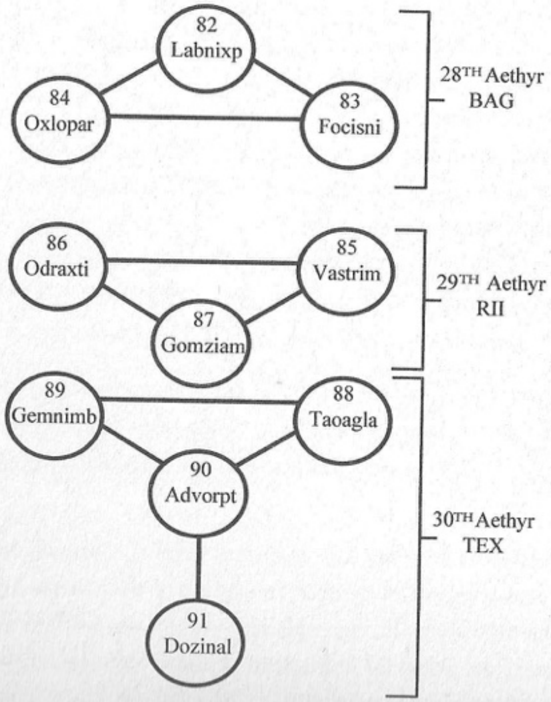

Figure 86: The first (lowest) set of governors (of the thirtieth, twenty-ninth, and twenty-eighth Aethyrs) projected on a single Tree of Life

He then posited that this entire Tree of Life becomes the Malkuth (the tenth and lowest sephirah) of a higher Tree of Life made up of the nine governors of the next three Aethyrs (Zaa, Des, and Vti), which, in turn, become the Malkuth of the next three Aethyrs, and so on all the way to the top.

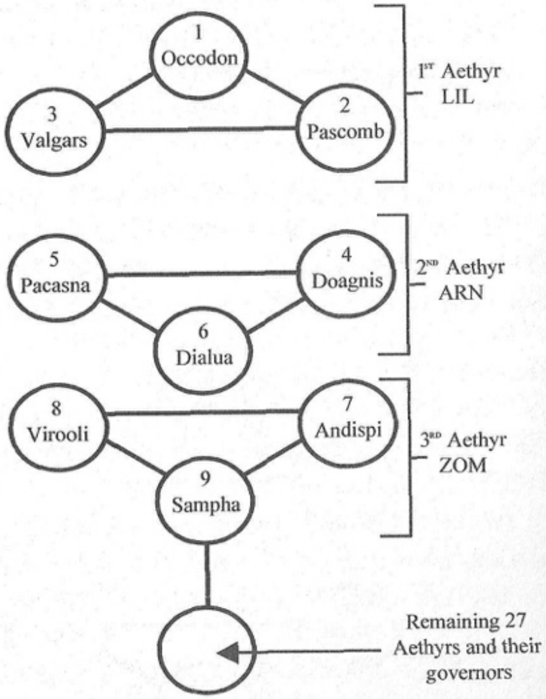

Figure 87: The last (highest) set of governors (of the first, second, and third Aethyrs) with the remaining twenty-seven Aethyrs and their governors encapsulated in a master Malkuth

You may or may not resonate with Crowley's view on this subject. Still, it is not unreasonable to compare the thirty Aethyrs to the sephiroth of the Tree of Life, especially when we understand both of them to be levels of personal initiation. This is precisely how Aleister Crowley viewed them. His systematic scrying of the Aethyrs as he walked across the North African Sahara in 1909 are chronicled in his visionary masterwork, The Vision & the Voice, a text I believe should be studied by anyone interested in Enochian aethyric vision work.

While I certainly am not yet ready to compare my aethyric adventures with those of Crowley's, I have on multiple occasions engaged in a systematic exploration of the Aethyrs. I have, on a number of occasions, scryed each Aethyr, starting with number thirty, Tex, and worked my way to number one, Lil. Even my Monday night magick class is obliged to now and again undergo thirty weeks of scrying the Aethyrs.

Am I suggesting that we all actually achieve the sublime levels of consciousness represented by the higher Aethyrs? Of course I am not. But most of us receive provocative and highly personal visions, especially in the lower Aethyrs. That is because the lower Aethyrs represent levels of consciousness that we visit all the time in the natural course of daily life—in dreams, reveries, ecstasies, even deliriums. Even as I write these words, I am probably dipping into the lower Aethyrs as my memory and imagination conjure images that help me crystallize ideas I can put into words on the page. (I probably spent my entire senior year of high school staring into space and cruising in the lower Aethyrs!)

As the magician moves upwards through the Aethyrs, he or she progressively breaks into higher and higher levels of consciousness. If we are prepared for this new territory, our visions are characterized by a certain spontaneity and lucidity. However, when we begin to get out of our depth—when we haven't yet achieved the level of consciousness necessary to take the next step—our visions become murky and forced, as if we were watching it through a glass darkly. When this happens, the vision is usually characterized by a clear message announcing in no uncertain terms that we have not completely penetrated the Aethyr.

But that is not a bad thing. In fact, it is exactly what we want to happen, because we then know where we are on the initiatory ladder. Moreover, we have a chance of knowing what it is we need to do (or, more accurately, we will know who we need to become) to take the next step in our initiatory career. Allow me to illustrate with a hypothetical example.

Let's say you've resolved to systematically scry all thirty Aethyrs, one per night, from thirty to one, over a one-month period. Each night after your scrying session, you dutifully record in your journal the details of your vision. Everything is going along nicely until you attempt to penetrate in vision the fifteenth Aethyr, Oxo. You recite the nineteenth call in the proper manner and call for the three governors of Oxo (Tahando, Nociabi, and Tastoxo; see figure 63 column IV).

As the vision begins, three angels appear in the mirror, crystal, or your mind's eye, and march in a circle around you so that you cannot move in any direction. They will not respond to your questions or vouchsafe a proper vision. When something like this happens, you know that your present level of consciousness (your personal initiatory grade) is not refined enough to penetrate, let alone appreciate, the next Aethyr. It's as though you are a radio receiver not yet equipped to pull in higher broadcast frequencies. In order for you to do so, you will need to upgrade your equipment by raising your level of consciousness.

You will need to undergo an initiatory experience that will turn you into a more refined visionary traveler. And, as in all initiations, there is an obstacle that needs to be overcome. This obstacle can be anything from a psychological issue to a personal demon or character flaw. In order to conquer it, you might need just a tiny illumination concerning life, or a magical shift of focus, or to successfully achieve a more profound meditative state or trance.

You won't need to look far to discover what this obstacle is. It should be right there in your magical diary, in the record of the last Aethyr you could successfully penetrate. Somewhere in that vision there is a message telling you what it is you must do in order to take the next step in your spiritual journey through the heavens. It is sublimely simple and personal. It makes Enochian aethyric magick, in my opinion, a far more effective and user-friendly method of magical self-transformation than guided meditations or qabalistic pathworkings.

The method I use is straightforward. After performing a banishing and the Ceremony of Preparation, I simply recite the nineteenth call using the name of the particular Aethyr I wish to visit. Then I repeat the names of the three governors of the Aethyr until the vision begins.

The vision is usually characterized by the appearance of one or more of the governors, who stand ready to answer my inquiries and demonstrate the nature of the Aethyr. As in elemental workings, I try not to tire myself, and afterward make a detailed record of my experiences in my diary.

A complete list of the governors is found in chapter eighteen, in column IV of the table designated figure 63, and in appendix II, figure 90.

Epilogue

In the Middle of the Night

Isn't it enough to see that a garden is beautiful without having to believe that there are fairies at the bottom of it too?

—Douglas Adams

It's 3:15 a.m. For the last few days, I have arranged to sleep through the afternoon heat of an unseasonably hot late summer so that I may write undisturbed in the cool peace and quiet of the wee hours. This book of magick has taken me much longer to complete than I anticipated. Did I say "complete"? It's a well-worn cliché that a writer never finishes a work, but merely abandons it. I've finally come to the place where I'm ready to abandon this book. For as slim as it is, it might be hard for you to believe that it has dominated my life for nearly three years. My publisher expected it in their hands over a year ago, and for their patience I am profoundly grateful.

This is far from the end of the material, however. I've worked hard and long on the appendices, which for the practicing Enochian magician will likely become the most worn and dog-eared section of the book.

I must confess that my attitudes concerning Enochian magick have changed many times in the thirty years it has been part of my life. My respect for the magical art form, however, has never diminished and has continued to grow unabated. I feel like the musician who is moved to tears by listening to a great symphony, but who can play only a few tunes himself and those only moderately well.

Perhaps you will never choose to make Enochian magick a part of your spiritual repertoire. Perhaps you will. In either case, as I abandon this book, it is my sincerest hope that I have been able to help you in some small measure attune your magical ear to the music of the spheres.

Adieu.

Appendix I

The Ceremony of Preparation

The magician purifies and banishes the temple as he or she has skill to do so. Below is a standard version of the Lesser Banishing Ritual, a ceremony used by many modern magicians.

Touching the forehead, say, Ateh ("Unto Thee").

Touching the breast, say, Malkuth ("the Kingdom").

Touching the right shoulder, say, ve-Geburah ("and the Power").

Touching the left shoulder, say, ve-Gedulah ("and the Glory").

Clasping the hand upon the breast, say, le-OLAHM, AMEN ("to the Ages, Amen").

Turning to the east, make the banishing pentagram (that of Earth) with the wand. Say, IHVH ("Ye-ho-wau").

Turning to the south, again draw the pentagram but say, ADNI ("Adonai").

Turning to the west, again draw the pentagram but say AHIH ("Eheieh").

Turning to the north, again draw the pentagram, but say AGLA ("Agla").

Extend the arms in the form of a cross say:

> Before me Raphael,
> Behind me Gabriel,
> On my right hand, Michael,
> On my left hand, Auriel,
> For about me flames the pentagram
> And in the column stands the six-rayed star.

Touching the forehead, say, Ateh ("Unto Thee").

Touching the breast, say, Malkuth ("the Kingdom").

Touching the right shoulder, say, ve-Geburah ("and the Power").

Touching the left shoulder, say, ve-Gedulah ("and the Glory").

Clasping the hand upon the breast, say, le-OLAHM, AMEN ("to the Ages, Amen").

The Ceremony of Preparation

The Temple

The Holy Table is set in the middle of the room upon a carpet of red silk. Four small versions of the Sigillum Dei Aemeth rest under the table legs. In the center of the Holy Table rests the Sigillum Dei Aemeth surrounded by the seven Ensigns of Creation. All are covered and draped by a red silk cloth with gold tassels at the corners. The black mirror or scrying crystal is placed upon the covered Sigillum. The Ring and Lamen are at hand upon the covered table.

A chair is positioned before the table so that the face of the scryer may be reflected in the mirror. The chair must also rest upon the red silk carpet. When operating at night or in a dimly lit room, one or two candles can also be place upon the covered Holy Table.

The Ceremony

After banishing, the magician sits down and prays:

> Teach me (O creator of all things) to have correct knowledge and understanding, for your wisdom is all that I desire. Speak your word in my ear (O creator of all things) and set your wisdom in my heart. Amen.

The magician picks up the Ring and prays:

> Behold the Ring. Lo, this it is. This is it, wherewith all miracles, and divine works and wonders were wrought by Solomon: this is it, which the Archangel Michael has revealed to me. This is it, which Philosophy dreameth of. This is it, which the Angels scarce know. This is it, and blessed be his name: yea, his Name be blessed forever. Without this I shall do nothing. Blessed be his name, that encompasses all things: Wonders are in him, and his name is WONDERFUL: PELE. His Name works wonders from generation to generation. Amen.

The magician picks up the Lamen and prays:

> Behold the Lamen. As the Holy Table conciliates Heaven and Earth, let this Lamen which I place over my heart conciliate me to the Holy Table. Amen.

The magician recites seven complete rounds of the chant of the Holy Table's Perimeter Letters. If possible, the magician traces with the wand the covered letters he or she is chanting:

Pa Med Fam Med Drux Fam Fam Ur Ged Graph Drux Med Graph Graph Med Med Or Med Gal Ged Ged Drux.

Pa Drux Un Tal Fam Don Ur Graph Don Or Gisg Gon Med Un Ged Med Graph Van Ur Don Don Un.

Pa Drux Ur Ur Don Ur Drux Un Med Graph Graph Med Med Graph Ceph Ged Ged Ur Mals Mals Fam Un.

Pa Gon Med Un Graph Fam Mals Tal Ur Pa Pa Drux Un Un Van Un Med Un Gon Drux Drux Ur.

The magician chants seven rounds of the twelve letters of the Holy Table's central square:

Med Gon Gisg, Don Ur Van, Ur Don Ur, Med Med Graph.
Med Don Ur Med, Gon Ur Don Med, Gisg Van Ur Graph.

The magician chants one round of the names of the forty-nine angels upon the Sigillum Dei Aemeth:

Galas Gethog Thaoth Horlωn Innon Aaoth Galethog

Zaphkiel Zedekiel Cumael Raphael Haniel Michael Gabriel

E(l) Me Ese Iana Akele Azdobon Stimcul

I Ih Ilr Dmal Heeoa Beigia Stimcul

S Ab Ath Izad Ekiei Madimi Esemeli

E An Ave Liba Rocle Hagonel Ilemes

Sabathiel Zadkiel Madimiel Semeliel Nogahel Corabiel Lavanael

Finally, the magician quietly whispers the Holy Names of the Round Table of Nalvage. First the angel names of the corners:

luah lang sach urch

Then the god names of the four continents:

Iad moz zir—iad bab zna—iad sor gru—iad ser osf.

The magician then proceeds to the business at hand—calling an angel of an Elemental Tablet or scrying an Aethyr.

When the magician's work is done, he or she dismisses the spirit with thanks and prays:

> Thy Name be mighty, O God, which canst open the veil whereby Thy All-Powerful Will may be opened unto men. Power, Glory, and Honor be unto Thee, For Thou art the same God of all things, and art life eternal. Amen.

Appendix II

The Enochian Calls (Keys)

The genuineness of these Keys, altogether apart from any critical observation, is guaranteed by the fact that anyone with the smallest capacity for Magick finds that they work.

—Aleister Crowley[118]

Invocations?

Enochian magick as developed by the Golden Dawn and widely practiced today uses the first eighteen calls to activate the Elemental Tablets and contact the resident angels. However, in the hectic last days of the Enochian period, Dee was instructed in several places to write his own invocations. It remains unclear to me whether or not the angels were suggesting that additional "homemade" invocations were to be created as appendages to the calls. What is clear to me, after more than a quarter century of practical application, is the fact that the calls by themselves (with only the briefest of additional verbiage to awaken target angels and their hierarchy) serve admirably as the only invocations a magician needs.

Naturally, if it appeals to your magical sense of art to compose additional invocations to utter before and/or after the call, I encourage you to do so.

Pronunciation

You will probably be very surprised at how little time I spend on this subject. In fact, I am very tempted to simply paraphrase Rabbi Ben Clifford's heretical comment about the Hebrew language and tell you bluntly, "There is no such thing as correct Enochian pronunciation!" On a few occasions, the communicating angels gave Dee and Kelley suggestions as to how certain words are pronounced. But, by and large, we modern magicians are left to our own devices as to how to push these awkwardly constructed words out of our mouths.

Dee notated the words of the calls in columns. The left column contained the Enochian word in all uppercase letters—PIRIPSOL, for example. The right column contained the word in upper- and lowercase letters, which split the word into syllables and characterized certain letters as if to suggest pronunciation: Pe ríp sol. Sometimes the translation of the word appeared in a center column: "of the heavens."

The Golden Dawn and Crowley use a pronunciation method that they felt rolled more fluidly off the tongue. This method obliged the magician to insert a natural Hebrew vowel sound after every Enochian consonant. For example, the word butmon (meaning "mouth") would be pronounced, "but-a-mon-u." This is wonderful for words such as this one, giving it an almost Italian lilt. But things get a little crazy when in comes to the letter z, which the English currently pronounce as "zed" and in Dee and Kelley's day was pronounced "zod."

The angels did on occasion instruct Dee when and when not to use "zod," but its universal application to a language that uses the letter z very often becomes, in my opinion, laughably cumbersome. Using the Golden Dawn pronunciation method, the simple, one-syllable Enochain word zims ("clothing") becomes the unwieldy, four-syllable "zod-I-me-zod." You tell me which rolls off the tongue better.

The most obvious alternative to the GD pronunciation is simply sounding out the words as they are written (which appears to be what the angels generally wanted Dee and Kelley to do). For the last fifteen years, this is what I have done, and it is what I recommend to students who are learning Enochian magick. Before that, however, I used the GD/Crowley pronunciation method and was perfectly happy with it. In fact, I still use the Italian sounding method when I recite the first and second calls because I have them memorized and they hold a special place in my heart.

Both methods work just fine. In fact, any sincere effort on the part of the magician to sound out the words as they appear in the call works. Some of the best group scrying sessions I have experienced have followed the most horribly butchered recitations of the calls. It's as though the Enochian angels (like the French) appreciate any attempt on your part to speak their language. I often use the example of a mouse. If a mouse hopped up on your shoe and squeaked, you'd just shoo it away. But if it hopped up on your shoe and started to talk to you in your native tongue, you'd be impressed. You wouldn't even care if it spoke with a thick accent!

I have tried to present the calls below as close as possible to the original spelling, breaks, letter characterization, and punctuation. The English translation that follows each call is generally punctuated in the same way as the Enochian.

The Calls, the Tablet of Union, and the Elemental Tablets

According to the Golden Dawn, Crowley, and many modern Enochian magick practitioners, the first eighteen calls activate the Tablet of Union, the Elemental Tablets, and the hierarchy of angels resident in the tablets in a very specific (and demonstrably logical) manner. Although the Dee and Kelley source material does not support this arrangement, it has become the foundation of a remarkably workable system. This table is the key to their use.

CALL	ELEMENTAL TABLET	CALL USED FOR . . .
1	TABLET OF UNION	The first call is to be used first in all invocations of angels of the Tablet of Union. According to the Golden Dawn, it is never used for actions dealing with angels of the Elemental Tablets.
2	TABLET OF UNION	The second call is to be used second (after call 1) to invoke Angel EHNB of Tablet of Union. According to the Golden Dawn, it is never used with Elemental Tablets.
3	AIR	The third call can be used in one of three ways: 1. Used third (after calls 1 and 2) to invoke angels of EXARP of the Tablet of Union. 2. Used first for operations involving the Elemental Tablet of Air. 3. Used by itself for invocations of the Seniors from the Elemental Tablet of Air or for angels from the Air Subangle of the Elemental Tablet of Air.
4	WATER	The fourth call can be used in one of three ways: 1. Used third (after calls 1 and 2) to invoke angels of HCOMA of Tablet of Union. 2. Used first for operations involving the Elemental Tablet of Water. 3. Used by itself for invocations of the Seniors from the Elemental Tablet of Water or for angels from the Water subangle of the Elemental Tablet of Water.
5	EARTH	The fifth call can be used in one of three ways: 1. Used third (after calls 1 and 2) to invoke angels of NANTA of Tablet of Union. 2. Used first for operations involving the Elemental Tablet of Earth. 3. Used by itself for invocations of the Seniors from the Elemental Tablet of Earth or for angels from the Earth subangle of the Elemental Tablet of Earth.

I reign over you, sayeth the God of Justice, in power exalted above the firmaments of wrath: in whose hands the Sun is as a sword and the Moon as a through-thrusting fire which measureth your garments in the midst of my vestures, and trussed you together as the palms of my hands: Whose seats I garnished with the fire of gathering and (which) beautified your garments with admiration: to whom I made a law to govern the holy ones and delivered you a rod with the ark of knowledge. Moreover you lifted up your voices and swear obedience and faith to him that liveth and triumpheth whose beginning is not, nor end can not be, which shineth as a flame in the midst of your palace and reignneth amongst you as the balance of righteousness and truth. Move, therefore, and show yourselves: open the Mysteries of your Creation: Be friendly unto me: for I am the servant of the same your God, the true worshipper of the Highest.

Stronger are your feet than the barren stone. And mightier are your voices than the manifold winds. For you are become a building such as is not, but in the mind of the All powerful. Arise, sayeth the First. Move therefore unto his Servants: Show yourselves in power: And make me a strong Seer: for I am of him that liveth forever.

The Call of the Thirty Aethyrs

The nineteenth call is used to open each of the thirty Aethyrs. Only the name of the Aethyr itself (the third word in the first sentence) is changed.

Each Aethyr (with the exception of the thirtieth) is inhabited by three governors, who could be considered personifications of the nature of the Aethyr. I believe that after you recite the call and before you settle down to scry, it is important to pronounce, vibrate, or otherwise incorporate the names of the governors in a brief invocation.

The names of the Aethyrs and their governors are listed in figure 90. If you wish to incorporate the sigils of the governors (the symmetrical characters) for visualizations or to create talismans, the sigils can be found in chapter eighteen, in column VI of figure 63.

O you heavens which dwell in the First Ayre are mighty in the parts of the Earth, and execute the Judgment of the Highest, to you it is said, Behold the face of your God, the beginning of comfort, whose eyes are the brightness of the heavens, which provided you for the government of the Earth and her unspeakable variety, furnishing you with a power of understanding to dispose all things according to the providence of Him that sitteth on the Holy Throne, and rose up in the beginning saying: the Earth let her be governed by her parts and let there be division in her, that the glory of her may be always drunken and vexed in it self. Her course, let it run with the heavens, and as a handmaid let her serve them. One season let it confound an other, and let there be no creature upon or within her the same, All her members let them differ in their qualities, and let there be no one creature equal with an other: the reasonable Creatures of the Earth let them vex and weed out one an other, and the dwelling places let them forget their names: the work of man, and his pomp, let them be defaced: his buildings let them become caves for the beasts of the field. Confound her understanding with darkness. For why? It repenteth me I made Man. One while let her be known and an other while a stranger: because she is the bed of a Harlot, and the dwelling place of Him that is Fallen. O you heavens arise: the lower heavens underneath you, let them serve you! Govern those that govern: cast down such as fall! Bring forth with those that increase, and destroy the rotten! No place let it remain in one number: add and diminish until the stars be numbered! Arise, Move, and Appear before the Covenant of his mouth, which he hath sworn unto us in his Justice. Open the Mysteries of your Creation: and make us partakers of Undefiled Knowledge.

Appendix III

The Geographical Location of the Ninety-one Parts of the Earth Named by Man, as Detailed in John Dee's Liber Scientiae Auxilii Et Victoriae Terrestris[119]

by Robin E. Cousins

Liber Scientiae Auxilii et Victoriae Terrestris, which forms part of Sloane Manuscript 3191, provides the details necessary to operate a system of magic, by which the magician can discover

> 'how to compare . . . [the] divisions of provinces according to the Divisions of the Stars, with the Ministry of the Ruling Intelligences, and Blessings of the Tribes of Israel, the Lots of the Apostles, and Typical Seals of the Sacred Scripture, [so that he] shall be able to obtain great and prophetical oracles, concerning every region, of things to come.'[120]

On Wednesday 23 May 1584, while in Krakow, John Dee and Edward Kelley received from the Spirit Nalvage the names of ninety-one regions and provinces of the physical world, as defined by man. At this time America was no longer considered to be a group of islands; but Australia had yet to be discovered and the search for the North-West Passage had just commenced. The names of the ninety-one parts relate to the Ptolemaic ancient world of about AD 150 with some additions. The Spirit Nalvage explains:

> 'Notwithstanding the Angel of the Lord appeared unto Ptolemie, and opened unto him the parts of the Earth: but some he was commanded to secret: and those are Northward under your Pole. But unto yon, the very true names of the World in her Creation are delivered.'[121]

The list is not altogether satisfactory. Dee, who was well-versed in geography, had not heard of some of the places and even Nalvage said, 'Here are 15, which were never known in these times . . . The rest are'. Many of the strange locations are indeed in the Polar Regions, which were uncharted at the time. In fact, a considerable Arctic land mass was believed to exist and was featured on sixteenth century maps. Nevertheless, locations for this region are desirable and there are many areas in the extreme north, whether land or sea, which can be covered by the descriptions. The belief of a south polar continent (Tolpam, Part 58) was not inaccurate, a location which can usefully extend to Australasia which was undiscovered at the time.

Two points emerge at the end of the communication relating to known lands not included in the list. Firstly, when Dee asks of 'Polonia, Moschovia, Dania, Hibernia (Ireland), Islandia, and so of many others', Nalvage replies: 'Polonia and Moscovia, are of Sarmatia (Russia); Denmark, Ireland, Frizeland, Iseland, are of Britain: And so it is of the rest.'[122] Does this imply that Brytania (Part 61) can be used to gain access to lands not included within the ninety-one parts? Secondly, when Dee presses Nalvage as to which part governs 'Atlantis and the annexed places, under the King of Spain called the West Indies', Nalvage replies: 'When these 30 appear, they can each tell you what they own. Prepare for tomorrows Action'. The communication is, therefore, incomplete. Unfortunately, 'tomorrows Action' never occurred, because Kelley believed Nalvage to have taken the descriptions from books, including Agrippa's Occult Philosophy, and refused to communicate further. 'E. K. remained of his wilful intent', noted a frustrated Dee. However, Onigap (Part 34) may refer to these lands and there is the possibly implied use of Brytania, as described above. Note that Dee held that the term 'West Indies' was very misleading and preferred to use 'Atlantis' instead of 'America', as a name for the new lands. Nevertheless, the additional thirty parts wait to be realised, which would bring the total of the parts of the Earth to 121. It is interesting to speculate, whether they would affect the design of the Great Table.

Dee bought Gerhard Mercator's Universal Chart of the World and the geographical work of Pomponius Mela to help him with his locations. He does not record his success. Ultimately, the advice of Nalvage in relation to Chaldei (Part 42) and Chaldea (Part 72) is the only way to establish the locations of the obscure and ambiguously described parts of the world: 'You shall finde the difference of it, in practice'.

The Ninety-One Parts of the World

Many of the locations are well-known. However, for the obscurer areas Dee's Spiritual Diaries (Cotton Appendix XLVI, Parts 1 & 2, published as A True and Faithful Relation of What passed for many Yeers Between Dr. John Dee and Some Spirits, edited by Meric Casaubon, 1659) are often the only guide. In these instances, supportive quotations are given. Other parts, especially those located by Kelley or Nalvage in the Far Orient or in the Arctic regions, are difficult to place on the world map today, as in Dee's time these regions were largely unexplored and uncharted.

2 SYRIA: Southern Syria.

3 MESOPOTAMIA: Land between the Tigris and Euphrates rivers in Northern Iraq and North-East Syria.

4 CAPPADOCIA: Extensive province of Central Turkey, stretching from the Black Sea in the north to Cilicia (Part 14) in the south. The original territory, Cappadocia Proper, occupied the southern areas.

5 TUSCIA: Tuscany or Etruria, a province in Central Italy including Florence.

6 PARVA ASIA: Asia Minor, Anatolia or Asiatic Turkey.

7 HYRCANIA: Area south-east of the Caspian Sea in Iran.

8 THRACIA: Thrace includes Eastern Greece, Turkey in Europe, and Southern Bulgaria.

9 GOSMAM: According to Kelley, 'Here appear great Hills, and veins of the Gold Mines appear: the men seem to have baskets of leather. This is one of the places under the Pole Artick.'

10 THEBAIDI: Thebes (Egypt) and surrounding area.

11 PARSADAL: Kelly, 'Here the sun shineth fair.' Most probably Pasargardae or Parsagarda ('the habitation of the Persians'), the ancient capital of Parsa/Persis/Persia Proper or the modern Iranian province of Fars (Part 74). Parsagarda is located about 60 miles northeast of Shiraz.

12 INDIA: Includes Indian provinces along the Indus River, roughly present-day Pakistan and India West of the Ganges (India Intra Ganges).

13 BACTRIANE: Bactriana covers Northern Afghanistan and the south-east of the Turkmenistan, the River Amu Darya (Oxus) forming the northern boundary. For lands to the north of the river, see Sogdiana (Part 26).

14 CILICIA: Coastal country bordering the Mediterranean in South-East Turkey.

15 OXIANA: Alexandreia Oxiana, a town and its surrounding area on the Oxus River (Amu Darya) on the borders of Northern Afghanistan and Uzbekistan.

16 NUMIDIA: Eastern Algerian coastal district between Africa (Part 86) and Mauretania (Part 91).

17 CYPRUS: Cyprus.

18 PARTHIA: North-East Iran, to the south of Hyrcania (Part 7). The region has a common border with Turkmenistan.

19 GETULIA: The Western Sahara, south of Morocco, including Southern Algeria, Mali and the modern state of Mauritania.

20 ARABIA: Saudi Arabia.

21 PHALAGON: Dee: 'I have never heard of it.'

Kelley: 'It is toward the North, where the veines of Gold . . . appear . . . The men have things on their shoulders of beasts skins.'

Dee: 'Groynland as I think' (i.e. Greenland).

22 MANTIANA: This is Matiana or the Mattieni by Lacus Matianus, now Lake Urmia in North-Western Iran. The population is mainly Kurdish. Lake Van, approximately 200 miles west in Eastern Turkey, was once called Lake Mantiana.

23 SOXIA: Sacae/Sachia/Sakas approximates with Xinjiang Uygar or Sinkiang Uighur region, North-West China. It is also known as Chinese Turkistan.

Kelley: 'People here appear of reddish colour.'

24 GALLIA: A 'greater' France with the Rhine forming the northern and eastern boundaries, thereby including Belgium, Luxembourg, and the Southern Netherlands.

25 ILLYRIA: At its greatest extent, Illyria included Central and Eastern Austria, Western Hungary or Transdanubia, the former Yugoslavia excluding Macedonia, Northern Bulgaria and Romania.

26 SOGDIANA: District between the rivers Amu Darya (Oxus) and Syr Darya (Jaxartes) including Uzbekistan, with the cities of Bokhara and Samarkand, and Western Tajikistan. Afghanistan is to the south, for which see Bactriana (Part 13).

27 LYDIA: Coastal region in Western Turkey.

28 CASPIS: Area to the south-west of the Caspian Sea in Iran.

29 GERMANIA: Includes modern Germany, Poland, the Czech Republic, Slovakia, and extends to the Italian border in the south, incorporating Switzerland and the Tyrol in Western Austria. In the north, Germania can include Denmark, Norway and Sweden, although Dee was told that Brytania (Part 61) could be used for Denmark, which at that time governed Norway as well.

30 TRENAM: Kelley: 'Here appear Monkies, great flocks. The people have leather Coats, and no beards, thick leather, and Garthers . . . '

Nalvage: 'These people are not known to you?'

Dee: 'Are they not in Africa?'

Nalvage: 'They be.'

Probably Teniam, a region on Jodocus Hondius's World Map (1608) straddling the Ivory Coast/Upper Volta/Ghana borderlands.

31 BITHYNIA: Black Sea coastal region in the north of Turkey, west of Paphlagonia (Part 40), including Istanbul (Asian side).

32 GRAECIA: Nalvage: 'A great Citie, and the Sea hard by it.'

Dee: 'Is not that great Citie Constantinople?'

Nalvage: 'It is . . .'

Graecia is thus Istanbul, not Greece; for which use Achaia (Part 37).

33 LICIA: Lycia is a country on the south coast of Turkey or Anatolia.

34 ONIGAP: Kelley: 'Here appear handsome men, in gathered tucked garments, and their shoes come up to the middle of their legs, of diverse coloured leather.'

Nalvage: 'These be beyond Hispaniola.'

Kelley: 'It is a low Countrey. Here appear great piles of Stones like St Andrews Crosses . . . There are on this side of it (a great way) a great number of dead Carkases . . .'

Nalvage: 'It is beyond Giapan.' (That is, beyond Japan across the Pacific to the Americas. Note that Onigap is an anagram of Giapon.)

Dee: 'Then it is that land, which I use to call Atlantis.'

Nalvage: 'They stretch more near the west.'

This can only be Mexico, particularly the Yucatan. Beyond Hispaniola (Haiti and Domenica) and west of 'Atlantis' or America is Central Mexico and the Yucatan, which is a low-lying peninsula. The people wore bright colours; the temples could resemble St Andrew's crosses; and, many people were slaughtered by the Spanish Conquistadores.

35 INDIA MAJOR: India Extra Gangem or India east of the Ganges, which includes all of South-East Asia.

36 ORCHENY: Nalvage: 'A great many little Isles.'

> Dee: 'Do you mean the Isles of Orkney?'
> Nalvage: 'No.'
> Dee: 'They seem to be the Isles of Malacha.'

Dee is mistakenly thinking of the islands around Malaya (Malacha or Malacca) or even the Moluccas. The Orcheni were a people south of Chaldea (Part 72), living on or by islands in the marshlands of the lower Tigris and Euphrates.

37 ACHAIA: Southern Greece, including Athens and the Peloponnisos.

38 ARMENIA: Extensive region which, most comprehensively, stretches from the Euphrates in eastern Turkey to the Caspian Sea, thereby including Armenia and Azerbaijan.

39 CILICIA (NEMROD): Nalvage: 'You never knew this Cilicia. This is Cilicia where the Children of Nemrod dwell. It is up in the Mountains beyond Cathay.' Probably Calatia, a region in this location featured on Emery Molyneux's terrestrial globe of 1592. It equates with the extreme north-eastern province of Russia by the Bering Straits, the Magandan Oblast. Cilicia in Turkey is Part 14.

40 PAPHLAGONIA: Black Sea coastal country in the north of Turkey.

41 PHASIANA: Mainly Kurdish region in Eastern Turkey, north of Lake Van, not to be confused with Phazania/Fezzan in Libya, for which see Garamantica (Part 45).

42 CHALDEI: The people of Chaldea (Part 72).

43 ITERGI: Nalvage: '. . . the people are yellow, tawney . . . They are to the south of the last Cilicians.' This is possibly Mongolia, Manchuria (North-East China), and Korea. The name appears in this region on a terrestrial globe, dated 1492, of German geographer Martin Behaim (c.1459–1507).

44 MACEDONIA: Northern Greece and the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia.

45 GARAMANTICA: Garamantes, a large area in Inner Africa, covering the Eastern Sahara, including the south of Libya (Fezzan), extreme South-Eastern Algeria, Niger and Chad.

46 SAUROMATICA: Sarmatia or European Russia.

47 AETHIOPIA: Includes Ethiopia south of Egypt and also the entire unknown African continent south of the Equator, which was known as Ethiopia Interior in Dee's time. Unexplored parts of Africa north of the Equator were known as Libya Interior.

48 FIACIM: Kelley: 'Now he sheweth by the North Pole and the great Mountain.'

This is the North Pole. A great mountain was believed to exist at the Pole.

49 COLCHICA: Colchis roughly equates with the modern Republic of Georgia, located to the east of the Black Sea.

50 CIRENIACA: Cyrenaica, a Mediterranean coastal region of Eastern Libya.

51 NASAMONIA: Ill-defined north-eastern Libyan coastal district by the Gulf of Sirte in the west of Cireniaca (Part 50).

52 CARTHAGO: Carthage, Tunisia.

53 COXLANT: Nalvage: 'It appeareth very Eastward.'

Kelley: 'It is on high ground. There come four Rivers out of it, one East, another West, another North, and another South . . . Is this the Paradise that Adam was banished out of?'

Nalvage: 'The very same.'

A discussion follows which does not help to locate Coxlant. The search for the Earthly Paradise, like the Eldorado, was the dream of early explorers. The four rivers are the Pison (The Persian Gulf?), Gihon (The Nile?), Hiddekel (Tigris), and Euphrates. The favourite location of Paradise was considered to be a little north of the confluence of the Tigris and Euphrates. However, other locations favoured sites further north in Mesopotamia and Armenia. Tibet could be another location. It is very easterly; on high ground; and the four rivers are the Mekong (east), the Indus (west), the Yangtze (north), and the Brahmaputra (south). Ultimately, however, the location of Coxlant or the Earthly Paradise must rest with the spirituality of the individual.

54 IDUMEA: Also called Edom, this is Southern Israel and Jordan.

55 PARSTAVIA: Actually Bastarnia, approximately Bessarabia or Moldavia to the east of Romania.

56 CELTICA: Nalvage: 'It is that which you call Flandria, the Low Country.'

This is North-West France and Belgium, not Central Gaul which is usually known as Celtica.

57 VINSAN: Kelley: 'Here appear men with tallons like Lions. They be very devils. There are five isles of them.'

Suggest the ancient kingdom of Wu-Sun, south of Lake Balkhash in Kazakhstan. The 'isles' could be communities near the lake.

58 TOLPAM: Kelley: 'Under the South Pole.' This is Antarctica and Australasia.

59 CARCEDONIA: Carchedonia or modern Tunisia.

60 ITALIA: Italy, including the Istrian Peninsula in Croatia.

61 BRYTANIA: The British Isles, Scandinavia, and possibly places not included in the 91 parts.

62 PHENICES: Phoenicia, approximately the Lebanon and Northern Israel.

63 COMAGINEN: Commagene, a land-locked district in Southern Turkey, bounded on the east by the Euphrates and on the south by Syria. Cilicia (Part 14) is to the west.

64 APULIA: Province in south-east Italy between the Apennines and the Adriatic, bounded on the south by Calabria or the 'heel' of Italy.

65 MARMARICA: North African coastal region straddling the Egyptian and Libyan border. The Nile forms the eastern boundary.

66 CONCAVA SYRIA: Hollow Syria, usually known as Coele Syria, now forms Northern Syria.

67 GEBAL: Later Byblos, now Jubayl, about twenty miles north of Beirut, Lebanon.

68 ELAM: Also known as Susiana, it is approximately the same as the modern Iranian province of Khuzestan at the north of the Persian Gulf, bordering Iraq and including Abadan.

69 IDUNIA: Nalvage: 'It is beyond Greenland.'

70 MEDIA: North-Western Iran, south of Caspis (Part 28) and Hyrcania (Part 7). Includes Teheran.

71 ARIANA: Eastern Iran, Pakistan west of the Indus, Southern Afghanistan.

72 CHALDEA: A tract of country in South Iraq running along the Euphrates from the Persian Gulf to Babylon (about 50 miles south of Bagdad). The Shamiya Desert forms the western boundary.

73 SERICIPOPULI: A people in Eastern Asia. Serica or Seres equates with China and the Far East.

74 PERSIA: Persis or Parsa, this is approximately the modern Iranian province of Fars. Located in South-West Iran and bounded on the west by the Persian Gulf, the province was the kernel of ancient Persia and includes the ancient cities of Parsagarda (Part 11) and Persepolis.

75 GONGATHA: Kelley: 'Towards the South Pole.'

This is Gongala, an area to the south of Libya Interior by the Equator. In the sixteenth century Kelley's description is apt, but today the region equates with South Sudan.

76 GORSIM: Kelley: 'Beares and Lions here.'

Most probably Chorazin/Korazim/Gorazim, an ancient site to the north of Lake Tiberias (Sea of Galilee), Israel, with the ruins of a black basalt synagogue. The place was condemned by Jesus and legend claims the Antichrist will be born there. Note also Chorasmia/Khorezm/Khiva, south-east of the Caspian Sea in Turkmenistan.

77 HISPANIA: Spain and Portugal.

78 PAMPHILIA: Southern Turkish coastal land, between Lycia (Part 33) and Cilicia (Part 14), forming a narrow strip of land around the Bay of Antalya.

79 OACIDI: This is Oasitae ('. . . of the Oasis'), the oasis area west of the Nile, which includes the great oasis of the Oracle of Amon.

80 BABYLON or BABYLONIA: Region in Southern Iraq, extending north from the Persian Gulf between the Lower Tigris and the northeastern Arabian desert. Babylon, the capital, is about fifty miles south of Bagdad.

81 MEDIAN: Kelley: 'It is much Northward.'

Note, however, Midian—the land of the Midianites by Sinai; or, even the people of Media (Part 70).

82 IDUMIAN: Kelley: 'They are two Isles environed with an arm of the Scythian Sea, which goeth in at Maspi.'

Most probably the region to the north-east of the Aral Sea in the Kazakhstan. Suggest 'Maspi' is a corruption of the Aspisii Montes/Mons Aspisii, which shortened to M. Aspisii, distorts to Maspi. The mountains were supposedly located in this region, but in the sixteenth century much of this land and especially the far north of Siberia or Scythia was Terrae Incognita. Mercator's map of North-East Asia, which is dated 1569, shows a hypothetical arm of the Scythian Sea (Laptev and East Siberian seas) almost reaching to the north-east of the Aral Sea with the M. Aspisii nearby. The Aspisii Scythea were the people dwelling to the west of the mountains and to the north of the River Jaxartes (Syr Darya). Note also, however, the Arimaspi detailed in Part 88 below. The Maspii, a noble Persian tribe, are too far south to be considered.

83 FELIX ARABIA: Arabian Red Sea coastlands, particularly the south-western areas, including the Yemen.

84 METAGONITIDIM: The Metagonitae were a people living in Tangiers and the surrounding area. The district forms the west of Mauretania (Part 91) or modern Northern Morocco.

85 ASSYRIA: Eastern Iraq between the Tigris and the Iranian border.

86 AFRICA: Mediterranean coastal region of Libya, including Tripoli and the modern province of Tripolitania, but excluding the eastern part, for which see Cireniaca (Part 50) and Nasamonia (Part 51). The region also includes the eastern Algerian coastlands and the Algerian/Tunisian border. This is not the continent of Africa.

87 BACTRIANI: The people of Bactriana (Part 13).

88 AFNAN or AFRAN: Kelley: 'Here appear people with one eye in their head, seeming to be in their breast, towards the Equinoctial.'

Dee: 'I remember of people called Arimaspi.'

Dee is confused here, as the Arimaspi ('the one-eyed') were a people on the left bank of the Middle Volga, north of the Caspian Sea. The Afran are the people Ptolemy called the Aphricerones, located just north of Equatorial Africa in North Zaire. The ancient scholars considered that all the southern parts of Africa were uninhabitable (as with many unexplored lands) and populated with strange beasts. Herodotus included in his conjectures on unknown Africa descriptions of peoples with 'one eye in the breast instead of the usual head', which must be the people referred to.

89 PHRYGIA: Large province in Central Turkey. Greater Phrygia was bounded on the east by Cappadocia (Part 4).

90 CRETA: Crete.

91 MAURITANIA or MAURETANIA: Morocco and the north Algerian coastlands, not to be confused with the modern state of Mauritania, which is located further south and for which see Getulia (Part 19).

The Three Great Secret Names of God

At the very top of the hierarchy of the Elemental Tablet are the Three Great Secret Names of God. In the practice of modern Enochian magick, prior to contacting any angel from the Elemental Tablet, the Three Great Secret Names of God should be first be invoked. The Golden Dawn and Crowley incorporated the names in a preliminary temple opening. Whether you use these temple openings in your own work, or if you design your own opening ritual, you must never neglect to recognize by name the Three Great Secret Names of God who rule the Elemental Tablet you are working with.

The Seniors and the Kings

Next in hierarchical order are the six seniors and the king of the Elemental Tablet. After invoking the Three Great Secret Names of God, these seven angels must also be recognized by name and made part of the magician's opening ritual.

If you are invoking an individual senior, you may omit the names of the other seniors (but not the king) in your ritual opening.

Three Examples of Enochian Magick Visions

Nanta, elo Hoath zorge ef.

"Spirit of Earth, first worshiper friendly visit."

—Laidrom, Mars senior of Earth

Example I[123]

First Session (September 25, 1980) Laidrom, Mars senior of the Elemental Tablet of Earth. Scryer: David P. Wilson.

For our first evocation session I decided we would work as Dee and Kelley did. One person would act as seer, and one as operator. The seer would recite the appropriate call, receive the vision, and communicate it during or after the session. The operator would banish, open and close the temple, and question the seer. I would be the operator, but I did not know who in our little class would be the first to sit in the visionary driver's seat. On class night there was only one rather reluctant volunteer.

David P. Wilson was not new to the world of magick. In the years leading up to his affiliation with our lodge he sat in with a host of magical groups and workshops in the Los Angeles area upon whom he later heaped scorn and ridicule because of their inability to show him "real magick." He was the boldest member of the class, also the most impatient and sarcastic. I could see the Enochian class going down in flames on opening night because David the curmudgeon once again "saw nothing!" He had done none of the preliminary Enochian work with the rest of the class. He hadn't painted a set of tablets or studied any of the calls. Still, he was our only volunteer.

I can't recall why but I decided we would to try to contact LAIDROM, the Mars Senior of the Elemental Tablet of Earth. In the spirit of better safe than sorry, we placed the Earth tablet in the South (Capricorn/Cardinal Earth) and enclosed the entire class in a circle cast with a clothesline cord. I banished with the rituals of the lesser and greater pentagrams and hexagrams, then opened the temple and invoked the hierarchical names as indicated in Liber Chanokh. David was seated on the floor at the southern edge of the circle, just inches away from the Earth tablet. Leaning against the wall behind the tablet was a huge cardboard version of the [Elemental] Tablet of Earth that I placed there for the other members of the class to focus upon. I turned on the tape recorder and gave David a copy of the Call to read. I sat down behind him while he read it aloud.

He did rather well considering he had never read it before. When he was finished, he closed his eyes and took a deep breath. Nothing happened. I asked him to read the Call again. He did so and after only a few seconds he said, "I have a landscape. I see a landscape."

I was relieved beyond words. "What does it look like?"

David proceeded to describe in surprising detail a desert vista of flat, trackless white crystalline powder stretching to the horizon. Great gray columns of volcanic rock towering over the plain broke the monotony of the scene. Between the columns the ground was pockmarked with countless gaping pits.

That was it. Nothing else was occurring. I asked him to read the Call a third time. This time there was movement. From out of a pit in the center of his field of vision arose a black cone. He said it sparkled from the inside and upon its surface with thousands of little sparks that jumped from one star to another.

I asked, "Is this LAIDROM?"

David grabbed his pencil and notepad and quickly scribbled something. I looked at what he had drawn. It looked like four very poorly drawn Enochian letters. At the time it meant nothing to me. I asked for a clearer answer. "Is this LAIDROM?"

"It's him! It's him! I see him."

He described a humanoid figure draped in the same material from which the cone was constructed. He had an egg-shaped head but no face. His hands were like mittens—there were no fingers. He reached his arm toward the ground and "drew" a diagram in the sand in front of him. David quickly copied the figure on the notepad. It was a square divided diagonally by two lines with a small circle in the lower left-hand corner. We took this to be LAIDROM's signature.

We were all very excited. It was as if the entire class saw David's vision in our mind's eye. Then it occurred to me. Now that we've got this guy, what the hell are we to do with him? Before I could think of what to do next, David said, "Lon, I feel like . . . I feel . . . I could make strange sounds."

This was a twist. "Let yourself." I told him. "Go with it." I tried to sound calm.

"Naw-n tahelo hoh athayzo raygayeff. . . this is bullshit!"

"No! Relax, let it happen!"

"I mean it, I feel like an idiot. I'm too . . . zil-zi-anzilzi-lo-da-arp nan-ta . . . (inaudible) . . . ef . . . efee thar-zi. I am sorry. That's all. Nothing like this has ever happened before. I just felt like doing it." David's apology was comical. We all broke into nervous giggles.

It had been quite an evening. As we had planned nothing particular to do with LAIDROM, I thought it wise to quit while we were ahead. I asked David to thank our spirit guest for his visit and proceeded to banish and close the temple.

One of the class members had brought along his Enochian Dictionary[124] and suggested we try to use it to see if David's strange babbling actually meant something. I rewound the tape and played it back from the beginning. Everything was crystal clear right up to the time of LAIDROM's appearance, when the tape developed an irritating distortion. We joked that it was the fault of malicious spirits and expected it to soon clear up. It did not. In fact, by the time the tape reached David's babbling we could hardly pick his voice out from behind the bank of white noise. As soon as the good stuff was over, the distortion suddenly stopped.

Noise notwithstanding, after replaying the section of tape a dozen times or more, we picked up enough of what was being said to write down three audible strings of syllables:

naw-n tahelo hoh athayzo raygayeff.

zil-zi-anzilzi-lo-da-arp nan-ta . . . (inaudible) and

ef . . . efee thar-zi.

Starting at the beginning, we painstakingly played with the phonetics of each word (and the word/words following) and attempted to match them with words in the Enochian Dictionary. Obviously we weren't being very scientific, nor, I confess, very objective. This was all very exciting and romantic, and I am sure that night we would have squeezed some profundity out of any string of sounds. Be that as it may, it took less than an hour to break the sounds up as follows:

Nanta, elo Hoath zorge ef.—Which translated neatly to: "Spirit of Earth, first worshiper friendly visit."

Zil zien—"stretch forth hands"

Zilodarp Nanta—"stretch forth and conquer Spirit of Earth"

Ef etharzi—"visit in peace."

Needless to say we were all very impressed. At the end of the evening it was agreed that from now on class would meet two times a week to pursue Enochian magick. Sadly, David's ability to break spontaneously into the Enochian language would diminish rapidly as his familiarity with the language of the Calls increased. After the fourth or fifth session, he lost the ability completely. His visions, on the other hand, became clearer, more informative, and more provocative.

Example 2

Monday Night Magick Class (July 17, 2006) Twenty-ninth Aethyr Rii. Scryer: Jill Belanger

Enochian scrying sessions sometimes trigger emotional, physical, even sexual reactions. This is a clip from the transcription of a recording of a Monday night magick class scrying of the twenty-ninth Aethyr, Rii, and its governors: Vastrim, Odraxti, and Gomziam. The main scryer in this session was Jill Belanger, one of the class's most talented seers. It demonstrates that Enochian visions need not take the form of biblical-esque landscapes and heavy magical pronouncements. I thank

Jill for being a very good sport and allowing us to eavesdrop on part of this provocative session.

This session started with the full opening ritual as outlined in chapter one.

As soon as I closed my eyes I was pulled into a vortex, an upside down six, and I was pulled in with an . . . um . . . another gentleman, a lover, a man, and we were instantly in sexual ecstasy going in water in the form of six, and just flying around, the flame was in the middle, and the water was swirling around, and I was lost in that ecstasy for a while. And then I thought, No, I've got to figure out what this message is about. So I tried to push him away. (Laughter from class.) And I said (very drunkenly), "Gumziam [sic], where are you? And I kept flying around in the water vortex. I then saw two triangles together but three dimensional, in sort of like (garbled) with three or four sides instead of eight sides, and then the two triangles . . . one split off from the other one. One on top, one on bottom, and the widest parts were together, and I was standing in the middle . . . and it was like the floor and ceiling were separating and apart.

And I looked down, and the floor was split into four parts, not like the Watchtowers, more like pyramids, and one was Fire, Water, Earth, and Air. Then it was stuck back together again, and I was swirling with the vortex again. I said, "Fire creates, but water solidifies," and the two pyramids went back together, and I was with this lover again, floating around, and I was like, "OK! Let's . . . well . . . OK!" (Laughter from class.) I'm still kind of hot! (More laughter.)

Example 3

Public Workshop (July 22, 2006) Thirtieth Aethyr, Tex. Scryer: name withheld

The following is a letter I received a few days after I returned home from a workshop series on Enochian vision magick. The vision the young woman describes occurred during a scrying session that concluded a half-day public workshop. She, like most of the attendees at this event, had never performed Enochian magick before.

After I had outlined a brief history of Dee and Kelley's adventures and the fundamentals of Enochian magick, the entire class took part in the ritual and chanting of the Ring/Lamen/Holy Table/Sigillum/Table of Nalvage opening ceremony. Over their two-part chorus of the Table of Nalvage words, I recited the nineteenth call to penetrate the thirtieth Aethyr, Tex. Here is her experience.

Hi, Lon!

Thanks again for making the trek here . . . last weekend. I learned a lot more than I had expected to, which is why I'm writing you this. I didn't get a chance to talk to you about the things I saw/did when you led the class foray into the Enochian aethyrs, and initially I was hesitant to because of the rather personal nature of some of it. But after talking to [my brother] about it, I realized I should tell you; in fact, he insisted I do so. So here goes.

We had just finished chanting the Holy Table, and you indicated we should close our eyes while you continued chanting and just follow the images that came to us. Initially I got not images per se, but random geometric shapes in dark shades of purple and green, mostly pyramids, and pyramids of one color in front of squares of a slightly darker shade. I realized that I was falling forward, swiftly, down a triangular corridor filled with a dark purplish haze, with occasional lighter purple flashes—like falling through layers and layers and layers, whoosh, whoosh, whoosh, with something spinning all around me at the same time. Then I realized I wasn't going down anymore, but rising, still through this triangular purple infused corridor, whoosh, whoosh, whoosh, still the spinning, and I began to feel my heart pounding like it would burst inside me, I felt dizzy and slightly nauseous, and just when I thought I couldn't stand it for another moment longer, I stopped speeding forward, and the purple mist cleared, and I was standing on a grassy plain, almost a hilltop, that rose slightly upward in front of me. I realized that the thing that had been spinning seemed to be the petals of an enormous flower, a lotus, perhaps, and that the hillside on which I stood was contained within its perimeter, like a low wall going around it. It occurs to me now that I was facing north.

Beyond the border of the wall were two more hills in the distance, one to the left and one to the right, covered in vibrant dark green vegetation, and I knew vaguely that there were Things in those hills, in those trees, but I didn't have time to think about them. There were four pillars that stretched up around me, at the outside edge of the wall, and as I watched, a pyramid rose up out of the hillside in front of me, or perhaps I simply moved swiftly up the hillside towards it. It wasn't large, maybe only one or one and a half stories high; it was four sided and made of a smooth golden brick or stone. A blinding light issued from the center of it, and, as I watched, the form of a person appeared in the center of this light and was walking towards me.

My impression was that he came from inside the pyramid, and he seemed to be coming from some distance, though the pyramid was just in front of me. He was tall and blond and blue eyed and wore a garment of brilliant white and a golden circlet about his temples. And he was smiling, he was so glad to see me. As he came close to me, he opened up the robe to reveal a column of blinding white light running down the centerline of his body. As my eyes adjusted to the light, I realized that the light was coming from his chakras, which were blazing yellow-white light and shaped sort of like flowers. I realized that my chakras were also blazing, and the light from his heart chakra leapt forward in a thin white-yellow tongue of flaming light and entered my heart chakra. Then his throat chakra flamed and leapt into mine, and then all of them at once seemed to, and that blazing sharing of chakra light continued for a few blissful, amazing moments.

He held his hands out in front of him, palms facing toward me, and I placed my palms against them, and the chakras in our hands blazed with light and fire for a moment. Then he took my hands and pulled them straight into his chest so that I held his heart chakra in my hands, and then he indicated that I should put his heart chakra inside my chest. I was amazed that he would suggest that, and slightly hesitant, but he was insistent, and together we thrust it into my chest. I was stunned at the force of the heat of the union of our two heart chakras. Then he gestured to his throat chakra, and again, I took his chakra in my hands, and lifted it out of him and into myself, with another flash of heat. Then I lifted out his third-eye chakra, then his solar plexus chakra, then his hara chakra. I reached next for his root chakra, and realized that in my hands it had become a huge golden phallus, and as in the curious logic of dreams, there was only one obvious way to integrate that into myself—I mounted it, and at the same time, I reached up and removed the crown from his head, symbolic of his crown chakra, and placed it on my own head at the same moment as the phallus slid into me, and the universe exploded. It wasn't sex, it wasn't copulation, it was Union,

I was perfectly with and within him, and he was perfectly with and within me. It was Bliss, it was Light, it was Perfection. I heard his voice in my ear, saying, "You are She, in Whom all things are received; She in Whom all things are created; She in Whom all things are possible. All Life is Yes; all Love is Know. Know that You are She."

At about that moment, I heard your voice saying something about looking around for landmarks that would help me remember this place, and I laughed to myself that I wasn't likely to forget this. You said something else about bringing back a sign, or a key or talisman from this place, something to know and remember it by that would help me return, and I pulled back slightly from this Being with a wordless question, and his answer was to withdraw from me, and he ejaculated into my outstretched hands, a liquid golden light that turned into two glowing, golden diamond crystals that sank into my palms and disappeared as I watched.

Then your voice said it was time to return, and without another word or glance between us I was whisked up and away, coming back into awareness of my body with a nauseating thud, my head spinning, my heart pounding painfully. You started asking us questions about what we'd seen, where we'd been, and I was too nauseated and out of breath to answer, but was amazed to hear my classmates describing similar imagery, lotuses, columns, towers, pyramids, though no one else seemed to have experienced anything close to what had passed between me and that other Being—or at least, no one was admitting to it. I sat there in a haze, listening to them, thinking about my own experience, and waiting for my heart to quit pounding, my stomach to stop churning. I must have looked pretty stunned, because [my husband] asked me if I was OK, and all I could initially articulate to him as he looked over at me was, "What the f___ just happened to me?"

We broke for dinner at about that moment, and I realized my opportunity to share it with the class had passed. But I still wanted to tell you about it, and, of course, [my husband]. We had driven separate cars that day, so we met at the house before going to the restaurant, and there at home I told him. He stared at me while I told him about it, saying it was pretty amazing, but I'd better not say anything about it in front of the class as a whole, that it was way too personal to just lay out there that way. He suggested I call [my brother], that he'd be able to decode it for me and would definitely be interested. I agreed, but thought at the same time that I really should tell you, but wanted to do so in private.

We went to dinner and then to the meet and greet with the class, but I held back, there were always too many people around. Perhaps now, after reading my account, you understand my hesitancy. Because to be honest, I wasn't sure how to begin, I was still unsure of myself, unsure of how to confess to someone I had only just met that under his direction I had experienced a union that was way more than sexual with someone who was apparently a Being of Light, a resident of the angelic realms, and also not sure of what that said about me. But I knew who would know what it all meant, and so as soon as I got home on Sunday, I called my brother and told the whole story to him. He was jubilant, congratulatory, awestruck, and then he asked me, "Well, what did Lon say when you told him?" I had to admit that I hadn't been sure of what or how to communicate it, and had been further stymied by my husband's reaction to it. My brother was incredulous. How could I not have shared that vision with you, who of all people, would understand it and sympathize with my bewilderment at it? I should have told you everything, he insisted. I agreed and promised him I would write you. And so here we are.

My brother was curious to know which of the Aethyrs you had us reading from, and I couldn't remember; my husband thinks you said we were only going to push ourselves up a level, but my brother thinks I went farther than that and said you might recognize which one. There were things about the place that I recognized from dreams—it's a place I've dreamed of my whole life but never consciously remembered until now. I'm not unaccustomed to visions and vision quests, but this was unlike anything I've ever done before. My body's reaction to it was visceral; I crashed hard when I came back from it, and I continued to feel the physical aftereffects for several days (kind of like recovery from a bad acid trip). Today, Thursday, I'm finally feeling back up to steam. My brother said that's a normal reaction to astral projection; is that really what I did? I have my own theories about the imagery and symbolism. I'm a massage therapist and energy worker, a master of the Usui and Karuna systems of Reiki, and the student of a spirit guide who was a Native American shaman. The ejaculation of light that turned into crystals and sank into my palms resonates with me on several levels. I think one possible meaning is that it was a gift to use in my healing work. I can tell you that all this week, whenever I've "turned on" the Reiki or use one of the symbols, the chakras in my palms blaze with heat, my patients have actually commented on it! (In fact, they're heating up right now, just thinking about it.) [My brother] didn't exactly discount my idea about it, but he said there was a lot more mystical significance there than I realized, or than he should even talk to me about until I talked to you. Obviously, it's loaded with archetypal images, but I would love to know what you get from them, what level you sent me to, and if you recognize anything from my descriptions.

Thanks for your patience. This has turned from an email into a novella! I eagerly await your reply!

Brightest blessings!

18 In magick, "invocation" usually refers to the calling into oneself the presence or the essence of Deity; "evocation" usually refers to calling forth a spiritual entity (angel, spirit, demon, etc.) into the magician's triangle of art, there to be constrained and charged to do the magician's bidding. Theoretically, once the magician has successfully invoked the divine presence within himself or herself, he or she then has the divine authority to evoke the spirits.

However, there are no records of him actually receiving a doctorate degree. 27 For good or ill, there will always be a few of these. Foolishness and naïveté are often the most valuable weapons in the magician's arsenal.

29 Without which the magician "can do nothing."

30 Even though Dee and Kelley continued an on-and-off relationship until 1587, when one particularly significant Enochian magick-related operation occurred (see book III), for all intents and purposes their angelic operations ended on July 13, 1584.

34 What is likely Dee's own copy of Aldaraia sive Soyga: Tractatus Astrologico magicus—the Book of Sogya is found in the British Library's MS Sloane 8.

35 It is interesting to note that one row in the table Magistri of The Book of Soyga is not filled with letters.

36 I encourage readers who feel drawn to the mysteries of the tables to review the following brilliant cryptographic analysis of them: Jim Reeds, "John Dee and the Magic Tables in the Book of Soyga," in John Dee: Interdisciplinary Essays in English Renaissance Thought, Vol. 193, International Archives of the History of Ideas/Archives internationales d'histoire des idées, ed. 42 Just as no two people share the same history (karma), flaws, talents, or potential, each magician's career is entirely unique. Hence the Lord's comment to Solomon, "Lo, I have given you a wise and understanding heart, so that there has been none like you before you, neither shall any arise after you like you" (I Kings 3:12).

48 My dear friend Glacier in Chicago fashioned both the Ring and Lamen for me from a plate of thin gold (see acknowledgements).

49 "From the year 1579 in approximately this manner, in Latin or English (and furthermore in another singular and particular manner around the year 1569, sometimes for Raphael and sometimes for Michael) it was most pleasing to me to pour forth prayers to God. May God grant his wonderful mercy to me. Amen." Dee, Quinti Libri Mysteriorum: Liber Primus, Sloane 3188.

50 Using the inconsistent spelling characteristic of the Elizabethan period, this phrase originally read, "Beware of wavering: Blot owte suspition of us; for we are gods Creatures that haue Raigned, do Raigne, and shall Raigne for eu^. All our Mysteries shalbe known unto you." Dee, Quinti Libri Mysteriorum: Liber Primus, Sloane 3188.

51 The letter b (or Pa in the angelic alphabet) is used liberally in Heptarchic and Enochian magick. The frequency of its appearance has prompted some modern scholars to speculate that it represents the number seven, the key or foundational number of Dee and Kelley's angelic magick.

52 The symbols of the planets are as follows: Saturn ♄, Jupiter ♃, Mars ♂, Sol ☉, Venus ♀, Mercury ☿, Luna ☽.

53 This prayer is not found as such in the original Dee and Kelley material. I composed it to reflect my understanding of the purpose of the Lamen as it relates to myself and the Holy Table.

60 And just as we microcosmic human beings are said to be the reflection of macrocosmic Deity, the individual names of the kings and princes on the 12 x 7 table that create the Lamen (which are read from right to left) are the mirror image of the those found on the 12 x 7 table that create the Holy Table (which are read from left to right).

97 INRI is an acronym of the Latin phrase Iesvs Nazarenvs Rex Iudaeorvm, "Jesus the Nazarene, King of the Jews." It appears in the Gospel of John (chapter 19, verse 19). The four letters also have profound esoteric meanings to Christian mystics and ceremonial magicians, who see in the letters a magical formula of creation and being.

98 In astrology it is the four fixed, or kerubic, signs of the zodiac that exemplify the purest elemental quality. For example, there are three zodiac signs that represent the element of Fire: Aries, Leo, and Sagittarius. Aries is the cardinal or initial aspect of Fire, Leo is the fixed (kerubic) or firmly defined aspect of Fire, and Sagittarius is the mutable and most easily influenced aspect of Fire.

The four fixed (kerubic) signs of the zodiac are: Aquarius (Air), Scorpio (Water), Taurus (Earth), and Leo (Fire). The classic symbols of the fixed signs (the angel of Aquarius, the eagle of Scorpio, the bull of Taurus, and the lion of Leo) are called the kerubic emblems and appear often in Christian iconography.

110 I don't fully understand why, but it is a consistent characteristic of Enochian magick to organize the four elements in this order: Air, Water, Earth, and Fire.

112 The more the magician practices reciting the calls, the more sensitive he or she becomes to the shifts of consciousness each one produces.

113 Theoretically, each of the 156 lettered squares of an Elemental Tablet is an angel who can be contacted by continuing the hierarchical descent into the subangle. If you care to plunge this deeply into elemental workings, you are free to do so by discovering a further hierarchy of names and letters that seems most logical to you.

122 Dee, like most of his contemporaries, believed the island of Friseland to exist. It was, in fact, a duplication of Iceland on an early map, an error which was repeated. When its coast was supposedly skirted, this was actually the coast of Cape Farewell, Southern Greenland. Note also that today Germania (Part 29) incorporates Poland. In Dee's time Poland was located further eastward and would have formed part of Sarmatia or Russia (Part 46).

About the Author

Lon Milo DuQuette is a bestselling author and lecturer, whose books on Magick, Tarot, and the Western Mystery Traditions have been translated into ten languages. He is currently U.S. Deputy Grand Master of Ordo Templi Orentis and is on the faculty of the Omega Institute in Reinbeck, NY and the Maybe Logic Academy. Among his many books, he is the author of My Life with the Spirits (Weiser 1999), Understanding Aleister Crowley's Thoth Tarot (Weiser 2003), The Magick of Aleister Crowley (Weiser 2003), and Tarot of Ceremonial Magick (Weiser 1995). He lives in Costa Mesa, CA with his wife Constance. Visit him on the Web at: www.lonmiloduquette.com.

Having mastered the arts and science of his age, Elizabethan magus Dr. John Dee [1527–1608] resolved that worldly knowledge could no longer provide him the wisdom he desired. He turned his attention to magick, and in 1582 he and his clairvoyant partner Edward Kelley made contact with a number of spiritual entities who identified themselves as angels—the same angels that communicated with Adam, Enoch, and the patriarchs of the Old Testament. Over the next three years three distinct magical systems were revealed to Dee and Kelley. The third, thanks largely to efforts from the adepts of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn and the 20th-century practices of Aleister Crowley, is now widely known as Enochian Magick.

Enochian Vision Magick includes extensive background and historical notes, explores the foundation for the creation of the Enochian Magick system, and provides readers with a step-by-step process for using it.

"Lon DuQuette is a miracle worker, and Enochian Vision Magick is his greatest miracle. His uncanny gift for clear and simple explanations has produced the most accessible, interesting, personal and—most importantly—practical guide to Enochian magick available."

—Richard Kaczinski, Ph.D., author of Perdurabo: The Life of Aleister Crowley

"DuQuette has created a truly original and highly interesting vision of the practical application of the Enochian System. He treats the material as Dee intended it to be treated—as a gateway into another world."

—Geoffrey James, editor and translator of The Enochian Evocation of Dr. John Dee

"It has fallen to Lon Milo DuQuette to provide an easy entrance to the Watchtowers of Dee's magic. In doing so he has done modern magic a great service."

—Stephen Skinner, co-author of The Practical Angel Magic of Dr. John Dees's Enochian Tables

"We are lucky to finally have a useful introduction to this difficult subject that provides the aspiring Enochian conjurer with both the proper foundation and the tools to successfully begin what can become a lifelong adventure and labor of love."

—David R. Jones, Master of The Black Lodge of Santa Cruz

Dedication

For my wife, Candy. You have supported me in so many ways, especially by helping me sort out and keep track of all the piles of obscure dead guy stuff. Without your help, so many things would have been impossible.

For Kerry, Sarah, Lisa, and Karl. You are the best kids a parent could ever hope for. Thanks for all the times you shared your precious computer time.

For my close friend, Paul Deneka, who introduced me to John Dee’s writings and continues to share my enthusiasm for obscure dead guys.

For the Board of Trustees of the British Museum who granted me special permission to study manuscripts while I was under their age requirements, helped me during the many years that have passed since then, and gave me permission to publish this unique material from their collections.

For my friend, Roger Williamson, at Magus Books for his encouragement and support over the years.

For Jill Rogers at Red Wheel/Weiser, who has been great to work with. Thanks for helping to make this a better book.

Finally, for Betty Lundsted, who is sincerely missed.

PREFACE TO THE REVISED EDITION

Dr. John Dee (1527 to 1608 or 1609) has been the subject of much interest in several fields. Several good book-length studies of him have appeared,[1] as well as numerous articles.[2] My intent in presenting this text is not to recap Dee's life or present a new perspective, but to fill in an important gap that has been generally neglected. The manuscript presented adds considerable detail for the years 1581–1583, by most accounts the climax of his career. It sheds light on Dee's politics, science, and occultism.

For the first edition of this text, I had the simple goal of eliminating two major barriers to the study of John Dee and Edward Kelley. These barriers are availability and legibility of the material. With this new edition, I hope to address two other problems as well. First, the English of Dee's day was somewhat different from that spoken today, so I have added many footnotes to clarify obscurities in the language. I have also translated the frequent Latin passages. Second, the subject matter of the text, medieval and Renaissance magic, assumes a view of the universe not commonly held today. To further clarify the text in this context, I have expanded the introduction and index and explained otherwise obscure references in the footnotes. I have also added supplementary material from Dee's diary and other manuscripts.

INTRODUCTION

These secret writings of John Dee, one of the leading scientists and occultists in Elizabethan England, record in minute detail his researches into the occult. They were discovered in a hidden compartment of an old chest along with various magical implements. Although the angels made him swear never to reveal these doctrines to anyone not sanctioned by them, he complained, “If no man, by no means, shall perceive anything hereof by me, I would think that I should not do well.” Nevertheless, these pages were carefully concealed, and nearly lost forever. Although this present work is concerned primarily with his occult experiments, through it, we catch many glimpses of Elizabethan life and politics.

Dr. Dee represents the true Renaissance man—a master of many areas of learning. He was born in 1527 and lived at the height of the English Renaissance. Dee’s knowledge included astronomy, mathematics, navigation, medicine, geography, history, music, painting, astrology, and the occult sciences.

In many ways, Dee lived at the center of conflicting forces and ideas—tradition vs. reformation, science vs. magic, Christianity vs. paganism (that is, Judaism, Hermeticism, and even studies of Arabic traditions). By studying Dee, we can gain insight into all these subjects and into the Renaissance as a whole. We can even throw light on our own struggle to reconcile our own conflicts.[3]

Dee had many famous and powerful friends and was heavily involved in politics. He became scientific advisor and astrologer to Queen Elizabeth, who occasionally visited him at his home at Mortlake. He was instrumental in planning the expansion of the British Empire, exploring the New World, and, with the help of angelic agents, ushering in the new age as well. One of the main objectives of his life’s work was to bring about religious and social reform. It has been suggested[4] that in this endeavor he was, to some extent, successful.

Dee began his “mystical experiments” with a solid foundation in medieval and Renaissance science, magic, Kabbalah, and the Hermetic arts. Further mysteries were revealed by the “angels” who manifested themselves, ultimately resulting in a new, unified occult system.[5] This occult system is perhaps closer to a face-lift than a new system. Most of it would have been familiar to occultists of the day, but with a veneer of new names and symbols.

Aside from the mechanical details of Dee’s system for communicating with angels, these records reveal that the angels were interested in and involved with the exploration and colonization of the New World, and in heralding in a new age or new world order. The one aspect of these writings that has fascinated most, however, is that the angels delivered a complete book in an otherwise unknown language. They claimed this book, named Loagaeth, to be of utmost importance. Its language is the true language of creation so sought after by Kabbalists and by Dee himself.[6] This “angelic book” was later used to extract a long series of messages (or “calls”) in yet another unknown language, called Enochian.

Interest in John Dee and his occult activities has increased tremendously in recent years. One reason for this is the growing debate over the importance of Dee’s role in history by such eminent scholars as Francis Yates,[7] Wayne Shumaker, and, more recently, William Sherman. Another reason for Dee’s popularity is undoubtedly the fact that his system was used and adapted by the Hermetic

Order of the Golden Dawn, and, subsequently, by Aleister Crowley. If one examines the Golden Dawn material, its appeal soon becomes clear: It draws together various occult methods into a highly coherent system. In adapting Dee's system, various additions, omissions, and mistakes were made. This departure was compounded by uncritical, although imaginative, treatments of the Golden Dawn and Crowley material by some authors. The net result is a maze of misinformation.[8] The material presented here provides us with the keys necessary for understanding Dee's original system as a whole. Since its previous editions were very limited in availability,[9] it has largely been ignored, in spite of its importance.

Dee studies have created two radically different pictures of Dee—one as Magus, and the other as scientist-politician. I hope this volume will help bridge the gap. This polarization is partly caused by the lack of availability of Dee's writings. Those interested only in the occult have largely ignored Dee's published output, and those who focus on his published output will find very little evidence of occult influences. Placing the focus on Dee's public writings, however, can give the modern reader the mistaken impression that occultism was not central to his thinking. This is simply because, in Dee's day, the occult was a dangerous pastime, placing you at risk, not just from hostile spirits, but from the frightened public. We would do well to keep in mind the fate of the less cautious magus Giordano Bruno, who was burned alive at the stake by the Inquisition only a few years after Dee recorded these accounts. Dee's childhood idols, Roger Bacon, Trithemius, Agrippa, Paracelsus, and others, all had suffered greatly because of their reputations as magi. Dee himself was imprisoned early in life, an experience he was careful to avoid thereafter. His thoughts and motivations, however, centered around his "mystical experiments." In addition, there is an "anti-manuscript" bias to overcome. Although many of Dee's books were widely circulated, they were not intended for publication, but rather were "directed inward, to an extremely restricted circle" for private political aims.[10]

Another goal in presenting this text is to help elucidate the tradition in which Dee's occult endeavors took place. Although it has repeatedly been observed that Henry Cornelius Agrippa was a major influence on Dee, most have concluded that Dee's system is highly nontraditional. This view is distorted by the fact that most attention has centered around an isolated set of records that describe a system that, on the surface at least, appears to be highly original.[11] I hope to show that Dee and his spirit medium, Edward Kelley, were following traditional methods, especially during their earlier efforts, and that his later methods are adaptations of traditional ones, used within a traditional framework.

Dee's writings also are of interest in that they are a record of the most educated English of Shakespeare's age. To some extent, Dee is even said to have influenced the English language.[12]

Dee's Early Period

John Dee was born in London on July 13, 1527. His father, Rowland Dee, was an official at the court of Henry VIII. John was born shortly after Luther's break with Rome, and immediately after England's, during a period of radical reform. The resurgence of classical Greek studies combined with new interest in Hebrew studies to create Renaissance Neoplatonism. Renaissance philosophers sought to integrate Greek and Hebrew traditions in an attempt to unify the rapidly disintegrating religious factions and end the constant political strife. They were thus the forerunners or prophets of the Rosicrucian and Illuminati movements.

By the age of 23, Dee had already established a brilliant reputation, lecturing in Paris on Euclid. At age 31 (1558), he published his first major work, Aphoristic Introduction (Propædeumata Aphoristica), and at age 37 (1564), his Monas Hieroglyphica. The Monas is a highly esoteric work. In it, he claims to be in possession of the most secret mysteries. He wrote it in twelve days, while apparently in a peak (mystical) state: "[I am] the pen merely of [God] Whose Spirit, quickly writing these things through me, I wish and I hope to be."[13] He claimed the work would revolutionize astronomy, alchemy, mathematics, linguistics, mechanics, music, optics, magic, and adeptship.[14]

Like the Monas Hieroglyphica, the angel magic in the Mysteriorum Libri Quinque seeks a higher wisdom than science, religion, or Jewish Kabbalah—one that will unite them all, convince atheists, convert Jews as well as pagans, and heal Christendom.

John Dee, the Politician

The Renaissance saw a giant leap in the evolution of the Information Age. Printed works, a recent innovation, were becoming more and more available, and manuscript collections were threatened with neglect. Dee was fascinated with books and spent vast amounts of energy and money collecting them. Eventually Dee's library became "Elizabethan England's greatest library,"[15] attracting scholars and dignitaries alike. It is possible that Dee's inspiration and model for his library came from Johannes Trithemius, one of the greatest scholars and occultists of the sixteenth century. While abbot of the monastery of Sponheim in Germany, Trithemius built a library of unparalleled importance, and turned one of the poorest monasteries in the Palatinate into an "obligatory" place of pilgrimage for scholars.[16] As William Sherman has noted, "Renaissance libraries were powerful sites of intellectual creativity, social status, and political influence." As such, their owners "were at once empowered and endangered by their collections and skills."[17] This must have been a source of great anxiety to Dee.

Dee's library was a bustle of activity, especially in 1583, with frequent planning sessions for nautical expeditions, visitors borrowing and lending books, dignitaries, including the queen, and others, such as Francis Bacon, who sought Dee's advice and help.[18]

Plans for the New World and the New Age

Perhaps Dee's greatest legacy is his seminal role in building Britain into a major maritime power.[19] He is usually credited with coining the phrase "British Empire." Dee played a prominent role in plans to colonize the New World (involving Lord Burghley, John Davis, Adrian Gilbert, and Sir Walter Raleigh), and consulted the angels quite often about the venture. His interest was not merely patriotic.[20] He had a farsighted plan for the new (or rather restored) British Empire to compete with (or replace) the Hispano-Papal empire. Part of his justification was the same as Rome's—to "carry the name of Jesus among the infidells to the great glory of God."[21] The magnitude of his vision is reflected in the vast extent of the empire that Britain went on to establish.

Dee associated the new empire and the New World with the new age. He was fascinated by the apocalyptic prophecies of his day, and tried his own hand at them based on his knowledge of astrology. He believed the new age would begin in a few years, perhaps in 1583 or 1584. He based this on astronomical models of world history published by Trithemius (De Septem Secundeis) and Cyprian Leowitz (De coniunctionibus magnis).[22] The fact that Dee dated two of his works[23] using his calculation of the "world year" allows us to calculate where he thought the world was in the cycle.These works place the start of the cycles at 3763 B.C.[24] Nevertheless, Dee felt the end of the world was immanent, largely based on astronomical observations.[25] The coming great conjunction was foreshadowed by the appearance of a supernova in 1572, a comet in 1577, and a solar eclipse in 1582.

In his scrying experiments,[26] the angels tell Dee and Kelley that "the tyme of God's visitation" was "8." Dee's speculation that this might mean 1588 seemed to be confirmed in later scrying sessions.[27]

Dee found political authority for the British Empire in the accounts of King Arthur and Owen Madoc, a legendary Welsh prince said to have discovered America in 1170.[28] To compete with the spiritual authority of Rome, however, Dee sought divine authority from the angels and God himself. The angels told him what he wanted to hear—that "the World begynnes with thy doings."[29] Thus his scrying, publications, and political activities were all part of his grand scheme to unify the peoples, religions, and languages of the world through universal knowledge. An element of this plan was to convert the pagans of the New World, and the Jews.[30]

The angels revealed details of the New World and new age on several occasions. For example: "What I speak hath not byn reuealed, no not in these last tymes, of the second last world. But I begynne new worldes, new people, new kings, & new knowledge of a new Gouernment." "New worlds, shall spring of these. New manners: strange men:" "The old ways cease, the new begin."[31]

After the appearance of the Polish prince, Albrecht (or Albertus) Laski, Dee shifted his hope for a royal patron to Europe. In the end, Dee failed to convince any of his would-be royal patrons of the cosmic plan. He was also thwarted by the papal nuncio (ambassador) who managed to have him and Kelley expelled by Rudolf. Dee was wise enough to decline an "invitation" to Rome.[32]

Renaissance Magic

By the Renaissance, magic had developed a complex theoretical and philosophical foundation. There was also a considerable amount of practical literature in circulation. Dee's public and secret writings show the remarkable depth and breadth of his studies of magical literature. The classical philosophers, especially Plato and Aristotle, were the foundation on which the so-called Neoplatonic philosophers built. Plotinus, Porphyry, Proclus, Iamblicus, and the Christian Pseudo-Dionysius were all familiar to Dee, as were the Italian Neoplatonic revivalists Ficino, Pico, and others.

The practical literature largely relies on knowing the secret names of God (mostly from the Hebrew Old Testament)[33] and of the angels or spirits themselves. The more cautious methods involve praying to God directly to send his angels.[34] The less cautious methods involve appealing to the spirits directly. The use of consecrated tools in ceremonial magic reflects their use in religious ceremonies. Most of the literature also deals with the use of talismans or symbols of some kind, and often with squares of letters or numbers.[35]

The object of these practices, often called "experiments," is sometimes as sublime as the vision of God, but frequently as base as the recovery of stolen goods or the discovery of treasure. The mention of treasure during a scrying session with Barnabas Saul (22 December 1581) probably reflects the grimoire he is using more than a specific inquiry by Dee.

John Dee, The Magus

Dee's reputation as a magus, or rather a conjurer, started fairly early in his life and has continued to this day.[36] While he was highly respected as a man of great learning within the scholarly community and court circles, the less educated came to fear him. He was even briefly imprisoned in 1555 on charges that he tried to enchant Queen Mary. He is said to have been the model for Prospero in Shakespeare's play The Tempest.

In his explanatory note to the present work, Dee writes that his interest shifted more toward the occult after becoming convinced of the hopelessness of human endeavors as paths to wisdom. Sloane 3188 records his earliest occult experiments centered around scrying. These early methods were remarkably consistent with the occultism prevalent at the time, and Dee seems to be as widely read here as he was in science. He mentions the famous occultists Cornelius Agrippa and Johann Reuchlin. The widely known Heptameron of Peter de Abano and Arbatel's Of Magic are also mentioned, even though he did not include them in his externa bibliotheca.

Dee's interest in angelology is indicated by his heavy annotations of such works as Pseudo-Dionysius' Coelestis hierarchia, Richard of St. Victor's De superdivina trinitate (1510), Scalinger's Exotericarum exercitationum liber decimus (1557), Pompilius Azalus' De omnium rebus naturalibus (1554), and J. Rivius' Opera theologica (1562).[37]

Although Dee was careful not to catalog his more dangerous volumes, other sources can be identified or deduced. One of these is Liber Juratus, or the Sworne Book of Honorius. Sloane 313 (late fourteenth or early fifteenth century) is known to have been in his collection and contains marginal notes in his handwriting.[38] Liber Juratus contains detailed instructions for communicating with spirits, as well as obtaining the sight of God through the use of an elaborate sigil, named the Sigillum Dei Aemeth. Dee is directed by the angels to use this sigil "which is allready perfected in a boke of thyne." Dee is also promised the sight of God ("videbis Deum").[39] Another source that Dee mentions is the magical text Aldaraia sive Soyga (discussed below), which has squares of magical letters and heavy astrological elements.

In addition to these, I believe that two other magical texts can be identified as having been used by Dee. The first is Sloane 3849 article 1, "Manner of proceding in order to discover in the crystall,"in which the three angels Anchor, Anachor, and Anilos are central. This, or a similar text, seems to be behind Dee's first scrying session with Kelley, in which they try to call forth these three spirits.

Another magical text I believe may have been used is Sloane 3854. The first part includes article 4 ("Book of Consecrations")[40] and article 5 ("Experimenta de Speculo"). In the blank space between these two articles (folio 75r) a second hand, which I believe can be identified as Edward Kelley's, has written some notes. This manuscript is also bound with the most complete and correct manuscript of Liber Juratus that I have seen.

There are many examples of medieval and Renaissance magic texts with similar methods. I include some examples in the appendices.

Dee's system started with some Hebrew-centered Kabbalah like that he found in the writings of Reuchlin. Kabbalistic concepts abound, including his use of Hebrew etymology, traditional Hebrew names of God and angels, and extracting names from tables of letters à la Abulafia. Dee had a large Hebrew collection in his library, and took many of the volumes with him to the continent in 1583, showing sustained interest.

Nevertheless, in the end his Sigillum Dei Aemeth replaced the traditional Hebrew names with new names, and his angelic book was not in Hebrew, but a new (or unknown old) language. This may reflect Dee's (or Kelley's) mistrust of Jews,[41] or perhaps it may have been a way to compensate for Kelley's lack of knowledge of Hebrew and traditional Kabbalah. In any event, it is interesting to note that what Dee found in these actions is exactly what he expected to discover. Instead of the confusing maze of corruptions and variants found in the grimoires, he found an uncorrupted way of communicating with angels based on their own language, and on mathematics.

The first angels to make their appearance at the scrying sessions all belong to the Judeo-Christian tradition. They are later supplemented with otherwise unknown names, derived mathematically from letter squares. Dee is careful to catalog their jurisdictions, apparel, and symbols for future use. The revealed method of invoking their help is described in detail in the action of 17 November 1582.

In addition to the seals of the spirits, the ritual apparatus included several other items: various scrying stones, sometimes set in a frame; a "holy table" on which was painted or engraved various symbols; wax seals called Æmeth; a ring and lamin to be worn by the practitioner; and the rod "el," divided into three parts, the ends painted black, the middle red.

The Mysterious Book of Soyga

As mentioned above, Dee refers in several places to a magical text named Aldaraia sive Soyga. Since Roberts' and Watson's 1990 book, John Dee's Library Catalogue,[42] two manuscripts of this work have been identified by Deborah E. Harkness. One is Sloane 8 in the British Library, and the other is Bodley 908 in the Bodleian library. It is possible that Sloane 8 was, in fact, the manuscript to which Dee refers in his records.[43]

In their very first scrying session with Kelley, Dee asks the angels, "Ys my book, of Soyga, of any excellency?" (10 March 1582). He laments at that time, "Oh, my great and long desyre hath byn to be hable to read those Tables of Soyga." Liber Loagaeth (Sloane 3189) has several tables from Aldaraia/Soyga appended (in Dee's handwriting—not Kelley's, as in the rest of the manuscript). In addition, Dee's statement, "Soyga: otherwise named ysoga, and Agyos, literis transpositis" is, in fact, a direct quote from the Aldaraia.[44] The angel Il responds, "Soyga signifieth not Agyos," in direct contradiction. This makes it probable that Kelley was not familiar with the text, and is possibly evidence that he was in fact carrying out a deception. I do not believe the Book of Soyga is the same as the "Arabick book" mentioned several times by Dee. The latter was apparently the same as that prized by Pontois and described as having "cost doctor dye £ 600 ready money as he the deponent did hear himself the said doctor afferme. . ."[45] There is nothing about either Soyga manuscript to justify such a vast sum.[46]

Scrying and Dee’s Earliest Attempts

The premise behind Dee’s mystical experiments is the veracity of scrying, or visions seen in a crystal ball or other shining surface. Today, the crystal ball has become an icon for superstition, but scrying has been widely used and respected for divination throughout history. It even has biblical authority.[47]

According to psychiatrist and researcher Raymond A. Moody, “That certain individuals do see visions—specifically, hypnagogic images—when gazing into a transparent or reflective surface is a well-established fact that can be regarded as an item of psychological knowledge.”[48] The real question is the value of these visions, or their interpretation.

Scrying instructions can be found widely in occult literature, in particular in manuscripts that it was dangerous to possess.[49] The published sources, such as Agrippa, make scant mention of scrying. Scrying also appears in popular legends, such as the legends of Roger Bacon’s scrying glass in which anyone could see anything they wished within fifty miles.

With few exceptions, Dee did not use scrying to see far-off happenings, or to divine the future. His aim was to see into the spiritual realms to receive wisdom from higher beings. The spiritual realms were thought to resemble, in many respects, the physical world.

It was common for scrying practices to be accompanied by religious and occult symbols and ceremonies. These served to ensure the spiritual purity of the practice, but also to focus concentration on the intent, much as techniques for lucid dreaming do. They also served to give form, context, and meaning to the images seen by the scryer. For example, surrounding the scrying table with the symbols of the seven planets provided a means of organizing and remembering the otherwise bewildering maze of images. This integration of magic with the art of memory was developed to a high degree in Renaissance occultism.[50]

Symbols and ceremonies also provided a means of controlling or manipulating the images (or, to use Couliano’s term, “phantasms”). For example, the scryer might place a talisman of Venus under the stone when he wanted to focus on affairs of the heart. This is essentially an attempt to facilitate communication between body and soul: “body and soul speak two languages, which are not only different, even inconsistent, but also inaudible to each other. The inner sense alone is able to hear and comprehend them both, also having the role of translating one into the other.”[51] The use of sacred symbols and ceremonies also helped the scryer summon courage to face the possible confrontation with demonic presences.

Dee’s interest in scrying clearly goes back far earlier than the records of his scrying experiments.[52] Although he may have begun to experiment much earlier, the earliest records of Dee’s scrying begin in 1581. On 8 March 1581, and several times during 1581, Dee records strange knocking and rapping in his chamber, and a voice like an owl’s shriek. These events were clearly regarded as supernatural and may have been related to early experiments.

His private diary records: “May 25th, I had sight in χρυσταλλω [Crystallo] offerd me, and I saw.” Generally, however, Dee relied on the scrying abilities of others, as prescribed by tradition. He mentions that he employed two seers around this time.[53]

Late in 1581, Dee began to employ Barnabas Saul as a scryer. Saul was a minister who was heavily involved with magic. Dee’s diary records additional details regarding his dealings with Saul:

> Oct. 9th, Barnabas Saul, lying in the .... hall was strangely trubled by a spiritual creature abowt mydnight. [1582] Jan. 27th, Barnabas Sawl his brother cam. Feb. 12th, abowt 9 of the clok, Barnabas Saul and his brother Edward went homward from Mortlak: Saul his inditement being by law fownd insufficient at Westminster Hall: Mr. Serjeant Walmesley, Mr. Owen and Mr. Hyde, his lawyers at the bar for the matter, and Mr. Ive, the clerk of the Crown Office, favoring the other. Feb. 20th I receyved a letter from Barnabas Saul. Feb. 21st, Mr. Skullthorp rod toward Barnabas. Feb. 25th, Mr. Skulthorp cam home. March 6th, Barnabas Saul cam this day agayn abowt one of the clok and went to London the same afternone. He confessed that he neyther hard or saw any spirituall creature any more. March 8th, Mr. Clerkson and his frende[54] cam to my howse. Barnabas went home agayne abowt 3 or 2 clok, he lay not at my howse now; he went, I say, on Thursday, with Mr. Clerkson. March 9th, Fryday at dynner tyme Mr. Clerkson and Mr. Talbot declared a great deale of Barnabas nowghty dealing toward me, as in telling Mr. Clerkson ill things of me that I should mak his frend, as that he was wery of me, that I wold so flatter his frende the lerned man that I wold borow him of him. But his frend told me, before my wife and Mr. Clerkson, that a spirituall creature told him that Barnabas had censured both Mr. Clerkson and me. The injuries which this Barnabas had done me diverse wayes were very great. July 19th, Barnabas Saul came to see me at Mortlak: I chyd hym for his manifold untrue reports.[55]

The experiments with Saul were not regarded as successful. His sessions were largely rejected as false. Dee records one of these sessions in the beginning of Mysteriorum Libri Quinque.

On 8 March 1582, Dee was visited by Edward Kelley, a.k.a. Edward Talbot. They were introduced by Dee’s friend Mr. Clerkson. Kelley began to scry regularly with Dee two days later. From Dee’s records, it is apparent that Kelley had a highly unstable personality. The relationship between the two men was often strained, and Kelley would storm off for months at a time. Aside from their conflicts, however, Dee regarded their sessions as highly successful.

Scrying Methods

Dee used various media for scrying—several crystal balls and the famous obsidian mirror are now preserved in the British Museum.[56] Dee drew a picture of one of them in the record of the first scrying session (see below). This shows an elaborate frame with a cross at the top. This is probably the stone that William Lilly described as the size of a large orange, "set in silver, with a cross on the top, and another on the handle; and round about engraved the names of these angels, Raphael, Gabriel, Uriel."[57] After intense prayer, the stone was placed in a frame and set on a specially prepared table. The angels were then called to appear in the stone to answer questions.

Nicholas Clulee has argued that Dee did not seem to consider these actions magical, but rather a variety of religious experience. He based this partly on the observation that they do not seem to invoke the angels directly, as directed by the magical books. Rather, they start off with prayers to God, and petitions that God send his angels.[58] This is consistent with the method found in the Arbatel, which Dee mentions by name in the text. In his first action with Kelley, Dee is very careful to distinguish between "spirituall practise" and what is "vulgarly accownted Magik." On the other hand, Dee and Kelley immediately proceed to "call for the good Angel Anchor, to appere in that stone to my owne sight." Dee states that he "make[s] motion to god, and his good Creatures." Also, Dee's synopsis of his instructions for communicating with angels (Heptarchia Mystica and Tabula bonorum angelorum invocationes, bound in Sloane 3191) contains numerous invocations or "invitations" addressed directly to individual angels. These were based on the records Dee kept in Sloane 3188.

It does not appear that God or the angels obliged Dee's request that they appear to his own sight, but Kelley experiences vivid and detailed apparitions. As soon as the angels appear in the stone, they "give thanks to God, and Wellcome to the good Creature." Then they demand the angel's name. These steps are all consistent with the texts of ritual magic. In the second action, Dee is told that the method of invoking the archangel Michael is by "the Seven psalmes." This is also consistent with the grimoires.[59] The apparitions do not always seem confined to the crystal.[60]

Edward Kelley, the Magician

Edward Kelley was born on 1 August 1555. He was thus 28 years younger than Dee. He attended Oxford under the alias of Edward Talbot, but left after some trouble. He was later pilloried in Lancaster for forgery. He was 26 when he arrived at Dee's door on 10 March 1582.[61] By this time, Kelley was well versed in the occult arts, including Agrippa's works. He also possessed various texts on magic, at least some of which were regarded as "devilish." Kelley was also an alchemist. His only book is on alchemy, and his final months were occupied with alchemical experiments for Rudolph II. Elias Ashmole says, "Mr. Lilly told me that John Evans informed him that he was acquainted with Kelly's sister in Worchester, that she shewed him some of the gold her brother had transmuted, and that Kelly was first an apothecary in Worcester."[62] Kelley later married Jane Cooper. He also had a brother, Thomas.

The Sigillum Aemeth and Its Variations

The use of the Sigillum Aemeth (or Emeth) is central to Dee's system, as well as to other forms of magic. The earliest examples of the Sigillum Aemeth are found in the Liber Juratus (see appendix 1). Most manuscripts describe the seal in great detail, but don't actually draw it out. The versions that do exist vary, probably because they were based on the written description. Liber Juratus calls this seal the "seal of God . . . which is the beginning,in this art."[63] Between the outer circles is to be written the 72–letter name of God, or Schemhamphoras. Both Agrippa and Reuchlin refer to a seal by this name, although I have been unable to find any descriptions or drawings of it in their writings. Dee was well aware of the fact that variations existed, since he asks the angels to provide a definitive version for his works. The version by Athanasius Kircher, which appears many years later in his monumental work Oedipus Aegyptiacus, is highly corrupt.[64]

Dee was originally told by the angels to use a version found in one of his books. He thereupon consulted several sources and asked the angels to resolve the discrepancies. This prompted them to deliver a radically new version of the sigil.

An examination of Dee's original wax sigil (see figure 1, page 42), now preserved in the British Museum, shows differences from that found in Sloane 3188.

The Holy Table and Its Variations

Dee’s scrying was conducted on a specially constructed table, two versions of which were described to him by the angels. The first, whose design is now lost, was later declared by the angels to be false. The second design is apparently similar to the first. It consists of a large hexagram containing a square of letters. Surrounding the hexagram is a border containing additional letters. Although the original table does not appear to have survived, it was described in detail by Elias Ashmole, who saw it in John Cotton’s library. It was “composed of 3 boards broad-waies besides the borderings; of a fine grained wood & very heavy, but the scent now lost.” He described the Enochian letters as painted in red on a gold background, between two blue lines. The seven sigils, or “ensigns of Creation” were also painted with red letters and blue lines. The lines of the hexagon were gold, and the central square had gold letters and blue lines.[65] (The engraving found in Dee’s True and Faithful Relation . . . does not correspond exactly with the description in Sloane 3188. See figure 3, page 43.)

As with the Sigillum Aemeth described above, this design is a variation of designs found in magic texts. It is likely that Dee employed one of the conventional designs in his early scrying before the angels revealed their version.

The instructions given in the grimoires concerning the holy table probably give a fairly accurate idea of how Dee proceeded in these experiments. In appendices 3, 4, and 5, I present excerpts from the Theurgia Goetia, Art Pauline, and Ars Almadel. The Art Pauline seems particularly close to Dee’s method. The table contains a hexagram with the seven planetary seals arranged around it (see figure 5, page 44). The spirit’s seal is placed on the appropriate planetary seal. Dee was instructed that the seven seals could be constructed separately and arranged around the table, or they could be painted onto the table.

The third example is from the Ars Almadel. This gives a method for calling forth the spirits that govern the four directions, north, south, east, and west. Here, we also find a hexagram on the holy table, and the use of wax sigils. This time, there is a border around the table with holy names drawn around it. In the center of the hexagram is a small triangular seal with more names (see figures 6 and 7, pages 45–46). Aldaraia sive Soyga also contains diagrams reminiscent of Dee’s (see figure 4, page 44).

Other Ritual Implements

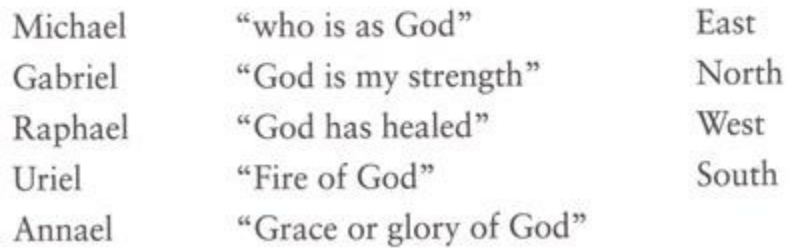
According to the Key of Solomon,[66] Heptameron, Lemegeton,[67] and other magical texts, the master should wear on his chest a lamin with a hexagram. Dee is likewise told to prepare a lamin to be used for this purpose, but his was triangular, thus symbolizing his name (Δ = Dee). He is later given a new version, the original version having been declared false. The final version has Enochian lettering.

Dee is also instructed to prepare another ritual implement, the ring of Solomon. Solomon's magical ring appears in early magical literature. For example, in the Testament of Solomon (first to third century A.D.), Solomon is given the magical ring by the archangel Michael.[68] He uses it to call and control the demons. The archangel Michael likewise reveals Solomon's ring to Dee, stating that it was by it that Solomon worked all his wonders. The Testament of Solomon was known in medieval manuscripts and could have been known to Dee.[69]

The Spirits

Five archangels are central to Dee's actions: Michael, Gabriel, Raphael, Uriel, and Annael. This grouping is common in medieval and Renaissance occult works. In Liber Juratus, the first four are known as the "Angels of the 4 winds." Agrippa calls them the "four angels ruling over the corners of the world."[70] The Magical Calendar gives the same.[71] The names of the first four are also found written on the frame that holds the scrying crystal in Trithemius' method of calling angels into a crystal.[72] Michael and Gabriel are the only two angels mentioned by name in the Old Testament. Raphael is mentioned in the Apocryphal Book of Tobit, and Uriel is well known in noncanonical lore. Annael is relatively unknown.

The meanings of the Hebrew names and their compass allocations are:



Michael	"who is as God"	East
Gabriel	"God is my strength"	North
Raphael	"God has healed"	West
Uriel	"Fire of God"	South
Annael	"Grace or glory of God"

During their first scrying session, Dee and Kelley called three angels: Anchor, Anachor, and Anilos. These names also occur in mainstream occult sources. In the Heptameron or Magical Elements of Peter de Abano, they are mentioned in the oration to be said when the vesture is put on.[73] It is known that Dee made use of that book, but he must have been following another source here, since the names are not exactly the same. A likely source is Sloane 3849, article 1, "Manner of preceding in order to discover in the crystall," where these three angels are central.

It would be interesting to try to trace the development of this oration. The Heptameron version is as follows:

> Ancor, Amacor, Amides, Theodonias, Anitor, by the merits of thy Angel, O Lord, I will put on the Garments of Salvation, that this which I desire I may bring to effect: through thee the most holy Adonay, whose kingdom endureth for ever and ever. Amen[74]

The Clavicula Salomonis gives the following:

> Amor, Amator, Amides, Ideodaniach, Pamor, Plaior, Anitor; through the merits of these holy Angels will I robe and indue myself with the vestments of Power, through which may I conduct unto the desired end those things which I ardently wish, through Thee, O most Holy ADONAI, whose Kingdom and Empire endureth forever. Amen.[75]

The Lemegeton gives:

> By the figurative mystery of these holy vestures I will clothe me with the armour of salvation in the strength of the Most High, ANCHOR; AMACOR; AMIDES; THEODONIAS; ANITOR; that my desired end may be effected through Thy Strength, Adonai; unto whom the praise and glory will for ever and ever belong. Amen.[76]

Liber Juratus contains the earliest version with which I am familiar. It is numbered oration 17:

> O Jesu the sonne of the incomprehensible god, > hancor hanacor hamylos iehorna theodonos heliothos phagor corphandonos norizane corithico hanosae helsezope phagora.
> ELEMINATOR candones helos helee resphaga thephagayn theundyn thahonos micemyahe hortahonas nelos behebos belhores hacaphagan belehothol ortophagon corphandonos born in the shape of a man for us sinners and yow holy angells heliothos phagnoraherken and teche me and gouerne me [hic oic petitionem tuam sed p visione diuina dic ut sequitr] that I may come to obtayne the visyon of the deyte throwgh thee glorious and moste gentle and moste almightie creator oure lyuyng lorde holy infinite godely and euerlastinge to whome be prayse honor and glorye worlde withowt ende. Amen.[77]

The Ars Notoria has a very similar oration, numbered 24 and called "The Oration of the Physical Art." Its purpose is for determining the condition of a sick person:

> Ihesus fili Dominus Incomprehensibilis:
> Ancor, Anacor, Anylos, Zohorna, Theodonas, helyotes Phagor, Norizane, Corichito, Anosae, Helse Tonope, Phagora
> [another part of the same orison:]
> Elleminator, Cardones helosi, Tophagain, Tecendum, Thaones, Behelos, Belhoros, Hocho Phagan, Corphandonos, Humanae natus & vos Eloytus Phugora: Be present ye holy Angels, advertise and reach me, whether such a one shall recover, or dye of this infirmity.[78]

The Ars Notoria reproduces most of the Orations found in the Liber Juratus, though in slightly altered forms.

In Liber II, two other conventional lists of angels are given. The first is: Zaphiel, Zadkiel, Cumael, Raphael, Haniel, Michael, and Gabriel. The second is: Zedekieil, Madimiel, Semeliel, Nogahel, Corabiel, and Leuenael. Most of these names are identical to those given by Agrippa in his "Scale of the number seven." The first list corresponds to the "seven angels which stand in the presence of God." This also corresponds to the list of seven archangels according to Geonic lore, as well as that of Pseudo-Dionysius.[79] The second list corresponds to the Hebrew names for the seven planets, with the name of God, "EL," added to each. It is also found in Agrippa, book 3.

Description of the Manuscript

One of the most remarkable things about Dee, as exemplified by these records, is his meticulous attention to detail. In fact, Dee's are probably the most detailed records of the actual practice of ceremonial magic extant.

The title of the book is slightly ambiguous. "Mysteriorum," as in Mysteriorum Libri, can mean either mysteries or secret rites. Both meanings seem fitting in this context.

The manuscript consists of 104 folios, mostly in Dee's hand. It measures approximately 320mm by 205mm. It contains a short preface by Elias Ashmole, and is bound with notes by Ashmole, many of which are in his stenographic notation.[80]

Synopsis of Dee's "Mystical Experiments" (1581–1583)

In his Mysteriorum Libri Quinque, Dee records prophetic visions (e.g., the Spanish Armada), visions of angels, magical instruction, and religious teachings. A few of the key messages of the angels include:

- Flesh is vile and corrupt (Gnostic or Neoplatonic attitude);
- Mercy for the repentant is necessary;
- Temptation of the faithful is necessary in order to show God's mercy;
- The immanent coming of the antichrist;
- The immanent fall of existing political and religious establishments as punishment for mankind's corruption, to be replaced by new, righteous ones.

Although a lot of material remains obscure, especially passages from the "holy book," I believe Christopher Whitby is correct in dismissing the theory of cryptographic messages hidden in these records.[81]

There is suprisingly little discussion of alchemy in these records, especially in view of the fact that Dee pursued it actively during this period.[82] Perhaps Dee did not mention it here because he didn't want to reveal his alchemical work to Kelley, who probably came to Dee for that purpose. Perhaps this helps explain Kelley's bouts of anger at Dee. One might also wonder if Kelley brought the scroll, book, and red powder in order to entice Dee into letting him in on Dee's own secret alchemical work. The evidence that there was more to the visions than simply conscious deception from Kelley will be discussed later.

The Book of Angelic Wisdom

Dee seems to have had an almost obsessive facination with the lost Apocrypha, especially the Book of Enoch, which is mentioned and even quoted in the Bible (Jude 14), and Esdras. He is told by the angels that the Apocrypha are not lost, but in the keeping of the Jews.[83] Most of his mystical exercises are focused on recovery of the lost wisdom that these books represented to him.

The core of this book describes the revelation of a book of angelic wisdom, Liber Loagaeth (so named by Dee in A True and Faithful Relation . . .). It is reported to be in the tongue of the angels. Only a few angelic words are translated in these manuscripts. The first parts of this book were dictated by Kelley and recorded meticulously by Dee in Sloane 3188. Later parts were written by Kelley directly and are now found in Sloane 3189. The latter manuscript is incomplete in that it does not repeat the earlier material. It is also bound with four tables from the Book of Soyga, written in Dee's handwriting. Since the angels state that the angelic book contains forty-nine leaves (one of which cannot be revealed), it is clear that the four tables from Soyga do not belong to it.

Dee was instructed to rewrite the book in the delivered script, but this does not seem to have been done. One copy was to be bound in blue. Another, "whose skin shall bear Silver," was to be "in length; 8 [inches], in breadth 7. "[84]

The importance of Liber Loagaeth cannot be overemphasized. From it would "be restored the holy bokes, which haue perished euen from the begynning, and from the first that liued." The truths it contains will end religious disputes and restore religious unity. "Which when it hath spread a while, THEN COMMETH THE ENDE."[85] In short, it will usher in the new age. Since the book is so central to these angelic communications, it is amazing that it has remained unpublished.

Synopsis of Dee's True & Faithful Relation

The record of Dee's experiments continues in later manuscripts. The bulk of the later material was published in 1659 by Meric Casaubon as A True & Faithful Relation . . . Between Dr. John Dee . . . and some Spirits. These records were published by Casaubon with the intent of discrediting Dee and Kelley. The Casaubon edition, it should be noted, is full of typographic errors. Reliance on it alone, without the manuscript sources, has sadly resulted in the perpetuation of many errors.

A True & Faithful Relation takes up where Mysteriorum Libri Quinque left off. It goes on to describe their six-year missionary journey to the continent. The revelations of the mystical heptarchy were followed by that of the 30 "Aethyrs," the "48 Claves Angelicae," and the four "Enochian Tables." The later material included a second language popularly known as "Enochian."

Dee's mission to the court of Rudolph II in Prague cannot be considered a success. An occultist himself, Rudolph proved very unsupportive. In fact, Dee and Kelley narrowly escaped the papal nuncio and the possibility of facing the deadly Inquisition. Dee returned to England in 1589. Kelley remained behind and had limited success in alchemical experiments for Rudolph. He died trying to escape in 1595.

Dee’s Later Life

The final period of Dee’s life and career have been judged variously as one of disgrace and failure, or as one of continued success and renown. I think William Sherman has made a credible case for the latter view.[86] While it is clear that his mission to the continent cost him politically, Dee continued to maintain his contacts and influence, and even served in an official capacity to King James I when he succeeded Queen Elizabeth in 1603. He continued his scrying experiments, but never again achieved the dramatic results he had seen with Kelley. While the promised new age never materialized in the dramatic and apocalyptic way he had visualized, history has acknowledged Dee’s vital role in shaping our modern world.

Adaptation of Dee’s System by Later Occultists

Dee’s activities and writings have made a deep impact on later occult movements. Among the fruits of his labor is a heavy influence on the German Rosicrucian movement, whose manifestos began to appear around 1610.[87]

As mentioned above, Dee’s experiments also had a great influence on the Golden Dawn. Unfortunately, the process of adapting and assimilating Dee’s system was undertaken with uncritical methods and incomplete materials. In particular, these efforts have been based almost entirely on Casaubon’s True & Faithful Relation, with all its typographic errors. In many particulars, the Casaubon edition is impossible to understand without the Mysteriorum Libri Quinque.

The Four Angelic Tablets

Four tables of letters were produced during the later conferences.[88] These tables served two different purposes: the production of ninety-one names that correspond to the ninety-one parts of the world (as catalogued by Agrippa in his Occult Philosophy I, chap. 31), and the production of invocations ("Tabula Bonorum") to be used with the names. The Golden Dawn adaptation of Dee's system places heavy emphasis of these tables.

Christian Wilby has written an excellent article on the four angelic tablets. There he states:

> Unfortunately for later day occultists, the so-called synthetic genius—I prefer to call it rampant eclecticism—of McGregor Mathers has obscured the field of vision on this problem for too long. For some reason best known to himself, Mathers was content to use the originally received tablets and ALL of the emmendations of the "corrected" version. This has produced, to the detriment of everybody, one of the biggest mish-mashes ever to grace the Tradition.[89]

Another inaccuracy in the Golden Dawn system is the compass allocations used for the four angelic tablets. The original allocations given to Dee were later corrected by the angels.[90] The correct allocations are also given by Dee in his synopsis of his magical system (see Sloane 3191). These errors have been perpetuated by more recent writers.

History of the Manuscript

In addition to the preface by Elias Ashmole, further history of the manuscript is found in the following notes written on the end sheets:

Ms A. 3188./XVI F

This volume is in Dr. Dee's own handwriting, as far as fol 108.

A fair copy of it by Elias Ashmole was purchased at Sir Joseph Jekyll's sale, Jan 1739/40 (lot 465) and is now Ms. Sloane 3677.

The original Mss. of the remaining Books are in the Cottonian Collection, Appendix XLVI but were formerly (erroneously) numbered as Add. Mss. No. 5007 A.B.C.

Notes on This Edition

This edition of John Dee's spiritual diaries was prepared from the original manuscript in Dee's own handwriting. The original manuscript is preserved in the British Library.[91] Dee prepared a synopsis of this material in a short manuscript, De Heptarchia Mystica.[92] This latter manuscript provides some material that has been lost from the original manuscript, along with additional explanatory notes. All material used by Dee in his synopsis are printed in bold font to indicate its special importance. Additional notes from De Heptarchia Mystica are marked -D (HM).

The text has been normalized in some particulars. The personal pronoun thee is sometimes written thé or the in the manuscript. These have all been resolved into thee. The tittle—or macron (~), usually indicating a missing "m" or "n"—has been expanded in nearly all cases. Except for these particulars, everything else has been preserved, including spelling, capitalization, punctuation, and underscores. Marginal notes are incorporated into the text as footnotes. Square brackets and parentheses are Dee's. All editor's notes are denoted by -Ed.

Ashmole's notes are denoted by -E.A. Bound with the manuscript are partial transcriptions and notes on this manuscript and the printed diaries by Elias Ashmole. Most of this is in Ashmole's shorthand cipher. Some of these notes have also been included in this edition. Asmole's "fair copy" is full of careless errors.This is very surprising, since he apparently thought the book of utmost importance.

In preparing this edition, I took the opportunity to review Christopher Whitby's doctoral thesis. Garland Press printed a limited edition of this in 1988. It was poorly reproduced from his typewritten thesis, making it completely illegible in many spots. I found Whitby's introductory material very well researched and useful, although I was surprised at the number of errors in transcription and translation. Also unfortunate is the fact that Whitby doesn't compare Sloane 3188 with Dee's manuscript Heptarchia Mystica, where Dee collects excerpts from the Mysteriorum Libri Qunique.[93] These compensate greatly for much of the damage and illegibility of the latter, much more so than Ashmole's transcriptions. Although Whitby makes note of its importance, he doesn't make much use of it.

Conclusions: The Evidence

Colin Wilson has written: "Dee is one of the few great magical adepts of the past who can present us with some practical evidence of the existence of non-human entities."[94] How solid is this evidence? The most convincing evidence is perhaps the "Enochian" language revealed by the angels. Enochian has been extensively studied by Donald Laycock, a prominent linguist. His comments indicate that he, for one, is not entirely convinced.[95]

The second body of evidence is the word and credibility of John Dee. It must be remembered that he was regarded as one of the most educated people of his age, acknowledged to have impressive scientific credentials. In at least two places, he reports firsthand experience of supernatural events. In his diary, he writes, "I had sight in Crystallo offerd me, and I saw."[96] And in the Mysteriorum Libri Quinque, he reports, "I fele: and (by a great thundring noyce, thumming thuning myne eares) I perceyue the presence of some spirituall creature abowt me."[97] He also witnessed the seemingly miraculous materialization of the stone (21 November 1582). On the other hand, it must be admitted that Dee was highly motivated to believe, and thus was more likely to misinterpret events.

The largest body of evidence comes in the form of the word and credibility of Edward Kelley. Views of him range from that of a highly gifted scryer to an outright charlatan. I am inclined to believe that the truth lies somewhere in the middle. Clulee concluded that Kelley

> . . . may well have consciously fabricated everything to deceive Dee, but his bouts of emotional anxiety and arguments with the spirits in the course of his visions, his reluctance to continue except for Dee's desperate pleadings, and his admission of the visions to religious authorities in Prague when that might have had serious consequences all suggest that more than conscious deception was involved (TFR, 64, 102, 370).[98] Although Kelley often questioned the divine character of the angels, he seems to have believed in their reality as firmly as Dee, and while it is clear that the revelations of the angels through Kelley were often prejudiced in favor of Kelley's interests in particular circumstances, they also reflect what Kelley knew of Dee's interests. In a number of places in the minutes Dee has noted the similarity of the angelic revelations to material in Agrippa, Reuchlin, Trithemius, and Peter of Abano, and since Kelley lived with Dee and had access to his library, the revelations are very likely the joint product of Kelley's imagination and stock of knowledge and what he knew of Dee's thinking from their discussions and his reading among books of current interest to Dee.[99]

Dee and Kelley's actions may be compared with so-called UFO abductees' recovered memories, wherein a "hypnotist" puts the "witness" into a suggestible state, and, through leading questions, manages to arrive at all sorts of "memories." The process may not be unlike the art of taking political polls. Of course, the better therapists and pollsters are trained to avoid biased results.

Another similarity with the UFO phenomena is the apparent trickster nature of the entities. They seem to combine convincing elements with apparent nonsense in a way that has led some researchers to theorize deep psychological manipulation.[100] Uri Geller's suspicion that there was just some "goddam little clown that is playing with us" sounds hauntingly similar to many of Kelley's complaints.

Other significant evidence lies in the various accurate predictions (e.g., Mary's beheading, the Spanish Armada, the homecoming of the Jews). These must, however, be weighed against those predictions that weren't accurate (e.g., prophecies of doom, Laski's future).[101] Another event that deserves mention is a secret conversation between Dee and the angels, held in Greek in order to prevent Kelley from understanding it. Aside from this incident, the angels' use of Latin seems to reflect Kelley's limited schooling in that language. When using Latin, they tend to deliver fixed speeches and avoid discourse. Also, as noticed by Calder, the angels "increase in fluency through the years."[102]

A quick survey of how practical the angel magic was to Dee is even less convincing. Although Dee's aims were not only practical, but mystical as well, the results do not seem to be very reliable:

AIMS:	RESULTS:
evaluate the value/validity of texts (e.g., Aldaraia/Soyga, Sigillum Dei examples)	question evaded
hidden treasure	never successful
location of lost books (e.g., Arabic book, books of Enoch, Esdras)	Arabic book later recovered; others not specific political advice (e.g., how much does Lord Treasurer know, how to get reformed calendar accepted, Laski's political prospects)	Laski's future not accurate, later disfavored; calendar not accepted advice for Adrian Gilbert about Northwest passage	Northwest passage turned out to be a myth advice regarding Mistress Haward	???
ensure actions are protected from evil spirits	constant intrusion by evil spirits, often undetected until much later

Some of the instructions, such as those concerning etymology and geography, are straight out of textbooks. This is also true of the names of angels, their descriptions, offices, and so forth. The episode of the dictation of the table can easily be seen as evidence that Kelley was fabricating the "revelations." First Dee is told that the sigil Aemeth was correct in his books, but when confronted by conflicting versions, the "angels" produce yet another version. At one point, Kelley takes the sigil to his room to correct it. Later, he frequently interrupts sessions when the extraction methods fail. This may mean that Kelley needed time to figure out where his mistakes were. And what are we to make of the episode in which Kelley produces a drawing in his own handwriting that appears to be a prototype of one of the diagrams? He proclaimed it a counterfeit, and Dee congratulated himself in not succumbing to doubt, but trusting God.

Indeed, the angels often seem to be telling Dee and Kelley what they want to hear to gain their cooperation, but their reasons are not apparent.

PREFACE

BE IT REMEMBERED, that the 20th of August 1672, I received by the hands of my servant Samuell Story, a parcell of Dr: Dee's manuscripts, all written with his owne hand; vizt: his Conference with Angells, which first began the 22th of Dec: Anno: 1581, & continued to the end of May Anno: 1583, where the printed booke of the remaining conferences (published by Dr: Cawsabon) begins, & are bound up in this volume.

Beside these, the booke intituled, The 48 Claves Angelicae,[103] also, Liber Scientia Terrestris Auxilij & Victoria[104] (these two being those very individuall bookes which the angells commanded to be burnt,[105] & were after restored[106] by them as appeares by the printed Relation of Dr: Dee's Actions with Spirits pag: 418 & 419) The booke intituled De Heptarchia Mystica Collectaneorum Lib: Primus,[107] and a booke of invocations or Calls, begining with the squares filld with letters, about the black cross. These 4 bookes I have bound up in another volume.[108]

All which, were a few daies before delivered to my said servant, for my perusall (I being then at Mr: William Lillies[109] house at Hersham in Surrey) by my good freind Mr: Thomas Wale, one of his maiesties warders in the Tower of London.

The 5th of Sept: following Mr: Wale (having heard of my retourne to towne) came to my office in the Excise Office in Broadstreete, & told me he was content to exchang all the foresaid bookes, for one of myne, viz^{t}: The Institution, Lawes & Ceremonies of the most Noble Order of the Garter, to this I agreed, and provided one, which I sent him fairely bound, & gilt on the back.[110]

On the 10th: of the said Sept: Mr: Wale came thither to me againe, & brought his wife with him, from her I received the following account of the preservation of these bookes, even till they came to my hands, viz^{t}: That her former husband was one Mr: Jones[111] a confectioner, who formerly dwelt at the Plow in Lumbardstreet London, & who, shortly after they were married, tooke her with him into Adle streete among the joyners, to buy some houshold stuff, where (at the corner house) they saw a chest of cedarwood, about a yard & halfe long, whose lock & hinges, being of extraordinary neate worke, invited them to buy it. The master of the shop told them it had ben parcell of the goods of Mr: John Woodall Chirurgeon (father to Mr: Thomas Woodall late Serjant Chirurgeon to his now Maiestie King Charles the 2nd: (my intimate friend) and tis very probable he bought it after Dr: Dee's death, when his goods were exposed to sale.

Twenty yeares after this (& about 4 yeares before the fatall fire of London) she & her said husband occasionally removing this chest out of its usuall place, thought they heard some loose thing ratle in it, toward the right hand end, under the box or till[112] thereof, & by shaking it, were fully satisfied it was so: Hereupon her husband thrust a peece of iron into a small crevice at the bottome of the Chest, & thereupon appeared a private drawer, which being drawne out, therein were found divers bookes in manuscript, & papers, together with a litle box, & therein a chaplet of olive beades, & a cross of the same wood, hanging at the end of them.

They made no great matter of these bookes &c: because they understood them not, which occasioned their servant maide to wast about one halfe of them under pyes & other like uses, which when discovered, they kept the rest more safe.

About two yeares after the discovery of these bookes, Mr: Jones died, & when the fire of London hapned, though the chest perished in the flames, because not easily to be removed, yet the bookes were taken out & carried with the rest of Mrs: Jones her goods into Moorefields, & being brought safely back, she tooke care to preserve them; and after marrying with the foresaid Mr: Wale, he came to the knowledge of them, & thereupon, with her consent, sent them to me, as I haue before set downe.

Ad Deum Omnipotentem Protestatio fidelis:
ad perpetuam rei memoriam[123] Anno 1582.

O God Almighty, thow knowest, & art my director, and witnes herein, That I haue from my youth up, desyred & prayed unto thee for pure & sownd wisdome and understanding of some of thy truthes naturall and artificiall: such, as by which, thy wisdome, goodnes & powre bestowed in the frame of the word might be browght, in some bowntifull measure under the Talent[124] of my Capacitie, to thy honor & glory, & the benefit of thy Servants, my brethern & Sistern, in, & by thy Christ our Saviour. And for as much as, many yeres, in many places, far & nere, in many bokes, & sundry languagis, I haue sowght, & studyed; and with sundry men conferred, and with my owne reasonable discourse labored, whereby to fynde or get some ynckling, glyms, or beame of such the forsaid radicall truthes: But, (to be brief) after all my forsaid endevor I could fynde no other way, to such true wisdome atteyning, but by thy extraordinary gift: and by no vulgar Schole doctrine, or humane Invention. And, Seing, I haue red in thy bokes, & records, how Enoch enioyed thy favor and conversation, with Moyses thow wast familier: And allso that to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, Josua, Gedeon, Esdras, Daniel, Tobias, and sundry other, thy good Angels were sent, by thy disposition, to instruct them, informe them, help them, yea in worldly and domesticall affaires, yea and sometimes to satisfy theyr desyres, dowtes & questions of thy Secrets: And furdermore Considering, the Shew-stone, which the high preists did use, by thy owne ordering: wherein they had lights and Judgments in theyr great dowtes: and considering allso that thow (O God) didst not refuse to instruct thy prophets, (then, called Seers) to give true answers to common people of things æconomicall, as Samuel, for Saul,[125] seeking for his fathers asses being gon astray: and of other things vulgar true predictions, whereby to wyn credyt unto thy waightier affayres: And thinking with my self, the lack of thy wisdome; to me, to be of more importance, then the Value of an Asse or two, could be to Cis, (Saul his father): And remembring what good cownsayle thy Apostle James giveth, saying, Si quis autem vestrûm indiget sapientia, postulet a Deo, &c.[126] And that Salomon the wise, did so, euen immediately by thy self, atteyne to his wonderfull wisdome. Therfore, seeing I was sufficiently towght and confirmed, that this wisdome could not be come by at mans hand or by humane powre, but onely from thee (Ô God) mediately[127] or immediately) And having allwayes a great regarde & care to beware of the filthy abvse of such as willingly and wetingly, did invocate & consult (in diuerse sorts) Spirituall creatures of the damned sort: angels of darknes, forgers & patrons of lies & untruthes: I did fly unto thee by harty prayer, full oft, & in sundry manners: sometymes Crying unto thee, Mittas lucem tuam et veritatem tuam, que me ducant &c,[128] sometymes Recte sapere et intelligere doceto me, Nam sapientia tua totum est quod volo: &c,[129] sometymes, Da verbum tuum in ore meo, et sapientiam, tuam in corde meo fige &c.[130] And having perceyued by some slight experiens with two diuerse persons, that thow hadst a speciall care to give me thy light, and truth, by thy holy and true ministers Angelic and Spirituall: and at length, hearing of one, (a master of Arte, a preacher of thy word admitted) accownted as a good Seer,[131] and skryer of Spirituall apparitions, in Christalline receptacle, or in open ayre, by his practise procured: and trusting to frame him, by my ernest & faithfull prayers unto thee (my God) to some my help in my forsayd Studies: tyll, thow (o hevenly father) woldest by thy unserchable proveydence, send me some apter man or means thereto. Thereuppon trying him and using him, I fownd great diuersity betwene his private usuall manner, and intente of practise, and my pure, sincere, devowte, & faithfull prayer unto thee onely. And therfore often & fervently I exhorted him to the good; and reproved both him, and his ministers, with my no small daunger, but that thow (in manner unhard of) didst pitch thy holy tente to my defence, and cumfert, in conflict most terrible: as thow best knowest O God, and I willed him thereuppon to preach thy mercyes, & the verity of the kingly prophet his testimony, Castrametatur Angelus Domini, in Circuitu timentium eum.[132] And out of Roger Bachon his boke written De mirabili potestate Artis et Natura,[133] (where he writeth against the wycked Diuel callers) I noted unto him this sentence, Facilius (sine comparatione a Deo[134] impetrandum foret, vel a bonis spiritibus, quicquid homini utile reputare &c[135] which my cownsayle he promised me to follow, as thow art witnes, ô our true & almighty God. And as thy good spirituall creatures neyther had delight in the man, neyther wold so playnely & preistly give me theyr answers or informations by him, that he might be hable to perceyve the pith therof: So was he at length very unwilling to here him self rebuked for his nawghtynes, and to be barred from the Mysteries of thy truthes understanding; which were the onely things that I desyred, throwgh thy grace, o our most mercifull God. Therfore, as well for a Memoriall answerable to the premisses, as for the better warrant of my Such exercises to be made accownt of, hereafter: (leaving all unto thy infinite mercies, and unsearchable providence,) I haue thowght it not impertinent, to note downe, even in this place one of the last Actions, which I had with the forsayd preacher: when I made ernest & faythfull petition unto thee (o the true and Almighty God) for sending, unto my cumfort & eridition, (yf it were thy blessed will,) thy holy, & mighty Angel Annael: of whome and of all the Hierarchies hevenly all prayer honor & thanks, be rendred unto thy diuine maistie: now & euer: & worlde without ende. Amen. Amen. Amen.

Anno 1581 Decembris 22. Mane[136] Mortlak

Δ: After my fervent prayers made to God, for his mercifull cumfort and instruction, throwgh the ministery of his holy and myghty Angel, named Anael,[137] (yf it wer his diuine pleasure) I willed, the Skryer, (named Saul) to loke into my great Chrystaline Globe, yf God had sent his holy Angel Anael, or no: And Saul loking into my forsayd stone, (or Chrystall Globe) for to espie Anael, he saw there one,[138] which answered to that name. But being ernestly requested of me to tell the Truthe yf he were Anaël, An other did appere very bewtifull, with apparell yellow, glittering, like gold: and his hed had beames like ster beams, biasing, and spredding from it; his eyes fyrie. He wrote in the stone very much in hebrue letters, and the letters seamed all transparent gold: which, Saul was not able eyther presently to reade, that I might write after his voyce, neyther to imitate the letters in short tyme. A bright ster, did go up and down by him. There appeared allso a white dog, with a long hed.[139] And many other visions appeared, with this second: The first being voyded quite away. Thereuppon I sayd, as followeth, Δ: In nomine Jesu Christi, Quis tu es?[140] He answered to Saul his hearing.

AN: Potestas omnis, in me sita est.[141]

Δ: Quake?[142]

AN: Bona, et mala.[143]

Δ: Then appeared in the stone, these two letters M. G. I then axing him some questions, de Thesauro abscondito:[144] He answered,

AN: Ne perturbes: Nam hæ sunt Nugse.[145]

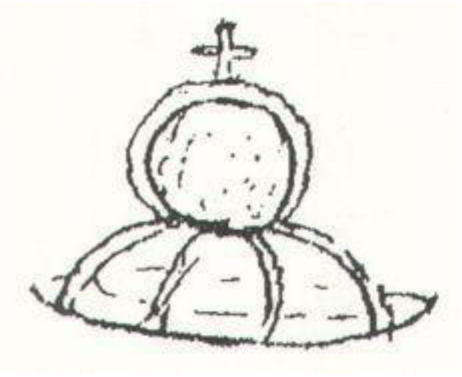
And withall appeared many dedd mens skulls, on his left hand. He sayd to me,

AN: Ubi est potestas tua?[146]

Δ: Cur quæris de potestate aliqua mea?[147]

AN: Cur? Signifi, non mihi placet.[148]

Δ: I, thereuppon, set by him, the stone in the frame:



and sayd,

Δ: An bonus aliquis Angelus, assignatus est huic speculo?[149]

AN: Etiam.[150]

Δ: Quis?[151]

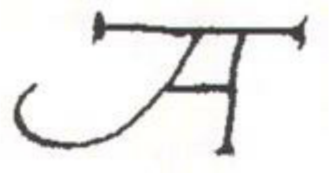
AN:  He answered, by the shew of these letters in the stone.

Δ: Bonus ne ille Angelus, de quo in scripturis fit mentio?[152]

AN: Maximè.[153]

Δ: Fieri ne potest, quod ego eundem videam, et cum illo agam?[154]

AN: Ita.[155] And therewith appeared this character—



Δ: Quid per hoc, significare velis?[156]

AN: Alterius Angeli character est.[157]

Δ: Cur hîc, et nunc ostendis?[158]

AN: Causam ob magnam.[159] Make an ende: It shalbe declared, but not by me.

Δ: By whome then?

AN: By him that is assigned to the stone: but not, tyll after the feast. And then thow must prepare thyself, to prayer and fasting.[160]

In the Name of God, be Secret: and in all thy doings praying, tyll thow hast thy desyre: which shall not be far of. After Newyeres tyde, Deale, But not on the Sabaoth day. Pray contynually. When it shall pleas god, to stir thee up, Then procede. In the brightest day, When the Sonne shyneth: In the morning, fasting, begynne to pray. In the Sonne Set the stone. Deale both Kneeling, and sitting. I haue done for this tyme.

My name is ANNAEL.

I will speak ones more to thee: and than farewell: for thow shalt not haue me any more.

Be not to hasty in wrath.

Δ: Is this, that, you ment to speak?

AN: I. Do good to all men. God hath sufficient for thee, and for all men.

Farewell.

Δ: Gloria patri et filio et spiritui sancto. Sicut erat in principio, et nunc et semper: et in sæcula sæculorum.[161]

Amen.

Δ: Remember, that diuerse other particulars, mowght haue byn Noted of this dayes Action: but these may suffice: And yet it is not to be forgotten, that as he sayd his name was Annael (with a dubble n) so he allso confessed himself to be the same Annaël which is prepositus orbis veneris:[162] and allso Chief governor Generall of this great period, as I haue Noted in my boke of Famous and rich Discoueries.[163]

Consider and Remember: That this Note, of the Action, (had with holy ANNAEL), is, of prince Befafes, (otherwise called Obelison) accownted as the Prolog of my first boke of mysticall exercises Anno 1582. Nouembris 20. Vide post.

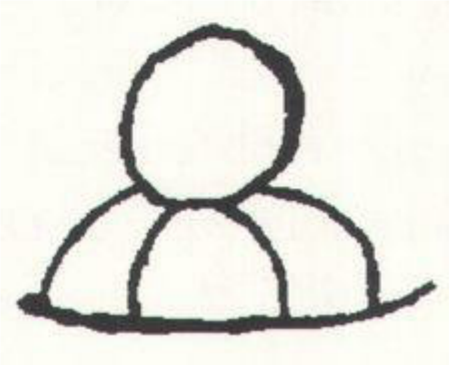
In nomine Jesv CHRISTI.[164] Amen.

Anno 1582. Martij die. 10. hora 11¼ Ante meridiem. Saterday

Δ: One[165] Mr. Edward Talbot cam to my howse,[166] and he being willing and desyrous to see or shew some thing in spirituall practise, wold haue had me to haue done some thing therein. And I truely excused myself therein as not in the, vulgarly accownted Magik, neyther studied, or exercised: But confessed my self, long tyme to haue byn desyrous to haue help in my philosophicall studies throwgh the Cumpany and information of the blessed Angels of God. And thereuppon, I browght furth to him, my stone in the frame,



(which was given me of a frende) and I sayd unto him, that I was credibly informed, that to it (after a sort) were answerable Aliqui Angeli boni:[167] And allso that I was ones willed by a Skryer, to call for the good Angel Anchor, to appere in that stone to my owne sight. And therfore I desyred him to call him: and (yf he wold) Anachor and Anilos likewise, accownted good Angels, for I was not prepared thereunto. &c. He than settled him self to the Action: and on his Knees att my desk (setting the stone before him) fell to prayer and entreaty &c. In the mean space, I, in my Oratory did pray, and make motion to god, and his good Creatures for the furdering of this Action. And within one quarter of an howre (or less) he had sight of one in the stone. but he still expected for two more: deeming this to be one of the three (namely Anchor Anachor Anilos). But I then cam to him, to the stone: And after some thanks to God, and Wellcome to the good Creature, used, I required to know his name. And he spake plainly, (to the hearing of E.T.) that his name is URIEL.

Δ: Are you one of them (sayd I, John Dee) that are answerable, (uppon due observations performed) to this stone?

URIEL: I am.

Δ: Are there any more besyde you?

UR: Michael and Raphaël. But, Michael est princeps in operibus nostris.[168]

Δ: Ys my boke, of Soyga,[169] of any excellency?

UR: Liber ille, erat Adæ in Paradiso reuelatus, per Angelos Dei bonos.[170]

Δ: Will you give me any instructions, how I may read those Tables of Soyga?

UR: I can - But solus Michaël illius libri est interpretator.[171]

Δ: I was told, that after I could read that boke, I shold liue but two yeres and a half.

UR: Thow shallt liue an Hundred and od yeres.[172]

Δ: What may I, or must I do, to haue the sight, and presence, of Michael, that blessed Angel?

UR: Præssentias nostras postulate et invocate, sinceritate et humilitate. Et Anchor, Anachor, et Anilos, non sunt in hunc Lapidem invocandi.[173]

Δ: Oh, my great and long desyre hath byn to be hable to read those Tables of Soyga.

UR: Hæc maximè respiciunt Michaëlem. Michaël est Angelus, qui illuminat gressus tuos. Et hæc revelantur in virtute et veritate non vi.[174]

Δ: Is there any speciall tyme, or howre to be observed, to deale for the enioying of Michael?

UR: Omnis hora, est hora nobis.[175]

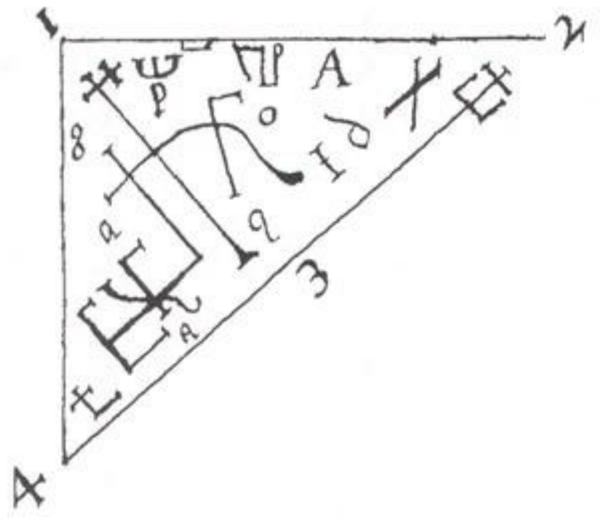
Δ: After this, there appered[176] in the stone a strange seale, or Characterismus of this fashion ensuing:



Δ: What is the intente, or use of this?

UR:[177] Sigillum hoc in auro sculpendum, ad defensionem corporis, omni loco, tempore et occasione: et in pectus gestandum.[178]

Δ: So we ceased, with thanks to god: and I mused much uppon this Action: and layd all up in mynde, and writing.

Δ: Soli Deo Honor omnis, et gloria.[179]

Amen.

The same Saterday after none. Hora. 5.

Δ: After that Mr. E.T. had called Uriel, and I was come to the stone and had used a short speche of thanks giving to God: I then required some instruction for the purpose of Soyga.

UR: Peace. You must use Michael.

Δ: I know no meanes or order to use in the invocating of Michaël.[180]

UR: He is to be invocated by certayn of the psalmes of Dauid, and prayers. The which psalmes, are nothing els, but a means unto the seat and Maiestie of God: whereby you gather with your selues due powre, to apply your natures to the holy Angels. I mean the psalmes, commonly called the Seven psalmes.[181] You must use pleasant sauours: with hand and hart: whereby you shall allure him and wynn him (thorowgh Gods fauour) to atteyn unto the thing, you haue long sowght for. There must be Coniunction of myndes in prayer, betwyxt you two, to God Contynually. Yt is the wyll of God, that you shold, ioinctly, haue the knowledge of his Angells to-gither. You had atteyned unto the sight of Michaël, but for the imperfection of Saul. Be of good Cumfort.

Δ: The chayre cam into the stone againe: and I axed what it ment.

UR: This is a seat of perfection: from the which, things shall be shewed unto thee, which thow hast long desyred.

Δ: Then was there a square Table browght into the stone: and I demaunded, what that Table betokened.

UR: A Mysterie, not yet to be known. These two, shall remayn in the stone, to the sight of all undefyled creatures.

You must use a fowre square Table, two cubits square: Where uppon must be set Sigillum Dei,[182] which is allready perfected[183] in a boke of thyne: Blessed be God, in all his Mysteries, and Holy in all his works. This seal must not be loked on, without great reuerence and deuotion. This seale is to be made of perfect wax. I mean, wax, which is clean purified: we haue no respect of cullours. This seal must be 9 ynches in diameter: The rowndnes must be 27 ynches, and somwhat more. The Thicknes of it, must be of an ynche and half a quarter, and a figure of a crosse, must be on the back-side of it, made thus:

The Table is to be made of swete wood: and to be of two Cubits high: with 4 feete: with 4 of the former seales under the 4 feet.

Δ: The fashion of the 4 feet, standing uppon the foresayd rownd seales, was shewed: so as the uttermost circle conteyning the letters, did seme to be clean without[184] the cumpas of the fete, equally rownd abowt the same fete. And these seales were shewed much lesser than the principall seal.[185] Under the Table did seme to be layd red sylk, two yardes square. And ouer the seal, did seme likewise red sylk to lye fowr square: somwhat broader then the Table, hanging down with 4 knops or tassells at the 4 corners thereof.

Uppon this uppermost red silk, did seme to be set the stone with the frame: right ouer, and uppon the principall seal: sauing that the sayd sylk was betwene the one and the other.

The Table was shewed to haue on the fowre sides of it, Characters[186] and names, these, that are here in a schedule annexed, in 4 diuerse rowes.

UR: The characters and words on the sides of the square Table, are to be written with yellow, made of perfect oyle, used in the church.

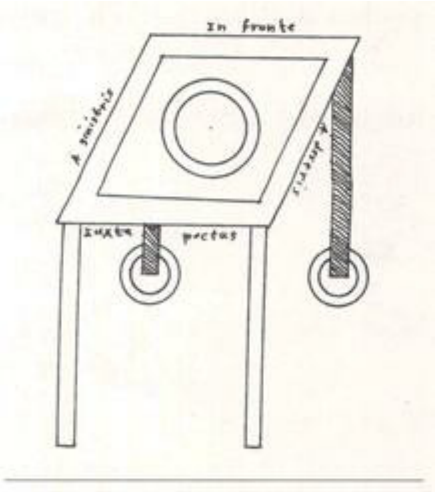
Δ: What oyle is that?

UR: That oyle shalbe opened unto you. The oyle, is perfect prayers: of other oyle I haue no respect. We sanctifie, bycause we are holy: and you sanctify bycause of your holines.

UR: There is a spirit, named Lundrumguffa using you who seketh your destruction, in the hatred of men, in the hurt of thy goods. Discharge him to morrow with Brymstone.[187] He haunteth thy howse, and seketh the destruction of thy dowghter. His pretence was to haue maymed thee in thy Sholder the last night, and long ago. Yf thow do not dischardg him to morrow, he will hurt, both thy wife and thy dowghter.[188]

He is here now.[189]

Giue him a generall discharge from your familie and howse. He will seke Sauls death, who is accursed.[190]



Δ: I know no means, or art to do this by. For I did burn in flame of Brymstone, Maherion his name and Character, whan I fownd Saul priuilie dealing with him (which manner of wicked dealing I had oft forbydden him) and yet he cam after, and wold haue carryed Saul away quick: as Robert Hilton, George,[191] and other of my howse can testify.

UR: The cursed will come to the cursed.

Δ: I beseche you to discharge him: and to bynde him somwhere far of, as Raphael did (for Thobias sake) with the wycked spirit Asmodeus.

UR: But Thobias did his part.[192] Art is vayne, in respect of God his powre. Brymstone is a mean.

Δ: Whan shall I do this?

UR: To morrow at the tyme of prayers.

Δ: Gloria Patri et filio et Spiritui Sancto, sicut &c.[193] Amen.

1582 Martij 11

Sonday. a Meridie hora .3. a circiter.[194]

Δ: Uriel being called by E.T. there appeared one, clothed with a long robe, of purple: all spanged with gold, and on his hed, a garland, or wreath of gold: his eyes sparkling: of whome I axed Whether the characters noted for the Table, wer perfect: He answered,

They are perfect:[195] There is no question.

Δ: Are you Uriel?

Than presently[196] cam in One, and threw the brave[197] spirit down by the sholders: and bet him mightyly with a whip: and toke all his robes, and apparell of him: and then he remayned all heary and owggly: and styll the spirit was beaten of him, who cam-in after him. And that spirit, which so bet him, sayd to the hearing of my Skryer,

Lo, thus are the wycked skourged.

Δ: Are you Uriel, who speaketh that?

Uri: I am he. Write down and mark this: for it is worthy of the Noting.

This was thy persecutor Lundrumguffa. I browght him hither to let thee see, how God hath ponished thy enemy.[198]

Lo, thus, hath God delt for thee: Lo thus haue I delt for thee: Thank God.

Δ: Blessed be his holy name; and extolled, world with out ende.

E.T: He drew the wycked spirit away, by the leggs, and threw him into a great pitt, and washed his hands, as it were, with the sweat of his own hed: for he seamed to be all in a sweat.

Δ: Here-uppon, my skryer saw Uriel go away: and he remayned out of sight a little while. Then he cam-in agayn: and an other with him: and iointly these two said to gither, Glorifie God for euer. And than Uriel did stand behinde: and the other did set down in the chayre, with a sworde in his right hand: all his hed glystring[199] like the sonne. The heare of his hed was long. He had wings: and all his lower parts seamed to be with feathers. He had a roab ouer his body: and a great light in his left hand. He sayd, Michaël: We are blessed from the begynning: and blessed be the name of God for euer.

Δ: My skryer saw an innumerable Cumpany of Angels abowt him: And Uriel did lean on the square Table by. He that sat in the chayre (whom we take to be Michaël) sayd Than,

Go forward: God hath blessed thee.
I will be thy Guyde.
Thow shallt atteyne unto thy serching.
The World begynnes with thy doings.

Prayse God.

The Angels under my powre, shall be at thy commaundement. Lo, I will do thus much for thee.
Lo, God will do thus much for thee.
Thow shalt see me: and I will be seen of thee.
And I will direct thy liuing and conversation.

Those that sowght thy life,[200] are vanished away.

Put up thy pen.

Δ: So he departed.
Δ: Gloria, laus, honor, virtus et Imperium Deo immortali, invisibili, et Omnipotenti, in sæcula sæculorum.[201]

Amen.

Martij 14. Wensday. mane circa horam 9ã.

Δ: Being desirous to procede in this matter, by consent, we bent our selues to the Action. And after that E.T. had called Uriel and saw him, I cam to the desk from my oratorie. There did contynually appeare, the chayre and the Table. I than being affrayde that any other shold come into the stone, instead of Uriel, did ernestly require the spirituall creature appearing, to shew who he was, and what was his name: At length he answered, and sayde to the hearing of E.T.,

Uriel is my name, with diuerse called Nariel.[202]

Stay.

Δ: Then he went away, for a while: and cam agayn, and sayd thus,

Ur: The strength of God, is allwayes with thee. Dost thow know, what thow writest?

Δ: In two senses, I may understand it: eyther that the good Angel Gabriel[203] is allwayes with me, thowgh invisibly: or els, that the strength, and mighty hand of God, allwayes is my defense.

Ur: Fortitudo Dei, tecum semper est.[204]

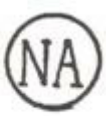
Δ: He went away agayn, and cam agayn, following or wayting uppon an other: and before that other, was a man hauing his hed all couered with blak. Then he that cam so in the middle, did sit down in the chayre, and spake this worde following:

Mi: Note.

Δ: This was Michael, with his sword in his right hand. Then cam Uriel to the man (hauing his hed all hyd, as it were in a blak hode) and toke-of that blak hode: and then lifted-up the Table cloth. He looked under it, and put it down againe: and lifted it up again. The man stode still before Michael. Then Michael rose; and toke-of all the mans clothes, and left him, as it were, onely in his shirt. Then Uriel toke a little rownd Tablet, as it were, of the bignes of a sixpence, hauing two letters in it, thus:



and gaue it to Michaël. Uriel lifted up the Table cloth: and, from thence, seamed to take apparaile, and put on the man. It semed to be sylk: and very full of wrynkles, or plights. And the man kneeled, and held-up his hands. Uriel toke like a lawrell bush, and set uppon the mans hed. And than the man kneeled before Michaël. Michaël toke the rownd thing, with the letters: and gaue it the man to eat: and he did eat it.

Ur: Lo, things are covered.

Δ: Then he couered the Table and pluckt the cloth over it, down to the grownd, on euery side. The man rose up: And Michaël dubbed him on the hed with his sworde. Then the man stode-up. Then the man turned his face toward E.T. the skryer: and the man did resemble me (John Dee) in cowntenance. And then he turned to Michaël agayn. Michael wrote uppon the mans back, thus,

ANGELVS TVÆ PROFESSIONIS.[205]

Δ: Then E.T. asked me, yf there were such Angels of a mans Profession: and I answered yea; as in Agrippa[206] and other, is declared.

Mi: Leaue your folly: Hold thy peace. Haue you not red, that they that cleaue unto God, are made like unto him.

Δ: Yes, forsoth.

Mic: Thow camst hither to lern, and not to dispute. Laudate Dominum in operibus suis.[207]

Δ: The man kneled down, and so went out of sight.

Mi: He hath eaten strength against trubble: He hath eaten nothing: and in eating, he hath eaten all things. The name[208] NA, be praysed in trubbles.

Δ: Now Michael thrust out his right arme, with the sword: and bad the skryer to loke. Then his sword did seame to cleaue in two: and a great fyre, flamed out of it, vehemently. Then he toke a ring out of the flame of his sworde: and gaue it, to Uriel: and sayd, thus:

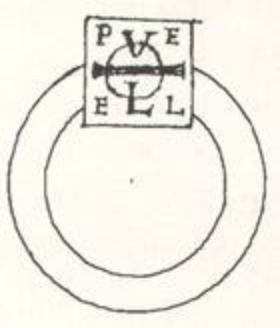
Mic: The strength of God, is unspeakable. Praysed be god for euer and euer.

Δ: Then Uriel did make cursy unto him.

Mi: After this sort, must thy ring be: Note it.

Δ: Then he rose, or disapeared, out of the chayre, and by and by, cam again, and sayde, as followeth.

Mi: I will reveale thee this ring: which was never revealed since the death of Salomon: with whom I was present. I was present with him in strength, and mercy. Lo, this it is. This is it, wherewith all Miracles, and diuine works and wonders were wrowght by Salomon: This is it, which I haue revealed unto thee. This is it, which Philosophie dreameth of. This is it, which the Angels skarse know. This is it, and blessed be his Name: yea, his Name be blessed for euer.



Δ: Then he layd the Ring down uppon the Table: and sayd,

Note.

Δ: It shewed to be a Ring of Gold: with a seale graued in it: and had a rownd thing in the myddle of the seale and a thing like a V, throwgh the top of the circle: and an L, in the bottome: and a barr ————cleane throwgh it: And had these fowre letters in it, PELE.[209]

After that, he threw the ring on the borde, or Table: and it semed to fall throwgh the Table: and then he sayde, thus,

Mi: So shall it do, at thy commaundement.

Without this, thow shalt do nothing.[210] Blessed be his name, that cumpasseth all things: Wonders are in him, and his Name is WONDERFVLL : His Name worketh wonders from generation, to generation.

Δ: Then he went away: and cam-in agayn by and by.

Mi: Note.

Δ: Then he browght-in the Seale, which he shewed the other day: and opened his sworde, and bad the skryer, reade, and he red, EMETH.[211]

Then the sword closed up agayn: and he sayde,

Mi: This I do open unto thee, bycause thow mervayledst at SIGILLVM DEI. This is the Name of the Seale: Which be blessed for euer. This is the seale self. This is Holy: This is pure: This is for euer. Amen.

Δ: Then the seale vanished away. And I sayd to my frende (the Skryer) In dede, this other day, I considered diuerse fashions of the seal: and I fownd them much differing, one from an other: and therfore I had nede to know, which of them I shall imitate: or how to make one perfect of them all.

Mi: Dowt not for the making of it: for God hath perfyted all things. Ask not the cause of my absence, nor of my apparell: for that Mysterie, is known to God. I haue no cloathing, as thow thy self shalt see. I am a Spirit of Truth, and Vertue.[212] Yea you shall see me in Powre, and I will viset you in HOPE. Bless you the Lorde, and follow his wayes, for euer.

Δ: Then he went away: and Uriel followed him. And then I sayde to my skryer: It were good, we had euer some watch-word, when we shold not loke for any more matter at theyr hands, euery tyme of theyr visitting of us. Whereuppon, (unlooked-for, of us,) he spake agayn.

Mi: We lead tyme, Tyme leadeth not us:

Put up thy pen.

The Name of God, be blessed for euer.

Δ: Then they lifted up theyr hands to heuenward (which heven, appeared allso in the stone) and turned toward us, and sayd,

Valete.[213]

Δ: So they departed: and at theyr going, the chayr, and the Table, in the stone, did seme to shake.

Δ: Soli Deo omnis honor Laus et Gloria.[214]

Amen.

Martij 15. Thursday. Hora 1¼ a meridie.

Δ: After E.T. his calling into the stone, appeared a tall man, with a sceptre (very great) of gold, glittring. His body all red: and out of his hed, did shote out beames of light, like the sonne beames.

Δ: Being desirous, to know who he was, and his name, I requested him ernestly thereto. But he answered, as followeth,

Invocate nomen Domini, et agnoscetis eum.[215]

Δ: Then I prayed the psalme, Deus misereatur nostri, et benedicat nobis &c.[216] After that, he sayd,

I am mighty.

Δ: Bycause he delayed to declare his name, E.T. the skryer did require him, in the name of God the father, Jesus Christ his sonne, and of the holy ghost, to express his name: and he answered in speche.

So I will by and by.

Δ: Then he seamed to take from his hed little bright sparcks, like little candells endes: and to stick them abowt the chayre: and he went rownd abowt the chayre: and than he spake, as followeth,

I am mighty, and working wonders: I am SALAMIAN.[217] I rule in the hevens, and beare sway uppon erth in his name, who be blessed for euer. Thow doost dowt at me. I am the servant of God, in his light: I serve him. I say, I serve him, with feare and reverence. My name is SALAMIAN: Mighty in the Sonne, worker of wordly actions, as well internall, as externall: known unto God: whose name I know, and bless for euer.

Δ: Then appeared a big flame of fyre by him in the ayre.

Sal: Thow knowest not, or thow wilt not know, that Mamon, with his servants, are present abowt thee: whose presence doth hinder the presence of the vertues Adonay our comming. Blessed be God, in the highest.

Amen.

Δ: He toke the forsaide flame of fyre, and flung it up unto the heven ward.

Sal: Mamon is a king whome God hateth: whose sect, contynually tempt, provoke and stir-up wickednes, against the Lord, and against his annoynted. But he dyeth: blessed be God for euer. Driue him away.

Δ: It is incomparably more easy for you to do. And as for my parte, I fele neyther in body, nor sowle, any token of his presence or working. Thereuppon he caused the whole chamber (which we were in) to appere very playnely in the stone: and so there shewed a great cumpany of wycked spirits to be in the chamber: and among them, One, most horrible and grisely thretting,[218] and approaching to our heds: and skorning and gnashing at us.

Sala: God determines his mysteries, by Arte and vertue.

Δ: Then he willed me very egerly, to drive them away. And I prayed fervently. And there seamed One to come into the stone, which had very long armes: and he draue them away courragiously: And so they were driuen away. After that presently, cam one into the stone, all white. Salamian reached this white one a Cup. The white man held-up the Cup: and sayd, as followeth,

Lo, this is my name.

God shall bless you. Fear not: your faithfullness provoketh me to tell my name, and this it is:

(putting furth the Cup again) for, I am called Medicina Dei.[219] I will shew thee, and I will shew you, the Angel of your Direction, which is called OCH.[220]

Δ: This name he spake: he shewed it allso on the Table (before him) written.

Raph: He is mighty in the sonne beames: He shall profit thee hereafter.

Δ: Then cam in an other, and sat down in the chayre: and he sayde, as followeth,

The strength of God liueth: and God raigneth for euer. I am Fortitudo Dei.

Δ: Why, then, you are Gabriel: and I toke you hitherto to be Michaël. How shall I then amend my boke, in respect of your name, allwayes before, written Michael?

For.Dei: What thow hast written, that hast thow written: and it is true. Write down this name. POLIPOS.[221] Dost thow understand it?

Δ: No, God knoweth.

For.Dei: When that day commeth, I will speak with thee: yf thow observe that which I haue commaunded thee.[222] As truely, as I was with SALOMON, so truely will I be with thee.

Δ: Then cam in an other, whom we toke to be Uriel: for he went allso, as he was wont, and leaned at the Table.

For.Dei: Search for wisdome and lerning, and the lord will deliuer it unto you.

Δ: I wold to god, I knew your name truely, or what peculier letter I might set for you, to Note your words and Actions by.

For.Dei: Name I haue none, but by my office. SALAMIAN cam not hither, but by me. He is a mighty Prince, governing the hevens, under my powre. This is sufficient for thy Instruction. I was with Salomon, in all his works and wonders: and so was this, whome God had appointed unto him. The Diuines know his name: and he is not hidden from the face of the erth: His name is written in the boke which lyeth in the Wyndow.

Δ: Do you mean Agrippa his boke? And is it there expressed by the name SALAMIAN?[223]

For.Dei: I haue sayde.

Δ: What order will you appoint unto us two, in respect of our two beings to-gither? My frende here, may haue other intents and purposes of his affayres, then will serve me, for his ayde hauing in these Actions.

For.Dei: Joyne in prayers. For God hath blessed you: Dowt not.

Consider these mysteries.

Δ: Then they in the stone used talk to gither: but not well to be discerned of the eare of E.T.

At length F.D. talked very much, and spedily to E.T. and disclosed unto him (which he expressed not to me, at the stone but afterward) all the manner of the practise, and the Circumstance abowt the Action intended, with the Gold lamin, the ring, the seales &c. And after I had spoken somwhat, in requesting him, to shew me the manner, How I shold artificially prepare euery thing spoken of, he sayd,

F.D:

[. . . Use me, in the Name of God, for all occasions.[224] . . .]

Blessed[225] be God, who revealeth all Mysteries, &c. I am strength in nede. And Lo, here is Medicine for the sore. We bless the Lord: We gouern the erth, by the societie of Gabriel: whose powre, is with us: but he not here. &c.

Use Patience.

Ur: I liued with Esdras: I liued in him, in the lord, who liueth for euer.[226]

Raph: I liued with Tobie: Tobie the yonger.[227]

Δ: This was the white creature, that spake this.

F.D: We liue in the Lorde: who be praysed for euer.

Δ: I stode silent a good while.

FD: What wilt thow?

Δ: I did attend, what you wold say.

F.D: I haue sayd.

Δ: I haue byn long at this tyme, in my dealing with you. I trust, I do not offend you therewith. But, for my parte, I could finde in my hart to contynue whole dayes and nights in this manner of doing: euen tyll my body shold be ready to synk down for wearines, before I wold giue ouer. But I feare, I haue caused wearines to my frende here.

F.D: In vertue is no wearines.

Δ: Now he stode up, out of his chayr: and he, and they all, ioinctly blessed us, stretching theyr hands toward us, Crossingly. And so they went away. The Table and the chayre remayned and the glyttring sparckles, or drops of streaming little lightes were of the chayre immediately.

Δ: Glorie, thanks, and honor be unto the Almighty Trinitie.

Amen.[228]

[Mysteriorum Liber Secundus]

. . . mysteryes,[229] . . .

> NOTE. We bring tydings of light* . The Lord is owr . . . you and we prayse to gither. His name be praysed for ever. O . . . in his Mysteries: O holy and eternall God.

Δ: He bowed down to the Chayre and then to the table, and sayd, Benedictus qui venit in,[230] (and there stayed a little) and sayd agayn, Benedictus qui venit in, nomine Domini.[231]

Δ: Than cam in Michael, with a sword in his hand, as he was wont: and I sayd unto him, are you Michael?

Mich: Dowt not: I am he which reioyce in him that reioyceth in the Fortitude and strength of God.[232]

Δ: Is this Forme, for the Great Seale perfect?

Mi: The forme is true and perfect. Thow shalt sweare by the liuing God, the strength of his Mercy, and his Medicinall vertue, powred into mans sowle neuer to disclose these Mysteries.[233]

Δ: Yf No man, by no means, shall perceyue any thing herof, by me, I wold think that I shold not do well.

Mi: Nothing is cut from the Church of God. We in his Saincts are blessed for euer.

We separate thee, from fyled and wycked persons: We move thee to God.

Δ: I vow, as you require: God be my help, and Gwyde, now and euer, amen.

MIC: This is a Mystery, skarse worthy for us ourselues, to know, muche lesse to Reueale. Art thow, then, so Contented?

Δ: I am: God be my strength.

Mic: Blessed art thow among the Saincts: And blessed are you both.

I will pluck thee, from among the wycked [he spake to my skryer.][234] Thow Commyttest Idolatry. But take hede of Temptation: The Lord hath blessed thee. This is a Mystery.

Dee, what woldest thow haue?

Δ: Recte sapere et Intelligere &c.[235]

Mic: Thy Desyre is graunted thee. Use . . .

[Michael: -]:[237] I will shew thee in the mighty hand and strength of God, [what] his Mysteries are: The true Circle of his æternitie Comprehending all vertue: The whole and Sacred Trinitie. Oh, holy be he: Oh, holy be he: Oh, holy be he.

Uriel answered, Amen.

Mic: Now what wilt thow? Δ: I wold full fayne procede according to the matter in hand.

Mic: Diuide the owtward circle into 40 æquall partes: whose greatest numbers are fowre. See thow do it presently.

Δ: I did so. Diuiding it first into fowre: and then every of them into ten. He called Semiel, and one cam in and kneled down: and great fyre cam out of his mowth.[238]

Michael sayde, To him, are the Mysteries of these Tables known.

Michael sayde, Semiel (agayn) and by and by, he[239] said, O God thow hast sayd and thow liuest for euer. Do not think here I speake to him. Δ: He spake that to us, least we might dowte of his last speches, as being spoken to Semiel: which he directed to the æternall god and not to Semiel. Semiel stode up, and flaming fire cam out of his mowth: and than he sayd, as followeth,

Sem: Mighty Lord, what woldest thow with the Tables?

Mic: It is the will of God, Thow fatche them hither.

Sem: I am his Tables.

Behold these are his Tables. Lo where they are.

Δ: There cam-in 40 white Creatures, all in white Sylk long robes and they like chyldern: and all they fallyng on theyr knees sayd, Thow onely art Holy among the highest. O God, Thy Name,[240] be blessed for euer.

Δ: Michael stode up out of his chayre, and by and by, all his leggs semed to be like two great pillers of brass:[241] and he as high as half way to the heven. And by and by, his sword was all on fyre and he stroke, or drew his sworde ouer all theyr 40 heds. The Erth quaked: and the 40 fell down: and Michael called Semiael, with a thundring voyce, and sayd, Declare the Mysteries of the Liuing God, our God, of one that liueth for euer.

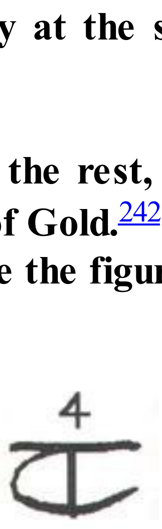
Sem: I am redy. Δ: Michael stroke ouer them, with his sword agayne: and they all fell down, and Uriel allso on his knees. And commonly at the striking with his sword, flamyng fier like lightening did flash with all.

Mi: Note: here is a Mysterie.

Δ: Then stept furth, one of the 40, from the rest, and opened his brest which was couered with Sylk, and there appeared a great T all of Gold.[242]

Mi: Note the Number. Δ: Ouer the T, stode the figure of 4, after this manner:



The 40, all, cryed, Yt liueth and Multiplyeth for euer: blessed be his name.[243]

Δ: That creature did shut up his bosome, and vanished away, like unto a fyre.

Mi: Place that, in the first place. It is the name of the Lorde.[244]

Δ: Than there seamed a great clap of thunder to be. Then stepped (before the rest) one other of the 40, and kneled as the other did before. And a voyce was herd saying, Prayse God, for his name is reuerent.

Michael sayd to me, say after me thus,

Deus Deus Deus noster, benedictus es nunc et semper: Amen.
Deus Deus Deus noster, benedictus es nunc et semper: Amen.
Deus Deus Deus noster, benedictus es nunc et semper: [245] Amen.

Δ: Then this Creature opened his breast, and fyre cam oute of the stone as before and a great romayne G appeared.[246]

Mi: Write with reuerence, These Mysteries are wunderfull, the Number of his name, and knowledge: Lo, this it is, 9. Behold, it is but one, and it is Marveylous.

Δ: Then this Creature vanished away . . . . [247]

Mi: The Seale of Gods Mercy: blessed be thy name.

Δ: It semed to rayne, as thowgh it had rayned fyre from heuen. Then one other of the 40 was browght furth: The rest all fell down and sayd, Lo, thus is God known.

Then he opened his brest, and there appered an n, (not of so big proportion as the other), with the number of 7 over it.[248]

Mi: Multiplicatum est Nomen tuum in terra.[249]

Δ: Then that man vanished away as it were in a golden smoke.

Mi: Thow must not write these things, but with great devotion. He Liueth. Δ: Then cam an other furth. Then all falling down sayde, Vidimus Gloriam tuam Domine.[250] They were prostrate on theyr faces. Then this Creature opened his breast and he had there a Tablet all of Gold (as it were) and there appered a small t uppon it: and the figure of 9 under this letter t.[251]

Mi: Mark it, for this is a Mysterye. Δ: Then that Shewer (of the 40) seamed to fly up into the ayre, like as it were a white garment.

Mi: Illius Gloria sit nobiscum.[252] Δ: All sayd, amen: and fell down.

Δ: Then stode up an other, and opened his bosom, and shewed on his brest bare (being like syluer) a small h;[253] and he pointed to it, and ouer it was the number of 22.

Mi: Et est numerus virtutis benedictus. Videte Angelos Lucis.[254] Δ: This shewer went away like a white Cok flying up.

Δ: There cam an other in, and sayd,

Et sum Finis et non est mihi Numerus. Sum Numerus in numero Et omnis Numerus est mihi Numerus. Videte.[255]

Δ: There appeared a small n[256] on his skyn, being all spotted with Gold. Then he went away like three fyres, red flaming, and coming to gather agayn in the myddst of the firmament.

Δ: You must Note that in the stone the whole world in a manner did seme to appere, heuen, and erth, &c.

Mi: (Δ he cryed with a lowde voyce,) Et est vita in cælis.[257]

Δ: Then stepped furth one and sayd, Et ego viuo cum bene viuentibus, [258] and withall he kneeled down: and Michael stepped furth and toke of his veale on his brest and he made Cursy and stode up.

Mi: Viuamus Halleluyah. O Sanctum Nomen.[259]

Δ: All fell down on theyr faces, and Michael stroke ouer them with his sword and a great flash of fyre: And this man his brest seemed open, that his hart appeared bleading, and therein the letter m,[260] and 6, over it thus Mic: Benedictus est Numerus Agni.[261]

Δ: Hereuppon They all fell down.

Mi: Orate invicem.[262] Δ: Hereuppon we prayed a psalme; my skryer saying one verse, and I the other &c.

Mi: Omnia data sunt a Deo.[263] Δ: Then cam one in, hauing a rownd Tablet in his forhed and a little o[264] in his forhed: and 22 ouer it.

Mi: Et non est finis in illo.

Benedictus es tu Deus.[265] Δ: And then that shewer vanished away: He flew up, like a rownd raynbow knyt togither at the endes.

Mi: Angeli a nomine tuo procident Domine.

Tu es primus O Halleluyah.[266]

Δ: One stode up and the rest fell down, and out of his mowth that stode, cam a sworde: and the point, a Triangle, and in the myddest of it a small a[267] thus , of pure gold, grauen very depe: Et Numerus tuus viuit in cæteris,[268] sayd this shewer. The number was ~~22~~ 20[269] over the a. This shewer went away with great lightening covering all the world.

Mi: Nomen illius est nobiscum.[270] Δ: He stroke agayne with his sword ouer them. Then stode one up: who, uppon his garment had an n: and he turned abowt: and on his back were very many (ens) n.[271]

Mi: Creasti tu Domine Angelos tuos ad Gloriam tuam.[272] Δ: Ouer the ‘n’ was the number of 14, ouer that n (I meane) which was onely on his brest.

Mi: Et te primus Creauit Deus.[273] Δ: Then the shewer flew up like a star. And an other cam in, all his cloth being plucked up: and so seamed naked: He hath a little ‘a’.[274] This ‘a’ did go rownd abowt him, begynning at his feete: and so spirally upward: and he seemed to be all Clay. Ouer the ‘a’ was the number 6.

Mi: Et Creata sunt et pereunt in Nomine tuo.[275] Δ: And therwith this shewer fell down all into dust on the Earth: and his white garment flew up like a white smoke: and allso a white thing did fly out of his body.[276]

Surgit Innocentia ad faciem Dei.[277]

Δ: Michael did ouer them agayn with his sworde, and it seemed to lighten. He began to speak, and he stopped suddenly, and the fyre flew from his mowth.

Mi: Innocentium Nomina, et sanguinem vidisti Domine a Terra, et Iustus es in operibus tuis.[278] Δ: Then cam one in, with a garment all bluddy. He was like a chylde, he had a ball in his hand of perfume which smoked: and he hath uppon his forhed a little 'h'.[279] He bowed to Michaël: and Michael sayd, Numerus tuus est infinitus, et erit finis rerum.[280] Δ: This shewer seemed to powre him self awaye like a flud of blud: and his garment flew upward.

Mi: Non est illi numerus. Omnia pereunt a facie Dei, et a facie Terræ.[281]

Δ: Then stepped one furth, like a water running rownd abowt him, and he cryeth miserably, O benedictum Nomen tuum Domine. Numerus perijt cum illis.[282] Δ: A little 'o' with 18 ouer it, appered.[283]

Δ: This shewer seemed to vanish away, and to cause a great water remayn ouer all.

Mi: Lux manet in tenebris. Gloriosum est Nomen tuum.[284]

Δ: Then stept one furth from the rest, who fell down, as theyr manner was.

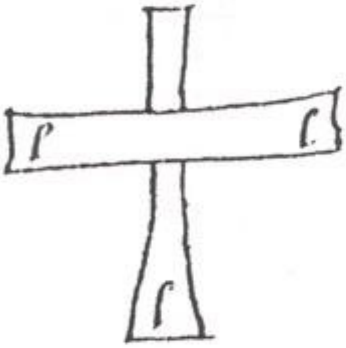
> Δ: Note: All the Cumpanies of these 40, stode five to gither, and five to gither, and so in eight Cumpanyes; each, of fiue.

Δ: This was a very white one: The upper partes of his throate, seemed open and there seemed to cum out of it fyre, in very many and diuerse cullours.

He sayd, Trinus sum.[285]

Mi: Benedictum sit nomen El.[286]

Δ: Than in the myddle of the fyres or smoke semed an '1'[287] thrise placed, on a bluddy cross, and ouer the '1' the number 26.



Δ: This shewer seemed to haue three mens heds and to vanish away in a myst with a thunder.

Mi: Labia mea laudant Dominum.[288]

Δ: Then cam a very fayre yong one in with long heare hanging on her (or his) sholders: and on her belly appered a great scotcheon;[289] to hir, or him, Michael gaue a flame of fyre: and she, or he, did eat it.

Mi: Et hic est El:[290] and so appeared a little '1' on the scotcheon, and it waxed bigger and bigger: and a fyre did seeme to go rownd abowt it.

Mi: Benedicta sit ætas tua:[291] Δ: And there appeared '30' under the 1.

Δ: There cam a great many of little fyers and did seeme to eleuate this yong woman (or child) out of sight.

Michael stroke his sword ouer them agayn, and sayd,

Natus est illa Lux.

Ille est Lux noster.[292]

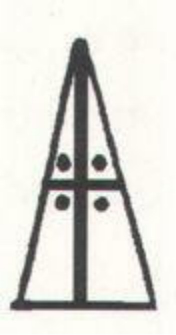
Δ: Then stept out an other and opened his white silk garment uppermost: and under it, he seemed to be sowed up in a white silk cloth. He had in his forhed an ‘n’[293] in his brest an ‘n’ and in his right hand an ‘n’.

Mi: Numerus tuus est benedictus.[294] Δ: They all fell down, saying, Numerus tuus est Nobiscum: Nec adhuc nouimus finem illius Venies cum numero tuo O unus in æternum.[295]

Δ: And they fell all down agayn. This shewer departed clyming up into the ayre, as if he had clymed on a ladder.

Mi: Linguis suis cognouerunt eum.[296]

Δ: All sayd, Benedictus est qui sic et sic est,[297] throwing up into the ayre thre cornerd trenchers[298] of this fashion all of Gold. The one side of the trenchers was thus marked, and the other side had nothing on.



Δ: Then stept one oute: and fyre cam out and in of his mowth. He kneeled, the rest fell down. This seemed a transparent body, and he had in his eyes a small 1:[299] and in his forhed the figure of 8.

Mi: Note this, under. I meane the figure 8. Thus, $\overset{l}{8}$

Δ: All sayd, Et es verus in operibus tuis:[300] and so he vanished away in a flame of fyre.

Mi: Gaudete omnes populi eius, gaudete omnes populi eius, ab hinc Gaudete.[301] Δ: All sayd, Amen.

Δ: One stept furth saying, Incipit virtus nostra,[302] he being covered under his robe, all with armor: and hath a great G[303] on his armor and the figure of ‘7’ ouer it. He went behynde Michael and so vanished away.[304]

Mi: Recte viuite omnes Sancti eius.[305]

Δ: One stept furth: and opening his brest, there appered a boke, and turning ouer the leaves there appeared nothing but a little ‘r’[306] and 13 over it. He went behinde the Chayre and so vanished awaye.

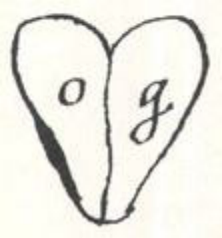
Mi: Hic est Angelus Eccliæ meæ, qui doceat Ille viam meam.[307]

Δ: There stept oute a playn man, and under his garment a gyrdel, and under his gyrdle a Rod: and in his hand he had a Sworde, and in his mowth a flame of fyre: he had a great H[308] uppon his sworde and under it 22. He went behynde the chayre &c. Michael standing up still uppon his leggs, like pillers of brass.

Δ: I axed him yf I shold not cease now, by reason of the folk tarying for us to come to supper.

Mic: Lay away the world. Contynue your work: Coniunxit spiritum mentibus illorum.[309]

Δ: Then stept out one, hauing under his garment a little Chest, and therein a mans hart raw: and the hart was thus with two letters, one on the one side ‘o’ and on the other a ‘g’.[310]



[Δ: As in scotcheons of armes, where the man and his wifes armes ar ioyned perpale, as the heraulds term it.] This shewer shut up the chest and went his way.

Mi: Numerus illius est sine numero.[311]

Δ: Then cam in an other, saying,

Tempus est. Deum vestrum agnoscite.[312]

Δ: This shewer his armes reached down to his feete: he shewed furth his right hand and in it a little ‘t’[313] and 11 under it.

Mi: Stay; place this, in the second place. This went away.

Mi: Ymago tua, (mors,) est amara.[314]

Δ: Then cam one in, with a big belly, and fat cheekes: an half sword perced his hart, and a little ‘y’[315] written on it. Iustus est malis deus noster. [316] Δ: The number of 15 under it.

Mi: Place it in the former place.

Mi: Opera fidelium, Delectatio mea.[317] [Δ: Then cam one in.] Hic est Deus noster.[318] He shewed the letter of o on his naked brest, and the figure of 8 under it. He went away.

Mi: Ecce, Iniquitas regnat in domo mea.[319]

Δ: Then stept one oute very lean, all his body full of little e,[320] and under euery one of them, 21. He went away behynde the chayre.

Mi: Bestia deuoravit populum meum, peribit autem in æternum.[321]

Δ: Then stept out one in bluddy apparell, all his body full of serpents heds and a b[322] on his forhed, and the number of 10 ouer it. He went away.

Mi: Iniquitas Abundat in templo meo, et sancti viuunt cum Iniquis.[323]

Δ: One very lean, hunger sterued cam out, an A on his brest, and, 11 over it, and so went away.

Δ: There cam in another.[324]

Mi: Iniqua est Terra malitijs suis.[325]

Δ: Then cam in one who drew out a bluddy sworde on his brest a great romayn I, and 15 over it. He went his way.

Mi: Angeli eius ministrauerunt sanctis.[326] Δ: Then stept one oute with a Target and a little a on it, and ouer it the number of 8.[327] He went away.

Mi: Regnabit Iniquitas pro tempore.[328] Δ: They all cryed, Halleluyah.

Δ: Then stept one furth with a golden crown, and a great arming sworde: his clothing all of gold, with a letter ‘r’ on his sword and 16 ouer it, and so he went away.

Mi: Nulla regnat virtus super terram.[329] Δ: Then stept one oute, hauing all his body under his white sylken habit (as they all, had) very braue after the fashion of those dayes, with great ruffs, cut hose, a great bellyed dubblet, a veluet hat on his hed, with a feather: and he advanced him self braggingly: He had burnt into his forhed a little n: and Michael sayd, Non est numerus illius in Cælis.[330] Δ: He went awaye.

Mi: Antiquus serpens extulit caput suum deuorans Innocentes.[331] Halleluyah.

Δ: Then cam one who put of his white habit: and he toke a sword, and smote up into the ayre, and it thundred: and he had a seal (suddenly there) very gorgeous of gold and precious stones: he sayd,

Regnum meum. Quis Contradicet?[332]

Δ: He hath proceding out of his mowth, many little (enns,) n, and on his forhed, a great A.

Mi: Non quòd est A, sed quod contradicit A.

Nec portio, nec numerus eius invenitur in cælo.

Habet autem Numerum terrestrem

Mysterium.[333]

Δ: He shewed three figures of ‘6’ set in triangle thus, 6 ^{6} 6

Mi: Vobis est Mysterium hoc, posterius reuelandum.[334]

Δ: And there cam a fyre and consumed him, and his chayre away, suddenly.

Mi: Perturbatur terra iniquitate sua.[335]

This shewer, his garments, white, under: his face as brass: his body grevous with leprosy: hauing uppon his brest an O, with the number of 10 under it: and so departed.[336]

Mi: Surgite O Ministri Dei: Surgite (inquam) Pugnate: Nomen Dei est æternum.[337]

Δ: Then cam two oute to gither: they had two edged swordes in theyr hands, and fyre cam oute of theyr mowthes. One had a G, and 5 ouer it, the other had...

[Δ: We fell to prayer, whereuppon Michael blessed us.]

The other had an h on his sword, and 14 under it: and so they went away.

Mi: Omnis terra tremet ad vocem tubæ illius.[338]

Δ: One stept out, and under his habit had a trumpet. He put it to his mowth, and blew it not. On his forhed a little ‘o’ and 17 under it. He went awaye.

Mi: Serua Deus populum tuum, Serua Deus populum tuum Israel, Serua (inquam) Deus populum tuum Israel.[339] Δ: He cryed this, alowde.

Δ: One appeared with a fyry sword, all bluddy, ~~his vesture all bluddy~~, his vesture all bluddy, and he had s.[340]

Est numerus in numero.[341]Δ: He went away.

Δ: I understand it to be a letter, and the number 5 also.

Mi: So it is.

Δ: There cam one in with diuerse owgly faces, and all his body skabbed.

Mi: Nunc sunt Dies tribulationis:[342] Δ: He had an a on his forhed and the Number 5 under it.

Mi: Hic est Numerus predictus.[343]

> Mi: Audite, consummatum est.[344]. This had a great pot of water in his hand and uppon the pot, grauen, a with 5 under it. He departed in fyre.[345]

Mi: Angele preparato Tubam tuam.[346]

A: Then cam one oute with a Trumpet. ----- Venite Tempus.[347]

Δ: He offered to blow, but blew it not. On the ende of his Trumpet was a little a and 24 under it. He went away.

Δ: They all now seemed to be gon: Michael and all. He cam in agayn and two with him. And he sayd, Hij duo Cælati sunt adhuc.[348] They two went away.

Mi: Vale. Natura habet terminum suum.[349]

Δ: He blessed us and florished his sword towards, and ouer us, and so went away: and Uriel after him: who all this while appeared not.

Δ: After supper Mr. Talbot went up to his chamber to prayers: and Uriel shewed himself unto him: and told him that somwhat was amyss, in the Table or seale which I had byn occupyed abowt this day. And thereuppon, Mr. Talbot cam to me into my study: and requyred the Seale (or Tables) of me: for he was wished to correct somthing therin, (sayd he). I deliuered him the seal, and he browght it agayn within a little tyme after, corrected: both in the numbers, for quantyty and some for place ouer or under: and also in one letter or place omitted. Which I denyed, of any place omitted by me, that was expressed unto me. And the rather I dowted, uppon Michael his words last spoken, uppon two places then remayning yet empty: saying, Hij duo cælati sunt adhuc.[350] But If I had omitted any, there shold more than two haue wanted.[351] Whereuppon we thowght good to ax Judgment and dissoluing of this dowte, by Michael. And comming to the stone He was redy. I prepownded this former Dowte. He answered, Mi: Veritas est sola in DEO. Et hæc omnia vera sunt.[352] You omitted no letter or history that was told you. But the skryer omitted to declare unto you.[353] Δ: May I thus recorde it?

Yt is iustly reformed by Uriel: the one being omitted of the descrier and the other not yet to us declared, might make that phrase meete to be spoken, Hij duo cælati sunt adhuc.[354]

Mi: Thow hast sayd. Δ: I pray you to make-up that one place yet wanting. Then he stode up on his great brasen leggs agayn: He called agayn, Semiæl Semieil. Then he cam, and kneled down.

Consummatum est.[355] Δ: The shewer (a white man) pluckt oute a trumpet, and put it to his mowth, as thowgh he wold blow, but blew not: and there appeared at the ende of the Trumpet the greke ω. There arose a myst, and an horrible Thunder.

Mi: It is done. Δ: Then of the three 6 ^{6} 6 before Noted, with his finger he put oute the two lowermost: and sayd, Iste est numerus suus.[356][357] And Michael did put his finger into the Trumpets ende, and pulled furth a rownd plate of Gold, wheron was the figure of ‘i’ with many circles abowt it, and sayd, Omnia unum es

Δ: The forme of the world which appered before, vanished away: and Semyeil[358] went away, And Michael cam and sat in his chayr agayn: and his brasen leggs wer gone, and uppon our pawsing he sayd,
